LATER.

THE above rumor is a pure invention, having not the slightest foundation in fact.

The cold wave appears to have distributed itself pretty evenly over the province, the thermometer making from five to twenty degrees below zero throughout the country.

Ven Archdeacon Nelles died on Saturday afternoon, aged 79.

Professor Wiggons states that the plane of the orbit of the earth's second satellite passed through Gemini and between Polaris and Cassiopœia It eclipsed the sun in July, 1829, and May 16, 1884. The dark ring of Saturn, which is made up of satellites, is proof that dark satellites exist. He attributes the present cold snap to this satellite being in conjunction with the sun when it is so near the new moon. That's what we thought.

A Woman Makes Poultry Pay.

Farmers do not appreciate chickens at near their full value. I have only a rough-board hen house, twelve by sixteen feet, with strips of clap-boards over the cracks to keep the wind out. A window with a shutter in the south gable end, and a large sliding door in the side facing the east, are the only ventilators. Over one hundred hens were kept in this cheap house last winter, terrible cold as it was, without being frost-bitten. A few hens laid all winter, and a large number began to lay on the first of February. I have a much smaller house close by, where hens lay and set. I find this detached house better for them, and more convenient for me. Both houses are white-washed inside, and have gravel floors. In the sleeping house the roosts are made like ladders, and very slanting to allow the fouls to go up and down easily. Early in the morning I take the setting hens off their nests and feed them before opening the door of the larger house to give the others their liberty. The sitters never stay from their nests over ten or fifteen minutes, and so are soon out of the way of the rest. I have a long row of coops (made by myself), which I keep the hens that have hatched, until the little ones get quite strong.—MRS. POULTRY-KEEPER in American Agriculturist for January.

Cooking Food for Swine.

In cold weather much good is done by feeding hogs heated food. It warms up the body and stimulates the digestive organs to vigorous action. It plays always to warm slops in cold weather. The main reason farmers do not feed more cooked food to their swine, is fancied labor and trouble of preparing it. A good utensil is a large iron kettle, swung upon two poles of sufficiently strong wood. The bail is removed, and a piece of chain, forming a loop a foot long, is passed through each eye of the kettle, and over the respective pole. The poles are placed on forked sticks, set in the ground. The poles should be parallel, and as far apart as are the eyes of the kettle. Place near the kettle a large, light trough, made of two-inch pine boards, which may be situated in a small lot separate from the hogs lot by a fence with a small gate. Old broken fence rails make excellent, cheap fuel; they ignite readily, give a quick, hot fire, and soon die down. When the cooking is done, rake the fire to one side, and bring the trough partially under the kettle on that side from which the fire has been removed. Raise the pole from that side out of the crotches, and let it down. This will tilt the kettle on the edge of the trough, and most of the food will be deposited in it; the balance is easly scooped out with a board or pan. When only one pole is used, it is difficult to get the cooked food into the trough. After the food has cooled sufficiently, open the gate in the fence, and let the hogs in to the feast. Managed in this way, the labor of cooking a kettle of food can be done in five minutes, and the only expense of making the ration is a few pieces of old rails.—J. M. STAHL in American Agriculturist for December.

AGATHA.

Three ladies were seated in Agatha Forester's parlor; Miss Fortescue, large, dark and of uncertain age, who monopolized the most comfortable arm-chair; Mrs. Becker, shrunken and sandy, who was constantly sliding off the sofa and reinstating herself with a jerk, and Miss Agatha herself, who sat apart from the others, glancing uneasily out of the window, as if distressed by their garrulity. Miss Agatha was a fair young woman, with a noble head and a countenance expressive of all grace and goodness. Yet at this moment she entertained feelings decidedly hostile to her callers, who had run in with the familiar freedom of fellow-boarders in a family hotel, to chat away the afternoon. At heart they were immensely sorry that Miss Nannie Foster had not yet returned from a suburb, where she had gone the day before. Miss Nannie, Agatha's cousin, companion and chaperone in one, was far more to their taste; she was more attentive, more easily impressed, more sympathetic, they thought. She never sat looking out of the window when they were retailing their choicest bits of scandal for her especial benefit. But then she was a woman of years. However, they still lingered; it was a pleasant place. The Fosters had the handsomest suite in the building—and furnished with such taste! Such carpets! Such decorative art! And the Fosters were tip-top people. There was four of them, Miss Agatha, her two bachelor brothers, ten and a dozen years her senior, and Miss Nannie, who, since their parents' death, had kept the children together. The winter day drew to a close, the room grew dusky, and still the ladies lingered.

Agatha could endure it no longer; this, of all days, she was without patience. She rose quickly.

"Ladies," she said, with an indignant quiver in her sweet contralto voice, "you must excuse me. I cannot listen to such coversation!"

There was silence a moment; then Miss Fortescue lifted her cumbrous frame. "Oh, certainly. I quite understand. We will withdraw. We do not wish to offend."

"Oh, certainly," faintly echoed Mrs. Becker, sliding from the sofa for the last time and preparing to follow.

Agatha's impatience only increased.

"And allow me to say," she exclaimed, with no compunction, "that I think ladies might be better employed than with their neighbors' affairs."

"Good afternoon," said Miss Fortescue savagely.

"Good afternoon," sneered Mrs. Becker.

"Good riddance!" cried Agatha sharply ere the door had closed.

"To-day of all days," she said, as she walked to and fro in the dusk. Presently the door opened.

"All in the dark, Agatha?" asked a cheery voice.

"I thought you would never come, Nannie," was the swift, unnerved reply. Then she lit the gas.

"Why, what is the matter, my dear?"

"I have just put Miss Fortescue and Mrs. Becker out of the room, and it—it has annoyed me."

"Dear me! What had they done?"

"The same old sickening gossip. Miss Bruce flirts on the street; Mr. and Mrs. Brown have shown no marriage certificate; Mrs. Gray holds her step-child to the furnace to burn it, and so on and so on."

"They get their ideas from the morning papers," said Nannie calmly, unclasping her fur lined circular. "The stepmother holding the child to the fire is a favorite paragraph when news is scarce. Sometimes she heats the flat-iron. For my part, I would never go to that trouble."

But Agatha could not respond to her staid humor. She helped put away the wraps, and inquired after the suburban friends.

"You look pale; aren't you well?" asked Miss Nannie when they were seated.

The girl dropped her eyes. "Nannie, I have some news for you," she said with an effort. "I—last night—I promised Mr. Peters—to—to marry him." Then she sighed as if relieved of a great burden.

The room was still, utterly still. If Miss Nannie were surprised or shocked she gave no token. She only sat quietly looking at the girl and taking time to collect her thoughts. Agatha never lifted her eyes until, after some moments, her cousin cleared her throat and tranquilly inquired: "Well, dear, are you satisfied that you will be happy?"

Then the girl rose and threw herself upon the sofa. "O, Nannie, I don't know; I can't tell."

More silence. Then Miss Nannie asked if she had told the boys?

To these women George and Lewis would be "the boys" as long as they lived.

"I told George at noon," replied Agatha in a voice heavy with tears. "Lewis was not here. I wish you would tell him."

"And what did George say?"

"He only said, 'I congratulate Peters.'"

Miss Nannie leaned back in the chair and meditated, bringing Peters up for a mental review. Poor little whiffet! To be sure, he had money, some social standing and a fair education. They had known him a long, long time, and even felt for him a sort of distant relatives' affection. They would do anything in the world for him. He often took Agatha about, to places of amusement, to church, or riding. But he was at least fifteen years her senior, and they had never dreamed of his aspiring to marry her. His appearance was pitifully against him. Miss Nannie reviewed his bad build, his bowed legs, his 'wild eye,' as she called it, a suspicious eye that seemed to skirmish about the room while its mate regarded you with steadfast respect. Then she turned her thoughts to Agatha—Agatha, perfect in face and figure and ennobled by education and advantages—Agatha, for whom a Senator had proposed and a Congressman languished, to say nothing of her lesser adorers—Agatha, who had rejected the Senator because he lacked principle, and the Congressman because he was a widower.

Nannie remembered that the girl had suffered and shed tears over refusing these and others. She had a curious disposition, as the boys had said.

At length Nannie roused and spoke. "I will tell Lewis; and now, dear, you had better dress; it is near dinner-time. A little Florida-water will cool your cheeks"—

"Hark!" cried Agatha, "there he is now—gone into his room."

Nannie recognized the clumsy step. Lewis has never yet come up those steps without tripping at the top; the rushing, impetuous way of his boyhood would always cling to him.

"I am going at once to tell him, before George comes," said Nannie, rising.

"Yes, do," sighed Agatha. And when her cousin had gone out across the corridor, and her tap had been welcomed by a careless "Come in!" the young girl stole after and listened at the crack of her brother's door.

"Lewis, I have news for you," said Nannie gently, and there was a hidden sob in her fond voice. "Agatha has promised...to marry Mr. Peters."

"O Lord!" cried Lewis in open-mouthed disgust.

Agatha crept away from the door; her face was burning and her heart beat hard.

But Miss Nannie remained awhile in her cousin's chamber.

"Lewis," she said quietly. "I suppose we all feel the same over this—matter? Agatha says when she told George he remarked that he 'congratulated Peters.'"

"Well, this is too bad," said Lewis indignantly. "It is a shame if a girl with her face and brains can't do better. She is altogether too soft-hearted. She would have married all the men who ever proposed, if we had let her, and out of sheer pity, not because she cared for them. That is why she accepted Peters; couldn't bear to hurt his feelings—didn't want his strait eye to suffuse with tears! We must do something to prevent."

Nannie smiled deprecatingly: "We must be very careful. Agatha has a curious disposition, and if she thought we were all against him, she would pity him the more."

"If there were only some way to dispose of him," exclaimed Lewis grimly; "If we could send him out with the next Arctic exposition"—

Nannie rose. "You will be very careful what you say, Lewis?"

"Oh, of course."

She lingered at the door. "Agatha has not a forceless nature by any means," she said; "she can get angry if she cares to. She tells me she put Miss Fortescue and Mrs. Becker out of our parlor to-day, because of their vile gossip. I have no doubt she did."

"Humph!"

Agatha came down to dinner with her face composed and her manner gracious as ever. Her inward defiance was not outwardly manifest. Of her family, George was a shade more dignified than usual; and Lewis appeared annoyed, while Nannie put on a regretful look and occasionally sighed. When they left the dining-room Agatha swept haughtily by the table at which sat the Fortescue and the Becker. She was done with the twain, and intended they should see it.

Up in their own parlor, George sat down by his sister. "Agatha," he said slowly and with an evident dislike to the subject, "do you think you did well to engage yourself to Mr. Peters before consulting your family?"

"I was of age three years ago," she said, regarding him with calm dignity.

"Yes, yes, of course. But there is such a thing as advice. Mr. Peters is our good friend, but is he a suitable husband for you?"

"What is there against him?" she asked, unflinchingly. She was not blind to her lover's bodily imperfections. She had lain awake all night, mentally endeavoring to straighten his crooked limbs, and control his recreant orb. But with daylight they dawned upon her as uncompromising as ever.

But George would not stoop to personalities. "Nothing," he answered quietly. "Only we have looked very high for you. We want you to be happy."

"Then do not speak against Mr. Peters," she said in a way that seemed to dismiss the subject.

George betook himself to his own room and Lewis took his place by Agatha. "I suppose I am to congratulate," he said with a careless disregard of Nannie's injunctions.

"You do not seem very enthusiastic," responded his sister calmly, recalling his secretly-heard exclamation upon first hearing the news.

"I can't help it if I don't," he answered half-impatiently. "You know how proud we are of you, Gath, and we can't be expected to think any man good enough."

She smiled.

He went on recklessly: "I don't believe you knew what you were doing. You don't love Peters, you only pity him just as you used to pity the Senator and all the rest. This crooked little curmudgeon! Why, he is older than George, and cross-eyed"—

She sprang up in a rage: "Lewis, you have said quite enough. Never speak so again to me; I forbid it!"

Then she sought her own chamber and threw herself upon the bed.

Nannie came to her after awhile. "My poor darling! Why are you feeling so bad?"

"Lewis has been saying such awful things!"

"And are you quite sure you have made no mistake?"

"Quite sure."

She rose and arranged her toilet; Mr. Peters was to come that evening.

He arrived early. Nannie endeavored to be gracious, but soon excused herself, leaving Agatha to her lover, the boys having gone out. And Agatha, with Lewis' cruel criticism still ringing in her ears, felt as if in a dream. Fortunately Peters made no inquiries as to her brothers' opinion of the marriage. Miss Nannie had congratulated him as though all were satisfactory.

Agatht accepted his adoration quite passively, and, at last, when he was gone, retired to her room to pity him and weep for him, and tell herself how much she loved him.

But as the winter slipped away the engagement was announced, and having remained unbroken, Agatha's brothers began to feel resigned.

The quiet, intense devotion of Norman Peters was touching. He worshipped his betrothed; to him she was a very goddess.

"If," thought Nannie, with a softened regret, "if he were only a half-inch taller, to be of even height with Agatha!"

Meanwhile poor Agatha was fretting herself to death. A thousand little heartless sarcasms and glances of ridicule, to which Peters, in his great happiness, was utterly oblivious, were constantly stabbing her. Night after night she passed in wakeful agony, the idea of breaking the engagement never once occuring to her. She was sure she loved him, and she realized the depth of his devotion. She endeavored to rise above morbid sensitiveness, telling herself that people would cease their cruel ways when they saw that she was determined to stand by him. But she grew thin, and her face wore a hunted expression. Mesdames Becker and Fortescue now began to circulate pretty little stories about her—ingeniously constructed but untruthful romance.

Nothing very bad, for Agatha was a woman to whom no doubtful mist could cling for a moment; but whispers of "coquetry," "blighted hopes," "girlish folly" and "last resort," which, blown from lip to lip on the dubious breath of friendship, came at last to vex the ears of the Fosters. Agatha only grew more pale. Stormy Lewis, however, one day confronted Miss Fortescue in the hall before his sister's room.

"I can tell you, madame, that you must discontinue your talk of my sister," he cried angrily.

Agatha came out. "Oh Lewis, dear."

He took her by the arm. "Go back, Gath. I've a matter to settle with this lady. She knows what mischief she has been trying to work, and I intend the talk shall cease, or I will take measures she may not admire."

Without a word Miss Fortescue turned and fled.

"I was sorry for her," said Agatha, "she looked so guilty and helpless."

"I declare I haven't much patience with you," exclaimed her brother, "to think that you would defend her, and she every day assailing your good name. But all your ways of late are provoking. You are going to marry a man you don't love because you pity him. For God's sake, why didn't you pity some one suitable"—

She trembled with excitement and passion.

"Lewis, if you have the least particle of love or respect for me, you will never speak so again. I do love Norman, and it would kill me if anything should break the engagement!"

Lewis quit her presence quite crestfallen.

The days slipped by. There had been no date fixed for the wedding, nor was the subject discussed by the family.

None but Nannie knew the terrible tremor in which the girl existed. She was ever moving about, her hands constantly occupied. Day after day, rain or shine, the two women were out of doors. They had always an errand, usually one of mercy. Nannie, however disinclined, would have felt it a sin to oppose, and so Agatha dragged her off through the flitting sunshine, the moodiness, the chill or storm of the springtime, until one last morning.

It had been raining for three days, and so steadily that the sidewalk flags were cleaned and whitened.

Agatha said they would not be hampered with a carriage, and they took a car for a mile or so, alighting to walk a few squares or so to another line. The storm had abated, and the rain was but a listless drizzle.

Agatha slipped and slid once, and Nannie gave a frightened exclamation.

"My overshoes are useless," said the girl carelessly. "I must soon have another pair. I have a good deal of shopping to do soon."

"Your outfit"—ventured Nannie, and stopped.

Agatha sighed but her sigh was lost in the noise of the street.

A poor little yellow dog limped out from under a passing vehicle, holding up one paw and yelping pitifully.

"Oh, see!" cried Agatha, with her eyes wet. "Poor, poor doggy! I am so sorry!"

The yelps died away in the distance, and the ladies went on.

A blind man, crying, "Cough lozenges!" upon the corner detained them for a moment.

In the next block an old building had been torn away to give place to a new one. Careless workmen had left the side walk unguarded in one place, a step from which would have landed one in a deep cellar, where lay a number of loose foundation stones.

Just as they had reached this spot they were brought to a sudden halt by loud cries and confusion. Down the street and directly toward them, came a runaway team dragging a splendid carriage.

Agatha took an irresolute step forward, and then sprang back as the horses dashed up against the sidewalk.

The women were thus separated, and in a second Nannie was reaching forward, cold with horror.

"Agatha!" she cried, but too late. The girl had lost her balance, and had fallen backward from the unguarded sidewalk down into the deep cellar, and there lay upon the stones limp and unconscious.

She would live, sadly crippled and helpless; the spine had been injured and one hip dislocated. So said the best of surgeons. She would henceforth require all care and tenderness.

"Thank God, she is not poor!" cried Nannie. As for the boys, George was completely crushed, and Lewis paced the floor for hours, crying for "his poor, poor, sister!"

Agatha insisted upon hearing the worst, and, when it was made known was very silent. By-and-by Nannie could see great tears trembling under the long, dark eyelashes.

"I would not mind," faltered the sufferer, "but for him. Who will love and care for him now?"

Then she asked that he be sent for at once. When he arrived, Nannie and the boys were in the room, but they withdrew to the window. Peters' face was pale as Agatha's own.

"Norman dear," she said without preface, "I am a cripple for life. I may never walk again. I sent for you—to give you back your freedom."

A frightened expression overspread his countenance; his lip quivered, and he sank on his knees by the bed and buried his face.

"Agatha, darling!" he cried with real pathos, "don't, don't cast me off! You are a thousand times dearer to me now. All I ask is the right to care for you"—his voice broke, and he fell to weeping.

By the window three persons heard it all. They looked in silence at each other, then Lewis strode swiftly across the room.

"Peters," he said, "we havn't done right by you. I, myself, have acted despicably. But if you will forgive and forget, it will be very different in the future."

Then Peters, who had risen, stood silent and bewildered till, through the mist, the room grew suddenly bright, for they had encircled him and were clasping his hands with loving warmth.

And as Agatha lay watching she raised a feeble hand to stay the tears that coursed her cheeks.

"I never thought:" she sobbed aloud, "I never dreamed I could be made so happy!"

The Sponge.

To understand this subject you must have a sponge before you. You will see that it is of a brownish color, is soft and will absorb water very readily. It is made up of fine fibres which easily bend and are very elastic, or will spring back when pressed, and is pierced with many holes or pores. These fishes are made of three different substances—silex, which is an earth of which flint is formed, lime and a horny substance, (horn is composed of glue, phosphate of lime and albumen). The home of the sponge is the ocean, but it grows to its greatest perfection in the tropical waters. It originates from the mother sponge, and first appears as a pear-shaped jelly-like body about as large as a small pea. This is called a gemmule, from gemma, a bud; it looks very much like a drop of the white of an egg, without head, feet, arms, eyes or ears. This young sponge floats about for three days; it moves by means of a large number of fine threads, called cilia, which cover its body; these are whirled about rapidly, making quite a commotion in the water, and with the roundest part of the body foremost off the little thing goes. These cilia are not used to produce motion wholly, but by them the food is drawn into the body. After about three days it becomes tired of wandering and prepares to settle down upon some shell or rock, from which it never moves. The narrow end is attached to the substance they have found. Their cilia continue to move for some hours after it becomes fixed, but then they grow quiet and lay down flat on the rock and quietly suck in their food. After a short time dark spots are seen in the sponge; these are the sponge fibres beginning to grow in the live jelly and are what the cilia have drawn into the body out of the sea water. These little spots of sponge soon grow together and form a sort of framework for the live jelly to rest on, and as this frame grows the jelly grows too, and fills up the tubes and pores in the sponge.

After the sponge has grown to a pretty good size a great many fine spikes are seen to shoot out of the side of the sponge tubes; it is thought that these are to prevent the weight of the growing spong from pressing too heavily upon the jelly As the sponge grows on the rocks it throws up many round heads with large holes in them. The water from which the sponge obtains its nourishment is sucked in through the little holes or pores in the sides, and after running through the whole structure, is thrown out through these large holes with considerable force.

Sponges grow in many different forms. Some grow like shrubs, some like tubes, vases and trumpets. In some parts of the Pacific Ocean it grows like the most beautiful branches of trees.

They are fastened so securely to the rocks upon which they grow that the most furious dashings hardly ever tear them off.

It is not generally known that the custom of keeping birthdays is many thousand years old. It is recorded in the fortieth chapter of Genesis, twentieth verse: "And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's birthday, that he made a feast unto all his servants."

Bushrah is the name of a noble fortress in Syria, once a great stronghold, but now abandoned, but occupied only by roving bands of Arabs. It contains within its enclosure a great theatre, portions of which are still perfect, and which dates, without doubt, from Roman times.

It may be of interest to those who make the subject a study, to know that there are only five genuine signatures of Shakespeare known to be in existence. One is in the London Library, the other in the British Museum, one attached to his will at Doctor's Commons, and two in possession of private collectors.

In President Lincoln's last inaugural address occurs the following instance of involuntary rhyme:

> Fondly do we hope,

> That it continue until—

And here the rhyme ceases. Cicero's prose shows, in places, similar instances of involuntary rhyme.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. D I X O N & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh—[illegible]

So-called respectable people would hesitate considerable before pilfering your pockets in a crowded thoroughfare. That would be too too. The same discrimination is not indicated by the well called respectable druggist when the wonderful corn cure, PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR, is asked for. He will pilfer your pockets in the most gentlemanly manner by substituting cheap and dangerous substitutes for the genuine Putnam's Corn Extractor. The Raw Cutting Winds.

Of winter bring to the surface every latent pain. It is one of the strange things associated with our physical well being that the very air, without which we could not exist, is heavily laden with the germs of disease. Rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, and, other complaints of a similar character hold revel at this season of the year amongst human nerves and human muscles. There was a time when fortitude alone could make life tolerable, but now with the advent of powerful, penetrating and nerve soothing remedies it becomes a thing of a moment. The best of the most powerful and most certain cure is Polson's NERVILINE. Nothing equals Nerviline for penetrating power. Nerviline is beyond comparison the greatest discovery for the relief of pain offered to the public. Druggists sell a sample bottle for 10 cents; large bottles only 25 cents at any drug store.

SAVED BY A KNOCK AT THE DOOR.

The Timely Discovery of a Son's Plot—One Designs Against his Mother.

George Jones is a desperate character of Scriba, N. Y. Last week he quarrelled with his mother, an industrious and hard-working woman, because she told him that she would not work to keep him in money any longer. Having an errand at a neighbor's, she went out of the house. She was absent half an hour. When she returned her son had gone away. Mrs. Jones is very near-sighted. She went out to begin work at a clothes rinsing. She heard kitchenware in a knock at the door, and called her away. A neighbor's child had come in to borrow some soap for her mother. While Mrs. Jones was getting ready for her the child noticed a string running from the handle of the clothes wringer over a beam directly over the wringer. The string ran straight down from the beams and was tied to the muzzles of a double-barrelled shotgun. The little girl called Mrs. Jones's attention to it. Knowing that something must be wrong, Mrs. Jones called a man who was working near. He climbed on a chair and carefully took down the gun. Both barrels were loaded, and the hammers at full cock. The string which led from the handle of the wringer was fastened to the triggers. The slightest movement of the handle would have discharged the gun, and the contents of both barrels would have lodged in the left side of body of any one who stood beneath.

Mrs. Jones suspected that her son had set this deadly trap for the purpose of killing her, but she said nothing about her suspicions. At noon her son came home. He looked surprised at seeing her. She was getting dinner for him. He was up to her and exclaiming. "D—n you, are you alive yet?" knocked her down and kicked and beat her as she struggled about the floor. Her cries summoned passers-by. Her son fled. She made a complaint against him, and he has been arrested and held to answer a charge of attempting to murder.

Milk.

Milk has been a common carrier of disease. Cows eating the Rhus toxicodron get, writes Dr, Newsholme in Hygiene, the "trembles," and their milk produces serious gastric irritation in young children. The milk of goats fed on the herbs or spurgeworts has produced severe disorders. The milk of animals suffering from foot-and-mouth disease, although frequently drunk with impunity, occasionally produces inflammation of the mouth—apthous ulceration. The milk derived from cows fed on grass from sewerage farms, is, per se, as wholesome as any other, and its butter has no more tendency to become putrid than that derived from any other source. The great danger in respect to milk is of its becoming mixed with tainted water, or of absorbing foul odors, or the more dangerous but possibly less perceptible emanations from drains or sewers, when exposed in an ill-ventilated room. The absorptive power of milk for any vapour in its neighborhood is shown by exposing it in an atmosphere containing a trace of carbolic acid vapour; the milk speedily tastes of the acid. In addition to its absorptive power for any vapour present, milk tends to undergo rapid fermentative changes, especially in warm weather, when tainted by traces of putrefying animal matter. Diarrhœa in children is frequently due to such a condition, or to the rapid decomposition of milk in an imperfectly-cleaned bottle. It is a wise precaution always to boil milk in warm weather: and it should never be stored in ill-ventilated larders, or where there is possibility of the access of sewer-gases, nor ought it to be kept in lead or zinc vessels.

Newspapers.

Here, now we have it—the newspaper! Wonderful product of brain and toil! One would think that it should be dear, bought and highly prized, and yet it is the cheapest thing in the world. One or five cents will buy it; one to two dollars will bring it to your home every week in the year. And yet, strange to say, there are men "too poor" to take a newspaper. They can pay five cents for a glass of beer, or ten cents for a beverage of unknown composition, called a "cocktail;" they can pay a half a dollar for a circus ticket, or twenty-five cents for the theatre, but they are too poor to buy a newspaper, which is a ticket of admission to the great "Globe theater," whose dramas are written by God himself, whose curtains are rung down by Death. It is not necessary to speak of might responsibilities which necessarily attach to the control of such a power in the land as the newspaper is to day, nor to say that the editor who rightly apprehends the importance of his work must bring to it a reverent spirit and constant care. The humblest sheet in the land goes into some homes as the only authoritative messenger from the great world outside; its opinions are accepted as truth, and its suggestions have the force of law. The editor stands on the widest pulpit known in modern society. The lawyer has a narrow sphere before him; the senator and representative—the walls hedge in their voices; the minister has the parish walls about his church. But there is a church that has no limit—it is the press. It is literally the voice of one that cries in the wilderness; for all across the populous land the papers speak; and there is not in modern civilization a place of power that we compare with this. Rev. DeWitt Talmage once said: "In the clanking of the printing press, as the sheets fly out, I hear the voice of the Lord Almighty proclaiming to all the dead nations of the earth: 'Lazarus, come forth!' and to the prevailing surges in the darkness; 'Let there be light!'"

An old maid in Nashville keeps a parrot which swears, and a monkey which chews tobacco. She says between the two she doesn't miss a husband very much.

At the theatre: Indigant old gentleman to young lady who has been jabbering at the top of her voice—"This talking is abominable. Nobody can hear a word." Young Lady—"That's just what I was telling Miss Smith, here. Those actors keep up such a racket on the stage you can't hear yourself speak."

"You've got my seat, sir," said a man on a Texas railroad who had left his seat for a moment. "There is nothing to show that you have retained this seat." "Look up there ! There is my hat box on the rack right over this seat." "Well, then you sit up there on your seat if that's where you have retained your seat."

"It is all very well to be thankful to-day for those who feel that way, but for my part I can't see it," says the turkey. "Here, too," says the chicken. "It don't matter to me," says the goose, "for I'm old and tough, and though they may kill they can't eat me." "Shake," says the duck, "for I'm kindertough myself."

Economy: Customer—"I left a pair of shoes here this morning. I wanted the heels taken off." Shoemaker—"All ready, sir." Customer—"How much ?" Shoemaker—"Oh, I shan't charge you anything for that ; only a small job, you know." Customer—"Thanks; but where are the heels? I'll take them, please; they may be of some use, you know, to you, if not to me."

"Where were you when the first shot was fired in this row?" the magistrate asked the policeman who made the complaint. "Right on the spot—right in the crowd,' the officer replied, proudly. "And where were you when the second shot was fired?' And with blushing reserve the officer modestly admitted: "Three blocks down the street, under the stone bridge, at the end of the culvert."

Trouble Ahead.

The Austrian Empire, which in the past had a silver currency, but more lately an irredeemable paper currency, is about to resume specie payments upon a gold basis. To do this the Empire will be in the market to purchase $250,000,000 of gold. The Kingdom of Greece also, which belonged to the bi-Metallic Latin Union, has also announced its intention of becoming a gold nation, and will require $40,000,000 of gold to do so as the first step. According to the bi-metallists the action of Austria and Greece will add to the prevailing commercial distress ; for it will augment the purchasing value of gold which will show itself by the reduced price of everything produced by human labour. With gold and silver used concurrently prices would be kept in equilibrium ; but, if one of the meney metals was discarded, of course values as expressed by the favored metal would in time be diminished one half. The scramble for gold among the nations is, according to this theory, the cause of the depression in all the markets of the world. It is believed that next year will see literally millions of working people thrown out of employment in Europe and America. According to the report of Mr. Burchard, Superintendent of the Mint, while this extra demand is being made on gold its production from the mines is steadily falling off. In 1883 the production was $94,000,000, while in 1882 it was $98,600,000, and in 1881, $103,020,000. The silver output of the world, however, is increasing. In 1881 it was over $102,000,000, in 1882 nearly $110,000,000 and in 1883 over $114,000,000.

An Able Shark Yarn.

Capt. Beckett of the British ship Amana, now in port, has a shark story which merits a place in nautical literature, because it bears the imprint of reliability, and can be proved by the affidavits of Capt. Beckett and of every member of his crew. When his ship was off Montevideo she was becalmed for several hours. A shark with five little ones swam around the ship all day. So soon as there was commotion on the water the mother would open her mouth, and the little ones would dart inside for protection. For amusement the sailors threw bits of refuse overboard among the family, disturbing the water, each time with the same result. The young quintlet immediately disappeared down the capacious countenance of their protector. On the following morning a shark hook and line, baited with pork, was thrown over board, and in a short time a shark was hauled on deck. Upon being opened it was discovered to be the very same fish which had amused the boys the day before, because five young sharks were safely stored away under her tongue.—[Portland Oregonian.

Gambled into Slavery.

There are ten kinds of legalized gambling in Siam, and so absorbed do the Siamese become in gaming that when their money and personal effects are gone they will stake their own bodies on the turn of the game, going into voluntary slavery if they lose. In this event before he is permitted to leave the place. the gambler must surrender himself, in fee simple to his owner, who procures from the Amphor (District Judge) a san kromatan (deed) in which, among other stipulations, he binds himself to render such services as may be required until the pecuniary obligation is discharged. The owner may also extract interest on the amount of indebtedness at the rate of fifteen per cent. per annum, but no more, as this is the highest rate of interest the King permits his subjects to charge. If a greater sum is demanded, and the fact can be established by acceptable testimony in a native court, the debt is cancelled and the slave becomes free. If for any reason he becomes dissatisfied with his owner, or master, which is often the case, he may secure another one by transferring the deed without asking the consent of the owner, provided the redemption or "taking over" (as the Siamese express the transaction) is made in pursuance of law. If he can prove to the satisfaction of the District Judge that his wife possesses the requisite amount, he may apply to the court for an order compelling her to pay the debt and thus redeem him from servitude ; but, in-asmuch as the government is not supposed to encourage gambling with a wife's money, the law requires that the assignment of the san kromatan shall be made to the wife ; so that, when possessed of this formidable document, with the official seal duly attached, she becomes the absolute and bona fide owner of her husband by an indisputable title which nothing but a royal decree can possibly annual.

French Holiday Presents.

During the last ten years the custom of making presents during the holidays, has been so abused, that thousands anticipate Christmas with beating hearts. Even those who dare not disobey the fashion speak of it as "one grand farce." It is, however, to Paris that one should go, if he wishes to see the tyranny of the "Christmas-box."

The reign of the despot begins a week before the New Year and lasts until the middle of January. The first attack is made by the postman, who is closely followed by the water, wood and coal carriers.

Then come the street-sweeper, the lamp-lighter, the baker, butcher, grocer, fish-woman, shoe-maker, tailor, hatter, and glove-man. Each salutes his victim in the finest phrases. They are very polite on these days of visitation—and receive from two to five francs.

At the cafe, on the tray from which the cup of chocolate is taken, lies an orange, a box of bonbons and a cigar tied up with tricolored ribbon. The waiter smiles and the victim, also smiling pockets one of the presents and lays a five-franc piece in its place.

The walker on the Boulevards is hailed by the women who keep the little stalls with, "Give me a present, my dear monsieur!" The gamin picks the gentleman's handkerchief out of his pocket, in order that he may restore it and ask for a "present."

The porter of the house in which the gentleman has rooms must be liberally feed, or during the year the lodger's letters will be lost, his friends will be told that he is not at home when he is expecting them, and those whom he does not wish to see will be shown into his apartment.

If he makes a social call, he must take a present for the lady of the house, and for the children. The ordinary present consists of a box of bonbons. Fashion requires that these should be bought of certain famous confectioners, though just as good bonbons may be purchased at a hundred shops, at a quarter of the price.

These famous confectioners inscribe their names on the pretty boxes and bags —which cost no trifle—so that the lady and the children know where your present was purchased.

Some of the ladies receive scores of such boxes or bags. A smile and a word of thanks reward the giver, and when he has departed, his present is handed over to the maid or footman.

The servants eat the bonbons and re sell the boxes to dealers, who do a paying business by furnishing people with second-hand boxes or bags stamped with the name of a fashionable confectioner. One lady, it is said, received the same box four times in as many years.

A witty Frenchman, annoyed by the tyrannical custom, announced his purpose to revere the method. Accordingly on New Year's Day he presented himself to the proprietor of the cafe which he frequented and claimed a present for having been a daily customer for twelve months.

Proper Food Indispensable to Health.

Good, healthy food that will give strength to the blood is the best preventive of disease that can be provided. It furnishes the system with the resistive power necessary to ward off disease. On the other hand, food defective in quality or quantity leaves the blood impoverished and the system open to the attack of various forms of epidemic. Thus the potato rot in Ireland, which produced a famine, was attended by low fevers, evidently superinduced by the lack of proper food. And cholera, typhoid fever, diphtheria, and other diseases rapidly spread where the people are reduced in strength by improper food. And when to this is added filth and overcrowding all the conditions for an epidemic exist.

Christmas Customs.

Christmas is a festival that seems to be more particularly the property of children than any other; not that everybody does not join in the celebration with all their hearts, but that children, in honor perhaps of Him who became a child, are given the chief part in its pleasures.

In Cornwall, on Christmas eve, the children are allowed to sit up till midnight, and to have a taste of cider, too; and in Devonshire they go, with their father and all the family and friends, out into the orchard with cider and a cake, placing the latter in the crotch of one of the branches, and throwing the other over the tree. This is evidently the relic of an old Pagan rite, bearing every appearance of the ancient sacrifice, a sacrifice to propitiate the tree to continue its fruitfulness, although why it should be offered on Christmas eve is not explained.

Indeed, there are many heathen customs that have been grafted upon our way of keeping Christmas. This will be understood when it is remembered that the early Christian fathers found it hard to keep their flocks from joining in the Pagan ceremonies at times of good feeling and jollity. They therefore wisely made their own ceremonies conform to the same occasion, so that if their people must celebrate, they could be celebrating Christian facts. Thus the old Roman Saturnalia, a time of great merry making, to speak mildly, coming at this season of the year, the early fathers thought best to harmonize it with their Christmas festivities.

From the Saturnalia are descended the "Mummers," a band of people who go about in masks, in England, and enact some rude play before the doors. Whatever this play was in the days of the Saturnalia, in the Christian days it has usually been the story of St. George and the Dragon—old Father Christmas, crowned with holly and carrying a wassail bowl, introducing St. George, a Turkish knight, a huge scaly dragon, and a doctor to bind up the wounds; to all of whom the children at the window are delighted to throw their half-pennies.

Again in Great Baitain the priest of the new religion borrowed from the Druids, for their Christmas use, the observance of the winter solstice with great solemnity, and allowed also some of the customs of the ancient Saxons to be absorbed. Thus from the Druids we have the misletoe, and from the Saxons the Yule log.

There is a cheer and general hospitality about the Yule log which it warms one to think of. In the places where such a thing is really burned, when it is cut and dragged along to be placed on the hearth, and lighted from the embers of last year's log, put away for that purpose, every wayfarer raises his hat to it as it goes along, it means so much.

From what the "Waits," another accompaniment of Christmas, dear to English children, have descended is not certainly ascertained; but there was a company of "Waits" as early as the year 1400, and it is understood that they were then strolling players on hautboys and other wind instruments; and that is all they are to-day.

The one purely Christian observance in all these glad, gay ceremonies is the "Carols." The singers have a picturesqueness as the glimmer of their lanterns illumines them by fits and starts in the darkness on the snow, and their voices have a sweetnese half stolen from their songs. The "Carols" are sung now all over the European continent, and in England usually by a portion of the church choir on Christmas eves, and often on Christmas mornings, by certain of the children of the parish. In the early ages the bishops sang them among their clergy.

In all these things children have their share, being the principal ones to enjoy them; while with the "Mummers" a little girl goes, having no other part than that of carrying a branch of Christmas green. The Christmas tree, which is the most positive feature of children's Christmas nowadays, was not much known, if at all, among the English speaking children till after the good Prince Albert came to England.

The very fact that Christmas means a rite celebrating the day of Christ's birth gives children an especial claim upon the day which belongs to the Holy Child, and one of the appellations of whose patron saint is Kriss Kringle, which means the Christ Child.

Petrified Wood.

The petrified wood which is so abunnant in the United States territories of Arizona, Wyoming, and the Rocky Mountain regions is rapidly becoming utilized by the practical American. In San Francisco there is now a factory for cutting and polishing these petrifications into mantlepieces, tiles, tablets, and other architectural parts for which marble or slate is commonly used. Petrified wood is said to be susceptible of a finer polish than marble, or onyx, the latter of which it is driving from the market. The raw material employed comes mostly from the forest of petrified wood along the line of the Atlantic & Pacific Railway. Several other companies have also been formed to obtain concessions of different portions of these forests. Geologist will regret the destruction of such interesting primeval remains, and some steps ought to be taken to preserve certain tracts in their original state.

Husband and wife present themselves before the Divorce Court.

"What do you want, madame ?"

"Divorce from that wretch !"

"And you, sir ?"

"Divorce from that vixen !"

"The decree is refused—there is no incompatability of temper. You both seem to be perfectly agreed. Call the next case !"

HIS RESTING PLACE LOST.

A Valiant Canadian whose Grave Cannot be found.

"But no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day," says the old Jewish story of the death of Moses. And so it is of a man of whom Pittsburg should have further knowledge.

"Where is the grave of Beaujeu ?" is a question often asked by those interested in antiquarian researches in local history, but no one can answer. No one knows where lies the body of the man who commanded the French forces at Pittsburg, and with a handful of men went out into the wilderness and defeated the finest army England ever sent against the French in America.

The boldest operations of the French against their ancient foe the English, were planned by this brilliant soldier, and his picture shows him to have been a man with a strikingly bright, handsome and commanding face.

Daniel Hyacinth Mary Leonard de Beaujeu was descended from a family of Dauphiny which wes ancient and illustrious. Daniel was born at Montreal in 1711, his father being an officer in the Canadian army and Mayor of Quebec. In 1748 Daniel became a captain and afterward was commandant at Detroit. He had great experience with the Indians and received the Cross of St. Louis for his services. He came to Fort Dusquesne in 1755, being made commandmant of that post, succeeding M. de Contrecœur. A formidable army under General Braddock composed of veteran English troops and Virginia Colonial companies, were on their way to Fort Dusquesne when Beaujeau took command The fort was not strong enough to stand a siege and the French force was too weak to defend it. There was a motley collection of Indians at the fort, and though Beaujeu did not think they could be relied upon he determined to test them. He hastily arranged the details of ambuscade by the banks of the Monongohela, near where the second great steel works of the world is now located. The Chevalier de La Perade made a reconnoissance on July 6th, and fell back to report the presence of the enemy. When Beajeu visited the Indian camp and told his project the natives were loth to aid him, and said they had no hope of defeating the English. On the 9th of July, in the little "Chapel of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin at the Beautiful River," which is represented now by Father Lambing's church, on Third avenue. the French troops listened to Mass and Beaujeu received the communion, as he said he did not expect to return. They marched forth then to battle, 1,200 regular soldiers and 146 Canadians. The Indians at first refused to go, but the Hudson Chief Athanase, of Lorretto and Pontiac persuaded the 600 Indians of a dozen different tribes to follow them. The ambuscade was made at the first crossing. At the third volley Beaujeu fell, pierced through the forehead by a ball. Capt. Dumas succeeded to the command. Then came Braddock's defeat, of which Washington said : "We have been beaten, by a handful of men." When the French returned to the field of battle after the pursuit of the English was over, the body of Beaujeu was carried back to Fort Duquesne with those of Lieut. De Corqueville and Ensign De la Perade. The body of Beaujeu remained exposed in state until the 12th of July, when it was buried in the cemetery of the fort.

Friar Baron says Beaujeu's body "was interred on the 12th of the same month in the cemetery of Fort Duquesne under the title of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin at the Beautiful River, and this with the ordinary ceremonies by us, Recollet priest, etc."

All trace of the cemetery has passed away. For making excavations for Breed & Edwards' plough works, on Water street, at the corner of Penn, some bodies and military accoutrements were dug up, and it is thought this was about the location of the cemetery, but there is no means of ascertaining. Beaujeu lies in a nameless grave, and France, under Napoleon III., refused to raise a monument to him. His descendants still live in Tours, in France, and the descendants of his brother reside in Canada.

From California On Horseback.

At Dubuque, Iowa, a woman about 20 years of age, riding a spirited horse with a yearling colt, behind which a little dog trotted, appeared recently. She said that her name was Ida Lawson. Her parents had died in California, and she had resolved to go to her relatives in Wisconsin. She started on horseback six months ago, carrying a revolver until she reached Denver, where she sold it. Miss Lawson's destination was Green Lake, Wis., which place she left with her sister for California in April, 1883. They took a horse, buggy, and colt, and arrived in San Francisco on Sept. 19, 1883. She left there on May 19, 1884.

The horse and colt she had were those taken from Wisconsin. She had no companion at any time on the homeward journey, and used a sheepskin for a saddle. The object of her trip in this novel way was to bring back the mare and colt and the novelty of crossing the mountains alone. Miss Lawson has a good education, is prepossessing in appearance, and ladylike in manners. She will reach her home on Thursday next.

In all things preserve integrity; and the consciousness of thine own uprightness will alleviate the toil of business, soften the harness of ill-success and disappointments, and give thee an humble confidence before God, when the ingratitude of man, or the iniquity of the times, may rob thee of other reward.

MARKDALE DEC. 25, 1884.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. O. M. Stonehouse, formerly Lizzie McLeod, was born at Blantyre, Euphrasia township, Grey Co.; was married in Toronto to O. M. Stonehouse, July 13th, 1881, died in Marquett, Mich., Nov. 16th, '84, and interred at Forest, Ont. Her end was peace.

TO OUR PATRONS.

This is the last issue of the STANDARD for 1884, and we wish all our subscribers the compliments of the season.

It is with pleasure we return thanks to our numerous patrons, who have so cheerfully supported the STANDARD in the past. The present year has been one of vigorous growth in the circulation of the paper, and notwithstanding the financial depression, which is universal, there are a greater number of subscribers who have renewed for the coming year than there was any previous year at this date; this we look upon as an indication of the STANDARD's increased popularity among the people. Over 170 new names were added to our list in August as a trial trip for the balance of the year, many of whom have at ready renewed for 1885, and we trust the balance may all fall into line. We do not like to loose a subscriber from our list, and we know our patrons do not like to do without the paper.

It is encouraging to know that our efforts to improve the paper have been appreciated in the past, and we hope to keep on improving from year to year.

We are specially thankful to our correspondents, who have assisted very materially in making the STANDARD what it is, and we trust they will not grow weary in well-doing.

We wish all our subscribers health and prosperity in 1885.

MUNICIPAL.

Of the different municipalities surrounding us, none appears to get up the excitement at election times equal to Euphrasia. The interest in this township commences long before the end of the year and continues to increase until the election is over. We are told that Mr. Gilray, the present reeve will have opposition in the person of Jas Patterson, Jr. There is no doubt, however, that Gilray will be re-elected. He has been tried and found true, and richly deserves the confidence and support of the electors, Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Erskine are candidates for Deput-reeve, and should there not be a third, the latter should be elected by a good majority. It is possible however, that Mr. Ellis may take the field; if he does, it is hard to say what the result may be.

Messrs. Boyd, Black and Hurd, the present councillors are candidates for re-election; they are all staunch men and will probably be re-elected. J. W. Shepherdson is also a candidate. He is a boss Auctioneer, is well acquainted through the township and will poll a large vote. Should any of the present council be so fortunate as to loose their seat at the council board for '85, Shepherdson will be the man to take it.

In Osprey Mr. Gamey, the present reeve, is to be opposed by Mr. A. McGirr and A. McIntyre. Mr. Gamey is probably the best reeve ever Osprey had, and he will doubtless hold the reins, with increased support. Messrs. Taylor and Potts are reported as candidates for Deputy-reeve.

In Artemesia there will not likely be any opposition accept to Pedlar and Blakeley.

There is nothing new on the program in Glenelg. Mr. Davis will be re-elected reeve. We expect to give something important next week,

Mr. Cameron will have no opposition in Holland. Messrs. Shute and Norton will again take the field for the Deputyship, and the vote will likely be close. There are several new names mentioned as candidates for councillor, but nothing definite is yet announced.

We would ask our correspondents to send in the news early the next two weeks so that we may have reliable reports to give.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

The report of the first season's business of Markdale cheese factory may be seen in this issue.

After contending with all the difficulties incident to fresh hands at a new business, together with the great expense of hauling a comparative small quantity of milk from a long distance, the results are very satisfactory. Even calculating the cheese at a very low yield per amount of milk, and figuring butter at the very highest market price, there was a respectable balance in favor of cheese. This will doubtless have the effect another season of encouraging others to support the factory, as well as inducing the present patrons to add very materially to their present stock of cows. We are strongly persuaded that this country will not prosper as it should, until the whole district is dotted with cheese factories, and all vigorously patronized. The soil is well adapted to growing coarse grains and pasture, while the water cannot be excelled in the world. There is fortunes in it for farmers, and the sooner they adopt this system of agriculture the better. There are counties in Ontario, where the average soil is far below that of Grey County, where 80 cheese factories are in a county and all well patronized, and the farmers there are getting wealthy. The soil is yearly becoming rich in fertility, besides the labor for both male and female is greatly lightened, and the great expense connected with grain growing is reduced to a minimum. We certainly believe there is a prosperous time coming for those who turn their attention to dairying in the above manner.

ESTRAY ANIMALS.

The law requires that every person who takes in a stray animal must notify the township clerk of his municipality of the fact, in addition to advertising it, giving as minute a description of the animal as possible. The clerk is requested to keep a list of all such animals. Persons failing to comply with these provisions of the law, make themselves subject to very heavy penalty, and besides cannot collect expenses for keeping etc.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Vandeleur, Dec. 21st, 1884.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—That I may give public denial to an infamous slander that has been given to the public by a man in an exalted position, I appeal to you for a short space in the columns of the STANDARD as it is the only medium through which ordinary mortals in this part of the county can hope to obtain a fair hearing, and knowing your practice to be "give every man a square deal."

At a public meeting held in the Methodist church near here on Wednesday, the 10th inst., the Rev. Mr. McDowell of Flesherton made this statement concerning me: "I believe you have been no friend to our people in the past (Canada Methodist). I was informed so shortly after you came here, in fact I was told by a member of your own church that your feeling towards myself was so bitter you could spit in my face any hour." I wrote to Mr. McDowell demanding the name of his informant; to this reasonable request he gave me no reply, consequently I must hold him responsible for the slander.

Now, Sir, I defy any man to prove that I ever have, at any time, in any place, by word or act, shown the slightest spirit of animosity towards any denomination of the christian church, or any ill feeling towards Mr. McDowell or any other minister, more than this, I favored the Union movement from the first, and supported it to the utmost of my ability. For proof of this, and regarding my character previous to settling here, I refer to Rev. J. S. Corcoran, Hepworth, Ont., late of Markdale.

Thanking you for this favor, I remain, Sir, respectfully yours,

JAMES HANSON.

THE SECRET OUT.

The secret of success of Burdock Blood Bitters is that it acts upon the bowels, the liver, the kidneys, the skin and the blood; removing obstructions and imparting health and vigor.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Allow me, Mr. Editor, to wish you this week a merry, merry Xmas, and many returns of the same.

In this vicinity plenty of snow now, good sleighing; business brisk. Our business men here seem to have about all they are able to do.

On Wednesday evening, the 17th inst., the number of ladies and gentlemen seen wending their way in the same direction, with their latest new hat or bonnet on, with all their other fine Sunday clothes, made bystander inquire, why! where are all these people going? when in order to have a better view, taking his stand a little further round the corner, he observed that none passed the palatial dwelling of J. H. Heard, Esq., when shortly after, he was informed, that in that same house two would shortly be made one. The work being intrusted to the skilful hand of the Rev. D. C. McDowell was successfully completed. The happy couple being that of Miss M. E. Heard, daughter of J. H. Heard, and Mr. David Blair, carriage-maker in this village, who were pledged to each other in the holy bonds of wedlock. The young couple intend residing here and have settled down to house-keeping, and we understand intend having their honeymoon trip a little later, at least not till the weather becomes warmer.

The Howard Clifton Co. gave a first-class entertainment in the Town Hall here last Monday evening. The evening being very stormy there was not a very large turnout; but all who were fortunate enough to be present enjoyed a treat. Mr. Taylor, in the different characters he represented, excelled, especially in that of Uncle Sam, the farming man, Simple Simon and Sarah Walker, he fairly brought down the house. All the others performed their parts well. Mr. Clifton's imitations on the concertina was well done; also some very difficult feats in ventriloquism was well done.

Markdale Cheese Factory.

A meeting of the patrons of the above factory was held on the 13th inst., in the Orange Hall, Markdale, at the hour of 2 o'clock p.m., to wind up the business of the past year and to appoint officers and directors for the next.

The President and Secretary gave a statement of facts and figures regarding the past season, which were received by the meeting as entirely satisfactory.

The auditors' report followed, and testified to the satisfactory way business was done, when by resolution of meeting, reports were accepted and adopted as entirely satisfactory.

It was then moved in substance by Edward Rutledge and seconded by Wm. McLoughry, that although this being the first year of our factory, and as a consequence not so good from many causes, chiefly want of milk and an unfavorable fall, yet when we compare the result, we would have, if we manufactured our milk into butter and sold, say at 18 cents per lb., which is a high average for this season, with the result we have netted from giving the same quantity to the factory, we find there is a handsome balance in favor of cheese. Be it therefore resolved that we give the Markdale cheese factory our most hearty support in the coming and following seasons.—Carried unanimously.

Some minor resolutions were passed as to regulating sale of cheese, etc., when the following were elected officers and directors for the next year:

B. Coleman, President.
H. D. Irwin, Secretary.
John Boland, Director.
Wm. McLoughry, " Edward Rutledge, " James Wright, "
Wm. Jackson, Jr., "
Wm. Brady, "
John Hutchinson, "
E. W. Moore, "
Thos. Boland, "

572,623 lbs. of milk were manufactured into 59,117 lbs. of cheese, and sold at an average of 9½ cents per lb. 966 lbs. of milk gave 1 lb. of cheese.

This speaks well for the manufactures and this section of country, as being highly favorable to the manufacture of cheese.

H. D. IRWIN, Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Subscriptions received at this office for any of the following papers to the end of 1885 for one dollar in advance each, viz: Markdale STANDARD, Toronto Weekly Mail, Weekly Globe, Montreal Star, Montreal Witness, or the Farmers, Advocate. Now is the time to subscribe and get the balance of this year free.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the subscriber, lot 17, con. 8, Glenelg, late in September, two ewes and two lambs, all marked on the ear and one lamb with a particular mark besides. Would answer the description of stray sheep advertised in one of the Durham papers recently, as being lost in Bentinck. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expenses and take them. One of the ewes has since strayed away.

FARM FOR SALE.

90 ACRES, being south half of lot 18, con. 12, Holland, town-line of the township of Holland and Euphrasia, six miles from Markdale and the same distance from Walter's Falls. This farm is level, soil clay loam, has 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; balance splendid hardwood timber; is 3½ miles from Berkeley station; new frame house and log stable thereon; splendid well of spring water beside house. Church, School and Post-Office all less than a mile distant. Reason for selling—the place is 8 miles from homestead, making it inconvenient to labor. Terms easy. Apply to JOHN HAMILTON, Markdale P. O., or to this office, for further particulars.

Rooms to Let.

THREE large rooms in the second flat in Rae's new block, suitable for offices, dress makers. Good light and in splendid location. Apply for further particulars to Next Wednesday, the 31st, will be annual school meeting. Mr. B. Coleman is the retiring trustee in Markdale section. He is a first-class man for the position, and will likely be re-elected, if he will not object.

Mr. Benson has opened a grocery store in his new block, where oysters can also be had, served in any style. Apartments are fitted up specially for the latter. The business will also be continued next door to the Medical Hall.

The first number of the Dufferin Post, late Gazette, is to hand. The paper is well got up, has a neat appearance, is all home printed, and presents throughout a creditable aspect. Is independent in politics. We wish the proprietors, Messrs. Ketchum & McGuire, abundant success,

M. & W. Armstrong have their new steam saw mill, in this village about complete and will be sawing in a few days. They are now prepared to contract for the supply of any quantity of lumber, also custom sawing for cash or on shares. Will also purchase any quantity of good sound logs.

Accident.—While assisting to remove a large box stove one day last week, Robert Benson had one of his legs badly bruised and cut. He was walking backwards down a stairs when he tripped and the stove came down on him. It was at first thought his leg was broken but fortunately no bones were fractured. He is about again.

Selling off at Cost.—Dundas is selling his entire stock of Groceries, Crockery and Glassware at cost. You can save at least 25 to 50 per cent. by buying above lines at Dundas'. His stock is fresh and good and well bought. This is no sham sale. I purpose giving my whole attention to the Boot & Shoe business. Don't miss this opportunity.

It will pay to come 15 miles to get watches, clocks, silverware, wedding rings, &c., for your holiday needs, from W. A. Brown, Jeweller, Markdale. Buy a substantial present for a few dollars, and the many years of wear it gives makes it a good investment. This holds good in my lines of presents. W. A. Brown, Jeweller Markdale.

Tea-Meeting.—The Presbyterian church annual tea meeting will be held on New Years day in the church Markdale. Tea will be served from 6 to 8 o'clock after which addresses will be delivered by several Reverend and other gentlemen, also vocal and instrumental music, readings, recitations, &c. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents.

Use Prof. Low's Sulpher Soap for Prickly Heat, Nettle Rash, Scaley Eruption, Itch, and all diseased condition of the Skin.

In reference to the communication from the pen of Wm. Brown in last week's Standard, alent the Canada Presbyterian, we may say, the article referred to was a clipping from Toronto Truth (not credited). We consider Truth a very reliable journal, and have no doubt there was a great deal of truth in the article; further more the fact of a new paper being established in the intrests of the same denomination, strengthens our opinion in the matter; be that as it may we have no desire to discuss the question.

A WONDERFUL CLOCK.

The astronomical clock in the cathedral at Besancon was the rival of the celebrated Strassburg clock until both were outdone by the one at Beauvais, completed in 1876. That at Beauvais is most startling in its performance, for it is intended to convey to the careless a warning of the frightful consequences of the misuse of time, and at a certain hour an opening discloses the lost in torment and flames. The religious idea of the Besancon clock, however, is more comforting. It is meant to teach this lesson:

"Having, through sin, lost a happy eternity, through our Lord's death and resurrection we regain the same by a good employment of our time; and so the spiritual idea of the horloge is not death, which is the end of man's time, but the Saviour who restores it to him."

Our walk to the cathedral was full of interest. We passed the house where Victor Hugo was born, the archbishop's palace, the Roman columns, the Porte Noire, dating from the days of Marcus Aurelius, and so into the church, where we rang an electric bell to summon the attendant.

A voice high above us called down, "Who is there?"

"Two strangers to see the horloge."

"Pass through the door to the right and ascend."

So we mounted the stairs till we reached a landing where we were met by a neat-looking woman, who civilly invited us to enter a small room in the tower. She had a little wand in her hand to point with, and she began her description in a rapid way, which proved that she had said it often and knew it by heart.

"This remarkable horloge," she began, "is in the Renaissance style. The entire time taken fer its construction was three years, and there are thirty thousand pieces of steel and copper in the machinery, and seventy-three dials. The height is six yards, the breadth two yards and twenty-four inches, the depth one yard.

"There are seventeen dials arranged around this central one," she continued, pointing with her little baton to the dials below a large clock face. "The middle ones gives the days of the month and the month of the year. Eight small dials, you observe, surround this. The top one indicates the equation of time; this one at the left shows the length of the days: that at the right the length of the nights; below this the left-hand one gives the four seasons; the right, the twelve signs of the zodiac; this one, the days of the week; the other the signs of the planets from which their names are taken, and the lowest one gives the date of the year.

"The eight larger dials show first the seconds; then here on the left the time the sun rises for every day in the year; there on the right, the hour that it sets. The others give the ecclesiastic reckoning. The first on the left gives the golden number; the second the Solar Cycle; the third the Epact; the fourth the Dominical Letter, and the fifth the Roman Indiction.

"On the right and left we see above four dials larger than the sixteen below them. Two show the periodical eclipses of the sun and moon, and two the common and bissextile years, the common centuries. The sixteen smaller dials show the time at Paris, Rome, Vienna, St. Petersburg, New York, Algiers, London, Batavia, Jerusalem, Pekin, Taiti, Cayenne, Madrid, Constantinople, and Calcutta.

The New York dial had a home look. We took advantage of a short silence, during which the woman paused to take breath, to compare the time with that of Besancon. We found the New York time nearly five hours earlier, and felt amused to think that while we stood there at high noon, some of our friends at New York were not yet awake!

"The large central dial surmounting all shows the time at Besancon," resumed the cicerone, "and the twelve apostles are enclosed in the little alcoves—six in each. At every hour two retire and two others take their places to sound the hour on little bells, which they strike with the instrument of their martyrdom or the symbol of their rank.

"St. Michael and St. Gabriel, standing above, strike the quarters.

"The three other figures above the Besancon clock face represent Faith, Hope, and Charity. When the apostles change places, Hope and Charity turn toward Faith, who turns toward each, extending a chalice, and then they renew their positions.

"The sepulchre of our Lord is represented above this, two armed soldiers mounting guard. Twelve o'clock is about to strike, so watch the clock, if you please."

The woman stopped as the hands reached noon. Our eyes were widely attentive. As the hour sounded, the two apostles retired and two advanced; Hope and Charity turned toward Faith, St. Mary lowered her sceptre, the armed soldiers fell prostrate, and a figure of the Saviour rose from the tomb, while sweet music sounded from a musical box attached to the machinery. The last stroke of twelve died away, and all was as before, excepting that the figure of our Lord remained visible.

"At three o'clock," resumed the guide, "the Saviour returns to the tomb, the stone rolls over him, the soldiers once more stand guard, and the music is no longer glad, but mournful.

"But this is not all; at the sides we see various seaports. Here are Havre, Dieppe, Mont St. Michel, St. Helena, Cayenne, Port Louis, and the harbor of Brest. Observe that the waves are constantly in motion, and that one sees storms gathering and passing, clouds coming and going, the tides flowing in and out. The ides rise and fall exactly as they do at the places represented, and the flood-tides also just as they occur at the ports. The other dials demonstrate astronomical facts.

"Outside on the cathedral tower are four very large dials, which give the hours and minutes, the days of the month, the days of the week, and the phases of the moon. An electric attachment operating every twenty seconds, transmits the time to four other dials; one in the church, another in the cloister, the third in the court of the citadel, the fourth in the archbishop's palace.

"One hundred and twenty-two indications are given, from a second of time to ten thousand years. And that is all," continued the woman, "except about the working of the machinery, which I do not explain."

After going behind the clock and looking well at the working, we gave the woman her fee and left, feeling solemnly impressed with the value of time, the wonders of science, and the beauty of the Psalmist's prayer: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

Wonders of Astronomical Inventions.

Astronomers formerly knew nothing of the constituent elements of the heavenly bodies. Had La Grange been told of the wonderful achievements of the times later than his own, he would have pronounced them impossible. Think of Herschel, as he sat through those wintry nights, with the faithful Caroline at his side, recording the results of his observations. How little could he have dreamed that the actual gases of the far away planets which he was studying would one day be presented for analysis. The "Origin of Species" was presented to the world in 1859, and it was soon after this that a gigantic stride was made in asronsomical science in the series of spectroscopic. discover ies. Tyo's crude machine did noble work. It was not a telescope at all, but the suggestion of what was to come. The inventor of this crudity so stimulated his scholars that much was accomplished, and one of them became such an enthusiast that he could not be diverted from his close observation of a star by the alarming tidings that his house was on fire. "I will come to the house when this more important matter in determined." Reflecting telescopes are much larger than refracting telescopes, because it is difficult to get glass which is pure enough for the making of large object glasses. The earliest of the colossal instruments ever turned upon the heavens was Herschel's monster 40-foot reflector. A reflecting telescope is a great funnel catching all the rays of light in its compass, and concentrating them into one ray small enough to enter the pupil of the eye. This telescope was erected in the clear atmosphere of the Island of Malta. The wonderful reflectors of Lord Rosse's had a mirror six feet in diameter, with a tube sixty feet long. When the telescope was in a horizontal position a man could walk inside from one end to the other. The mirror in a reflecting telescope is metallic, being composed of two parts of copper to one of tin. But the greater part of the work of astronomers is performed by smaller and refracting instruments. The "meridian circle" is the most practical of the telescopes in the great work of science. By the use of these instrument, a foundation is laid for mathematical researches of the most exalted character. Practical astronomy is thus brought into immediate contact with the affairs of daily life. In most large cities there are astronomical observatories and these are generally connected by electricity with the clocks of the city. Uniform time is thus secured.

Air Navigation Again.

The Tissandier brothers, who a yearago tested a navigable balloon in Paris with some success, have repeated the same experiment with the same balloon this year, the only difference was in getting additional power of movement by increasing tha size of the zinc plates used in the battery, that furnished energy to the electric motor. With this help a force of one and-a-half horses was claimed and the propelling screw was driven at the rate of one hundred and ninety turns a minute. The balloon was allowed to ascend to a height of thirteen hundred feet above the earth, and found at that point a breeze blowing from the northwest at the rate of about seven miles an hour. The motor was then set in operation, and drove the balloon at the rate of nearly ten miles an hour, so that it was rapidly steered through a complete circle, and then moved against the wind as far as Grenelle. The ascent was made late in the afternoon, and, as it was getting dark, the aeronauts allowed the balloon to float away to the suburb of Varrenne, where they descended safely. Although the voyage smade by the Tissandier and Renard balloons seem to us absurdly short, they indicate, nevertheless, that the time is not far distant when balloons of a force much superior to them as that of a steamship is to the weak struggling of a dory, will navigate the air to some practical purpose. No attempts at doing this have ever yet been really made, but the evolutions of the ingenious toys which the French engineers have devised will soon point the way for applying the principles which they discover to airships made with serious purpose.

QUEER HAPPENINGS.

A Bloomsburg, N. J., woman, who was born dumb, began to laugh just before her death, and laughed continuously until she breathed her last.

As some workmen were burning brush on the battlefield of Missionary Ridge recently, a stump suddenly blazed up and was blown into many pieces. Investigation showed that three shells had been embedded in it.

A husband of Deadwood has put up in the Post Office the following notice: "My wife Sarah has Shot my ranche When I didn't Do a thing Too hur an' I want it distinctly Understood that any man That takes her in and keers for her On my account Wil get himself pumped so Full of lead that Sum tenderfoot will locate him for a mineral clame. A word to the wise is sufficient, an' orter work on fools. P. Smith."

Two cows went to a neighbor's gate during the sultry weather last summer, and the man, suspecting their desire, took a pail of water to them. They drank with great eagerness and then sauntered contentedly away. In half an hour they returned with three other cows. These too were liberally treated, after which they marched off. The next morning the first couple again visited their benefactor, bringing another stranger with them. Their visits became regular, and almost every time a strange cow or two accompanied them.

Nature tells of a canary that had been greatly annoyed by the hardness of the bits of cracker thrown into its cage. One day it lifted a piece of cracker and, taking it to the water trough, dropped it in and then stirred it about with its beak until it was in condition to be eaten. It now puts every hard substance which it deems eatable into the water. It endeavored to soften sweets in the same way, but finding that the sweet became gradually smaller and smaller, it hastily abstracted it, and has never since put anything of that nature into the water.

While a protracted meeting was being held in Resaca, Ga., a number of ministers stopped with Mrs. J. W. Davis, and she was sorely perplexed as to the means of getting something good for them to eat. She had tried in vain to get a ham in the place—all having been consumed by the large crowd in attendance—and but one small chicken could be found. While she was busy in the kitchen preparing the chicken, and wondering how she could provide for her guests, a covey of partridges flew into the dining room. The doors were closed, a number of birds caught, and the ministers fared sumptuously.

A drove of over 1,000 sheep was being driven on a road in Indiana. At a depression in the road water was found to cover it from fence to fence, but little more than the waggon track being bare. Just as the leader of the flock reached this spot a large black water snake crossed the track. The leading wether stopped short, and the entire space was soon blocked full. In a moment a dog came bounding over the backs of the sheep, and dropping down between the water holes took the leading wether by the ear, giving him a gentle pull. He sprang into the air, clearing the narrow space between the water holes, followed by the entire flock, the dog not leaving the track till the whole drove had passed.

Our Teeth.

They decay. Hence unseemly mouths, bad breath, imperfect mastication. Everybody regrets it. What is the cause? I reply, want of cleanliness. A clean tooth never decays. The mouth is a warm place, 98 degrees. Particles of meat between the teeth soon decompose. Gums and teeth must suffer.

Perfect cleanliness will preserve the teeth to old age. How shall it be secured? Use a quill pick and rinse the mouth after eating; brush and castile soap every morning; the brush with simple water on going to bed. Bestow this trifling care upon your precious teeth and you will keep them and ruin the dentists. Neglect it, and you will be sorry all your lives. Children forget. Watch them. The first teeth determine the character of the second set. Give them equal care.

Sugar, acid, saleratus and hot things are nothing compared with food decomposition between the teeth. Mercurialization may loosen the teeth, long use wear them out, but keep them clean and they will never decay. This advice is worth thousands of dollars to every boy and girl. Books have been written on the subject. This brief article contains all that is essential.

Never have a tooth taken out if it be possible to have it filled. The loss of a single jaw-tooth will not only give the cheek a sunken appearance, but it will prevent the proper mastication of the food, and this is a long step toward dyspepsia, with its train of evils.—[Selected.

A Simple Remedy.

There is no remedy of such general application, and none so easily attainable as water; and yet nine persons in ten will pass by it in an emergency to seek for something of far less efficiency.

There are but few cases of illness where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent.

A strip of flannel or a napkin folded lengthwise, and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

A towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water and quickly wrung and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works almost like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs sore throat, or rheumatism, as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly.

Pieces of cotton batting dipped in hot water, and kept applied to old sores or new, cuts, bruises, or sprains, is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals. I have seen a sprained ankle cured in an hour by showering it with hot water, poured from a height of three feet.

Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic; and hot water taken freely half an hour before bed time is the best of cathartics in cases of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to the diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia.

Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.

It is an excellent plan to record facts like these in a note book, which should be always be at hand when wanted. In the anxiety caused by accidents or sudden illness in the family, one becomes confused and is not apt to remember quickly what should be done; hence there may be prolonged and unneccessary suffering before proper remedies are applied.—[Hall's Journal of Health.

The Panama Canal.

An impression prevails in certain quarters that the great enterprise of connecting the Pacific Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico will eventually fail, owing to the engineering difficulties in the way; but Lieut. Henry H. Gorring, late of the American navy, who understands the situation thoroughly, has no doubt but that De Lessep's greatest work will be finished and in working order by 1890. He recalls the fact that eminent English engineers predicted the failure of the Suez Canal; but the knowledge gained in that enterprise, insures, he thinks, the success of the Panama Canal. He says:

"The substitution of mechanical appliances for manual labor is the real solution of the problem. The cutting of the Suez Canal dragged along for eight years, during which only 22,000,000 cubic metres were removed. During this time the prophecies of failure, notably by eminent Englishmen, were as persistent and as positive as the prophecies of failure to complete the Panama Canal are to-day by Englishmen and Americans. During the eighth year machinery was substituted for human labor, the remaining 55,000,000 cubic metres were removed in the two following years, and the canal was opened in the tenth year. The French engineers start on the American Isthmus with the experience gained on the other work. They have taken three years to study their needs and to prepare mechanical appliances, and the work is now progressing rapidly. Americans would much perfer that the American canal should be the work of Americans. I use the word in its broadest sense. Evidently Americans had neither the courage nor the means to undertake it. The Frenchmen had; they have gone quickly to work; they ask us for nothing, not even for subscriptions to the capital stock; they are spending their own money in their own way, and a very considerable part of the money they spend reaches the country in exchange for machinery, materials, and food. The Frenchmen are engaged in a work that will benefit American commerce, and especially benefit the commercial marine of the United States, quite as much as British commerce and the British commercial marine were benefitted by their work at Suez. It is a matter of no consequence to the United States who cuts the canal, provided it is cut. When it is completed, if it becomes necessary or even important to our national welfare and safety that we should control it, there is no doubt that we shall take possession of the canal and the country through which it passes, with as little hesitation and trouble as the British recently took possession of Egypt and the Suez Canal, and without the slightest consideration as to who built the canal or who operates it."

This is a very hopeful view to take of the matter, for Americans have not felt disposed to aid this enterprise, as they feared to lose the freight and travel between Europe and Asia which now makes use of our railways between the Atlantic and Pacific; but the French engineers are not fools, and they undoubtedly will succeeded in opening up an avenue between the two continents by way of the Isthmus of Panama.

Legally Dead, but Physically Alive.

A man who was legally dead, and whose estate had been administered upon has come to life. In 1874 William J. Trailer, of Monmouth, Ill., left home for the West, and his relatives hearing nothing of him for years, regarded him as dead. His father was Thomas Trailer, who was murdered in 1867, leaving 160 acres of land and $10,000 to be divided among three children. Diligent search was made for William, but it was fruitless, and in May, 1883, Judge Porter, of Chicaga, was appointed by the County Court as administrator of his estate, and preparations were being made to distribute his patrimony among the legal heir. But William now turns up in the flesh, and protests and petitions the Probate Court to re-establish him in his rights, asserting that he is "not dead," and never was, and he is now here in his own proper person to make his petition. His two uncles, Maj. Bond, and J. W. Bond, identified him, and the letters of administration on his estate were revoked, and he is placed in full control of his property as completely as if he he had been dead and resurrected. His only explanation of his silence is that it did not occur to him to write home.

Cremation in Italy.

As the figures quoted below will prove, cremation has made the greatest progress in Italy, where, in 1876, Milan was the first city to revive this method of disposing of the dead. From that time the little temple built in the cemetery by Macciachini has gradually become a grand institution. The example of Milan was soon followed by Lodi, where a simple but perfect apparatus was erected in 1877, and last year a temple was erected at Cremona. Rome followed with a small temple on the declivity of the cemetery in Camp Verano, in which the mortal remains of many illustrious patriots have already been consumed. At Varese an elegant temple has been built on the highest point of the new and beautiful cemetery, dominating all the valley below. Plans are now being examined at Novara, Venice, Florence, Pisa, Leghorn, and Turin for new temples of cremation to be erected next year, while that at Spezia is only awaiting opening. Since the body of Albert Keller, a well-known philanthropist, was burned at Milan in 1876, the fires of the cremative apparatus have been lit in that city no less than 362 times. At Lodi the operation has been performed 26 times; at Cremona, 12; at Udine, 2; at Rome, 35; at Brescia, 24; at Padua 3, while at the same time associations of cremation have been constituted not only in the above-named cities, but also at Domodissola, Como, Bologna, Modena Pavia, Codogno, Venice, Piacenza, Leghorn, Novara, Ancona, Genoa, Florence, Turin, Parma, Verona, Pisa, Carpi, Asti, Pistoja, Intra, and San Remo, counting together more than 6,000 members, not a few of whom are women. This rapid spread of the system of cremation has taken place among the Italians in advance of any governmental provision, and indeed the legislation may be said to be the only obstacle in the way. From a technical point of view the problem has been completely solved by the apparatus at Milan, which satisfies all sanitary and economical exigencies. The system does not exclude religious ceremonies.—[Naples Letter to the London Daily News.

A Bird Catching Tree.

Among the transactions of the New Zealand Institute Mr. R. H. Govett gives some startling facts as to the bird-killing powers of Pisonia brunoniana or P. sinclairii. A sticky gum is secreted by the carpels when they attain their full size, but is nearly as plentiful in their unripe as in their ripe condition. Possibly attracted by the flies which embalm themselves in these sticky seed vessels, birds alight on the branches, and on one occasion two silvar-eyes (Zosteropos) and an English sparrow were found with their wings so glued that they were unable to flutter. Mr. Govett's sister, thinking to do a merciful act, collected all the fruit-bearing branches that were within reach and threw them on a dust-heap. Next day about a dozen silver-eyes were found glued to them, four or five pods to each bird. She writes: "Looking at the tree, one sees tufts of feathers and legs where the birds have died, and I don't think the birds could possibly get away without help. The black cat just lives under the tree, a good many of the birds falling to her share, but a good many pods get into her fur, and she has to come and get them dragged out."

In a note Mr. T Kirk says that Pisonia umbellifera, Seeman = P. sinclairii, Hook, f., is found in several localities north of Whangerei, both on the east and west coasts, also on the Taranga Islands, Arid Island, Little Barrier Island, and on the East Cape, possibly in the last locality planted by the Maoris. The fruiting pericarp is remarkable for its viscidity, which is usually retained for a considerable period after the fruit is fully matured. It can be readily imagined that small birds tempted to feed on the seeds might easily become glued to a cluster of fruits.

The German Tramp

From time immemorial the Wanderjahre have been recognized as a distinct period in the life of the German handicraftsman, and almost as a necessary part of his education. As soon as his apprenticeship was over it used to be considered a matter of course that he should shoulder his knapsack and go out into the world to seek employment, if not a fortune. Unless he had very pressing reasons for doing so, the youth who staid at home was considered a milksop unworthy of the freedom that was now his by right. With a few thalers in his pocket, and all his other possessions upon his shoulders, the young tailor, smith, or watchmaker started on his travels. While his money lasted he led a pleasant and careless life in the open air and the little inns frequented by persons of his class. When it reached a low ebb, he sought for work in some neighboring town. How long he remained in his new position depended upon circumstances. In Summer it was seldom longer than enabled him to earn money enough to resume his vagrant life. When Autumn came, he grew critical as to the character of the masters and made full enquiry of his companions as to the mistress's liberality with respect to diet, before he applied for work; for it would have been unpleasant to have to turn out again in the ice and snow. Two or three years would be passed in this way and then the wanderer would fall in love, and either return home or settle down in the place in which he happened to be.—[The Saturday Review.

A German Legend.

Many years ago in the little town of Dort, in Germany, were two large, unpainted, dreary looking old houses, standing directly opposite each other. One was the home of the aged Hermann Desseldorf and his gentle daughter, Bertha. The neighboring dwelling was occupied by one Jacques Lambert, a painter by profession, and Italian by birth, very retiring in his manner. His only companion was a poor, half witted lad, Paul Laroni. After that he came in every day for a moment to see her, but always bade her not to come to him until his picture was finished; for nothing now must disturb him from his work.

He daily grew pale and thin, and his wild dark eyes burned with a strange fire. All avoided him as much as possible; and one more bold than the rest alleged that one night, crouching under the window, led by curiosity, he heard cries and groans issue from within.

Poor Paul Laroni was missing, too, and Jacques offered a liberal reward to any one who would bring him back. A party headed by Hermann Desseldorf scoured the adjacent forest, and even dragged the river, but found no trace save one of the boy's silk handkerchiefs, which they found near the river bank.

Bertha, in her anxiety for her lover, watched his studio window hour by hour. Finally, one day he omitted his usual visit to her, and fearing that he might be ill she ventured to disobey his command; and, entering the house softly, she crept to his studio door. Suddenly a low wail, full of human agony, smote her ear, and then immediately following it she heard a wild laugh and the voice of Jacques exclaiming:

Cautiously she lifted herself to her knees, and peered through the key hole. A moment thus; then, with a piercing shriek, she fell back insensible.

Jacques came hastily out, terror impressed on his countenance, and, locking the door behind him, bore her to her home and laid her on her couch. Tenderly he watched over her until she opened her eyes; but never again was she conscious.

A mob was formed and marched to the house of the artist. The doors were burst open, the apartments carefully searched, and what was their horror, on breaking open a closet connected with his studio, to behold the stiffened corpse of the idiot boy fall the refrom! Fearful to tell, he had literally been crucified! He was found nailed to a rude wooden cross, his countenance wearing the same expression as that of the beautiful picture.

No trace of the artist was to be found. He had fled and was never heard of more. The indignant populace razed the house to the ground, and set fire to the ruins.

What Number of Meals?

Respecting the number of meals one ought to patronize, that must be regulated by want and habit. To digest well, it is necessary that the stomach should have completely dealt with the previous meal. However, feeble and delicate stomachs have need to eat but little at a time, though frequently. Also, to make an intelligent section of those aliments which refresh, heat and sustain. The aliment which digests best is the most suitable. Digestion is but the preference of the stomach for something it likes, the attraction of suitable ingredients; it is the sustaining of our organs and their tissues, and if the stomach be healthy and well constituted, its instinct will never be at fault. "Strawberries and cream make me sad," said Madame du Deffand, but they agreed with her not the less—[The Caterer.

CAPTAIN PIM'S PROPOSITIONS.

The United States and England to Build a Railroad and the Nicaragua Canal.

Captain Bedford Pim of the Royal Navy, and lately a member of Parliament from Gravesend has on foot a plan for building a railroad from Cheyenne to Hudson Bay for the transportation of cattle to England, instead of bringing them to Chicago and then shipping them East. The road will cost about $10,000,000 and he wants the United States to subscribe 1½ per cent. of that amount, and England 1½ per cent., and the remainder he claims to be able to raise on the London Stock Exchange in a few days.

Beside this, Capt. Pim has been in communication with Secretary Frelinghuysen and other heads of departments at Washington concerning the Nicaragua Canal The United States has recently secured the contract from Nicaragua for building this canal, and talks about $40,000,000 as a sum sufficient to do it. Capt. Pim contends that it cannot be done with $100,000,000, and wants the United States and England to go in together and start a subscription of $200,000,000, England to give 1½ per cent. and America a like amount, and the remainder he volunteers to raise in London by the same means he proposes to raise the money with which to build a railroad from Cheyenne to Hudson Bay.

Captain Pim has visited Nicaragua, seen for himself the proposed route of the canal, and given those at Washington much valvable information. To a reporter Captain Pim said:

"The plan to construct a railway, say, from Cheyenne to Hudson Bay, has been endorsed by many cattle men I met. The idea is to save as much time as possible. The Denver and Rio Grande Railroad runs to Cheyenne, and, if you like, cattle can be brought from as far south as Texas. Then from Cheyenne I propose to construct a road through Manitoba to Hudson Bay. There is a saving at once of 1,000 miles, while you save by shipping from Hudson Bay to England 500 miles, making in all 1500 miles."

Speaking further of the Nicaragua Canal plan, and in answer to an inquiry as to how joint action of the English and American Governments could be brought about he said:

"The President should appoint a preliminary commission, and for that purpose I shall wait on President-elect Cleveland at Albany. The English and American Governments both, so far, look upon the plan with favor, and I have no doubt that it can be consummated. The only question is that of a division of the proceeds of the canal, but I have no doubt that also can be amicably arranged.

European and American Brewries.

According to a report of the Internal Revenue Department of the United States the amount of beer which paid taxes in the United States last year was 588,000,000 gallons. Add to this the beer exported and evading the tax was 600,000,000 gallons. The United States now ranks third in the list of beer producing countries in the world. Although her breweies are few in number compared with those of other countries, she yet makes two-thirds as much beer as England, whose breweries are almost ten times as many. England is at the head of all beer producing countries. with 27,000 breweries, and a product of 990,000,000 gallons annually; while Germany. with 25,000 breweries, makes 900,000,000 gallons yearly. The United States, with only 3,000 breweries, makes about 600,000,000 gallons per annum. Then comes France, with 3,000 breweries, and a production of 157,500,000 gallons; and Austria and Hungary, with 2,093 breweries, but a production of 280,000,000 gallons. Belgium has 1,250 breweries. which produced last year, 210,250,000 gallons; Holland, 500 breweries, producing 34,000,000; Russia, 480 breweries. producing 8,000,000 gallons; Switzerland, 423 breweries, producing 13,500,000 gallons; Denmark, 250 breweries, producing 28,000,000; Sweeden, 220 breweries, producing 21,000,000 gallons; and Italy, 150 breweries, producing only 4,000,000 gallons, Nearly 80,000 persons are engaged in brewing lager beer in the United States.

Served Him Right.

"I—I wanted to ask your opinion about a little matter, and also secure your advice," he said, as he cornered a member of the City Council on one of the City Hall porches yesterday.

"Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

"Is it your opinion that we shall have no open winter?"

"Why, sir, I—I can't really say. I do not pretend to be a weather-prophet."

"Sorry—very sorry," continued the other; "I've got to go to Chicago on foot. If you could guarantee me fine weather I wouldn't need to ask you to lend me more than half a dollar. As you can't do that, and as I am liable to be snowed in somewhere for a week, I shall be compelled to request the loan of at least eighty cents. Do you advise me to lay in a stock of crackers and cheese at this point, or would you buy as you went along and from day to day?"

The Alderman sought to crawl out of any responsibility in the matter, but the man hung to him until he got thirty cents as a compromise. The man who won't predict an open winter ought to be bled.

"Mr. Jones," said little Johnnie to that gentleman, who was making an afternoon call, "can whisky talk?" "No, my child; however can you ask such a question?" "Oh, nothing; only ma said whiskey was beginning to tell on you."

A Short Sermon.

You are the architects of your own fortune. Rely upon your own strength of body and soul. Take for your motto, Self-reliance, Honesty and Industry. For your star, Faith, Perseverance and Pluck, and inscribe on your banner, "Be just and fear not." Don't take too much advice; keep at the helm and steer your own ship. Strike out. Think well of yourself. Fire above the mark you intend to hit. Assume your position. Don't practice humility, you can't get above the level—water don't run up hill—put potatoes in a cart over a rough road and small potatoes will go to the bottom. Energy invincible—determination with a right motive—are the leaves that move the world. The sure art of commanding is to take a fair share of the work. Civility costs nothing and buys everything. Facts Relating to the Draft Horses of France.

While some people in America call all horses imported from France Normans, it is a fact that there is no breed in France called by that name by the French people; the name Norman, therefore, is purely American. The principal breeds of France are known as Percherons and Boullanais. The Percherons are the most highly prized of all French races, and all departments of France go to the Percheron for stallions to improve their local breeds. The Percheron Stud Book of France is published under the authority of the French Government and admits only animals of pure Percheron origin and birth, established by their pedigrees and the pedigrees of their ancestors for generations. The fact that no recorded pedigrees can be furnished with any of the more common breeds of France, explains the eagerness of many importers in insisting that all horses imported from France are alike, and that pedigrees are useless.

It is a well known fact that what a man gives for a horse over from $500 to 800—the price of a good grade—is paid for purity of blood; and where the seller is not able to give the recorded pedigree of the animal sold by evidence of additional value, he has no right to ask it. With these facts before him, no intelligent man will buy a horse imported from France unless he is recorded with his pedigree in full in the stud book in France, and the importer furnishes with his bill of sale the French certificate of registration, as this is his only guarantee of safety, a large number of horses of unknown blood being imported to this country and sold as pure bred. 128

Where to Advertise,

The Chicago Sun well says: "When cows have learned to read, then, and not till then, will it pay enterprising merchants to advertise their business on wayside fences, trees and gateposts." All the ingenuity of man has failed to invent an advertising medium equal to the columns of a well-established newspaper. It is a part of everybody's daily life to read the papers and to do this without readin the advertisements and being impressed with their statement is an impossibility. Therefore the merchant who knows anything of human nature never fails to prefer the newspaper "ad" to all the dodges ever invented.

The American Agriculturist For January, 1885.

BRIGHT BRISK, AND BEAUTIFUL is the American Agriculturist for January. The Forty-fourth volume opens with more than the usual fullness and freshness, and is indicative of renewed vigor in this long established authority on all matters pertaining to the farm, garden, and household. Upwards of a hundred fine engravings by several noted artists, as Cary, Bennett, Folsom and Giles adorn the pages and explain the carefully prepared articles upon a wide range of important subjects. Joseph Harris, "Walks and Talks" from the West.... Col. Weld is "Among the Farmers".... Dr. Thurber. A. S. Fuller, Dr. Halsted, Dr. Slade, and a score of others well-known writers are represented by their best efforts. "One of New York's Breathing Places," is a charming specimen of engraving, and illustrates one of the minor parks...."Remodeling a Barn," "Plan for a Convenient Kitchen," "Exterior and Interior of a Western Cattle Ranch," a "Cheap Poultry House," and a "Good Smoke House," give the usual number and variety of farm buildings...Improvement in a Well Curb, Mouse Traps Garden Fences. A Harness Holder, Slop Trap, etc., are among the useful farm appliances...Illustrated descriptions of "Showy Pigeons," "Shetland Ponies," "Silver-Gray Rabbits," etc., are of general interest....The Household Department, shows how to make a "Scrap-Basket," a "Foot Warmer," a "A Tea-pot Cosey," a "Remodeled Looking Glass," a "Clock Panel," a "Rustic Screen;" has hints on Cooking Apples, and other useful and timely matters....The Boys and Girls have a touching story, "Old Read Spitfire," beautifully illustrated. The Doctor's "Talks" explain the Cow's foot in the Milk, and the ways of Water Beetles. Mr. Carvell describes "A Living Boat," etc. Price $1.50 per year; single copy 15 cents. Address Publishers of the American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

MIRIAM.

CHAPTER I.

"Miriam," said the wife of the Reverend James Archer, looking up from the book she held in her hand, as though struck with a sudden thought, "you are te be sure to go with us to the reading room to-night."

The young lady addressed was sitting on the other side of the fire place in the pleasant Rectory drawing room. She was dressed in deep mourning, and she held, to screen her face from the fire, the magazine she had grown tired of reading. She awoke from a reverie as the elder lady spoke, and a pair of deep set gray eyes, which had been gazing, unseeing, into the shadowy room, came back to the speaker's face.

"And why particularly to-night?" she asked in a soft toned, somewhat weary voice. "You know I don't care much for the evenings spent among your model young men, and I had promised Tommie to have an hour with him in the nursery after dinner."

"Poor mite! He'll be disappointed; but there must be no calling off. James told me I was to be sure to speak to you about it. It's a mercy I remembered. The Hickses sent word they were going down—that there was to be some music, and that we were to beg you to take some songs. You won't mind really, will you?"

"Of course not, if you and Mr. Archer really wish it. But, surely, Miss Hicks won't want any assistance from me! She sings a great deal."

Mrs. Archer laughed.

"She does," she said—"a great deal. Shall we content ourselves with speaking of the quantity, and be mercifully silent as to the quality of her singing, poor little girl?"

"Oh, I meant nothing unkind!" the other returned indifferently. "One must utter the sacred name of Hicks with bated breath, I know—say flattering things of them, or for ever hold one's peace; and really, from what little I have seen of her, I do indeed like Lady Hicks. She seems to me a kind and pleasant woman—a vast deal too good for the all important Sir Robert."

"My dear, just think of his money!'

"I defy you to think of anything else," the girl answered, with a smile. "He won't let you. I can't help wondering, myself, how many thousands of people have been ruined by the beer which puts so much money into his pockets."

"It certainly is atrociously bad beer," the other lady said. "Not that that need concern us, as we don't drink it. What does concern us is the very good use to which Sir Robert puts his money. Look at this model parish of ours; no poor—almost no vice—thanks to him! We ourselves too would be poorly off but for his liberality. I have to recapitulate his virtues very often, for I confess he is to me at times a little insupportable. By-the-way, he was asking a great many questions about you, the other day."

Apparently ignoring this last observation, the girl threw the magazine she had held lightly from her, and rose from her chair; she stood a moment by the fire, stretching out before her two slim white hands, one of which was ringless, the other—the left one—bearing on its third finger a heavy wedding ring.

"If I am to sing to-night I may as well try over some songs," she said.

"Yes, do," Mrs. Archer rejoined, her eyes wandering back to her book. She was an inveterate reader, and her taste in literature was not such as gave the Reverend James unmitigated satisfaction. "Take something pretty. I suppose this brother of Lady Hicks will be there too."

"Brother—what brother?" asked Miriam, carelessly turning over the music at the piano. "I did not even know she had a brother."

"Why, yes! He lives abroad; came back quite unexpectedly the other day. I told you all about it."

"I do not recollect your having told me," the girl said tranquilly, putting a song before her and sitting down to the piano. "But I don't want to hear. Go on with your book. Lady Hicks' brother does not interest me in the least."

With that she struck some chords on the piano, and presently the room was filled with the deep tones of a rich contralto voice. Half an hour passed while Mrs. Archer read her novel and the young lady sang and played. At the end of that time she closed the piano, came and knelt on the hearth rug, stretched her hands to the fire, and looked thoughtfully at the blaze. Suddenly, without turning her head, she spoke.

"And what was Sir Robert inquiring about me?" she said.

The room had grown dark in that half-hour; Mrs. Archer, who had been reading by the firelight, reluctantly closed her book and looked with rather dazed eyes at the girl.

"The usual thing," she answered presently. "You know what he would ask."

"Was I a widow? Then who had my husband been? Were you certain there had been, as Betsy Prig would say, 'sich a person'? Could you vouch for my respectability?"

"Stop there!" Mrs. Archer interrupted. "Thanks to your manner, and to a certain look there is about you, no one has asked me that question yet."

"And you? What did you tell him?"

"Why do you ask? What should I tell him?"

"That my name is Miriam King, that my husband has ceased to exist, that, having come into a little property lately, I had given up music teaching and had advertised for a comfortable home in a clergyman's family, which advertisement you had, fortunately for me, answered, and—here I am. Is that what you told him?

The elder woman nodded.

"Something of that."

The girl kept silence for a few moments, kneeling on the hearth rug, gazing into the fire.

"It is a harmless deception, surely—even your husband admits that—harmless and in my circumstances necessary; but you won't forget that it is, after all a deception. My name is not King, you remember, and I am not a widow that I know of—I wish with all my heart that I might be. I don't want to deceive you; I will tell you everything, if you and Mr. Archer wish it. But you have been so kind; you have taken me on trust, as it were."

"My dear, why not? And why should you be troubled with the recital of what is, of course, painful to you? If occasion should arise, you will tell me, that is all. Till then we can trust you, Miriam."

Miriam turned, and laid her arm across Mrs. Archer's knee.

"I have been lucky in one circumstance of my life," she said softly—"to have been led to you. Dear Georgie—I may call you Georgie?—it was all so long ago—five years ago! I am not very old yet, am I? I was a child then. There could have been nothing very terrible in me, or about me, you would think—nothing that a man, worthy of the name, should have feared to face and to endure. But he, my husband, cast me off—when he should have shielded, he disowned me. Ah, sometimes I have envied you your children and your husband's love! Mine has been a miserable fate; and yet I swear to you that, although I have been less happy than other women, I do not know wherein I have been less deserving of happiness."

"Dear, I should like to ask you one question. Do not answer unless you wish to do so. Did you love him—this man—do you still feel any affection for your husband, if he is alive?"

"Do I? No—a thousands times no! Did I? I can't say. What do girls of seventeen know of their hearts? What I felt for him you would not dignify by the name of love, perhaps; but he was to save me from a life I hated; he was strong and I was weak, and I liked him and leaned on him—leaned on him, and he failed me."

"Out of suffering you shall be made strong," repeated Mrs. Archer softly. "No one could call you weak now, dear. How long is it—may I know, Miriam?—since you saw your husband?"

"It is five years. I have never seen him since the hour he married me."

Mrs. Archer was silent for a moment, passing her hand gently over her friend's dark and softly rippling hair.

"I wish that he could see you," she said. "It is foolish; but I can't help wishing that. You may have been a pretty girl but you are a beautiful woman now. It might punish him to see what he has lost."

The girl gave a little bitter laugh.

"May he never know the extent of his misfortune!" she said. "I hope that I may never see him. I pray that he is dead."

* * * * * *

The Reverend James Archer and the two ladies who accompanied him had a walk of a mile along the sloppy roads of Eastwick before they reached the parish schoolroom, in which, nightly, most of the respectable young men of Mr. Archer's flock were wont to assemble for the mild recreation of newspapers, bagatelle, and coffee. The lights showing through the red-curtained window illumined the dreary surroundings, and were a welcome sight to the ladies, whose cloaks and faces were wet with the drizzling rain. Ere they reached the little iron gate before which some few men and boys were congregated, a carriage drew up, the lamps flashing brightly, the horse's spirits in no wise damped by their wet skins.

"The inevitable Hicks!" whispered Miriam, as two ladies wrapped in furs descended and passed over the wet pavement to the schoolroom door, followed by a tall and powerfully-built man, who dutifully carried more wraps upon his arm.

Mr Archer called his wife's attention to this gentleman.

"That's Keene," he said, "the brother I thought he would come."

Mrs. King leant forward a little eagerly.

"What did you say was his name?' she asked. "Keene? I wonder I was never told that Lady Hicks's name was Keene. And how, then, do you spell it?"

But Mr. Archer did not answer. Some one coming up at that instant claimed his attention, and the two women passed alone into the lamplit, heated room. It was full of young men, who were turning over with scant interest the newspapers and books plentifully strewed over the long table, intent on a game of dominoes, or playing bagatelle. Lady Hicks and her daughter were disappearing in the direction of the cloak-room, and the gentleman who had escorted them, divested of the heap of wraps he had brought in, stood, with his back to the roaring fire surveying the scene, a look of calm preoccupation on his bronzed face.

The two ladies came quickly up the long room, Mrs. Archer unwinding, as she advanced, a voluminous black woollen scarf from her throat and head. Miriam thickly veiled and shrouded in a long fur cloak. As she glanced at the man by the fire, she suddenly wavered in her progress, but only for a moment; as her friend looked at her questioningly, she came on again, and in another instant was in the cloak-room receiving the pleasant greeting of Lady Hicks and of Ella her daughter. A few minutes later Mrs. Archer, deep in the recital of some parish news, chancing to look in Miriam's direction, was somewhat startled at the girl's appearance.

"Come, dear, take off your cloak!" she said. "Are you not well, child, or is it only that lace veil which makes you look so pale?"

"I don't feel quite well," Miriam answered a little unsteadily. "Should you mind it very much if I went home?"

"Dear Mrs. King," cried Lady Hicks, "you never are intending to walk! Of course you will take my carriage. Ella, go and ask uncle Kingston to come and speak to me for a moment. He will fetch the coachman from the inn at once."

"Oh, no—oh, no!" demurred Mrs. King hurriedly. "Please do not—pray do not go, Miss Hicks. It is a minute's faintness; it will pass."

They would not heed her suggestion that they should leave her to recover by herself; and after a little further delay, she, having unclasped the handsome cloak and thrown off her hat and veil, declared herself ready to accompany them.

"Her pallor does not spoil her beauty," Lady Hicks decided, glancing with admiration at the proud cold face. "She will be a revelation to Kingston. I wonder what he will think of her?"

In two minutes she had asked him.

"Is not she beautiful? What do you think of her?"

She did not look at her brother as she asked the question, but followed with her eyes the graceful black robed figure moving down the room; had it been otherwise, to one other person that night a revelation would have been made. Mr. Keene's face had paled from its healthy bronze to an ashen hue, and the eyes, looking out from under the broad, rather heavy brow, had in them a wild surprise, a questioning horror.

"Do you know her? How does she call herself?" he asked; and Lady Hicks must have been indeed preoccupied not to notice the sudden hoarseness of his voice.

"Do I know her?" she repeated, smiling. "Did not I tell you all about her as we drove here? She is the Mrs. King, you know, who lives with the Archers. I call her quite an acquisition. You will hear her sing—her voice is as fine as her face. Come with me; I will introduce you."

But Mr. Keene drew back; and, as his sister left him to join Mrs. Archer, he turned his back on the bright and cheerful room, and, leaning an elbow on the chimney piece and his head on his hand, looked down with unseeing eyes and heavily beating heart into the fire. A great unmeaning buzzing and hum of voices was sounding in his ears; his thoughts were in a tumultuous whirl whose wild confusion no effort of his will could steady.

"I must get out into the fresh air," he said to himself.

He moved down the room, intending to slip out at the door unobserved; but a fresh young voice cried as he passed—

"Uncle Kingston! Oh, will you come here, if you please? You play chess, do you not? Then will you go on with this game and release Mrs. King, who is going to sing? Mrs. King, let me introduce uncle Kingston—Mr. Keene."

A pair of serious and steady gray eyes set beneath delicately marked level brows, were raised with no embarrassment, with not the faintest sign of recognition, to Mr. Keene's face, and calmly refused to lower themselves before the glance they encountered. Mrs. King rose from the table, and, as she did so, with her two hands she lightly swept the chess-men from the board.

"You must begin a fresh game," she said gently to the intelligent-looking lad whom she had been instructing in the intricacies of the game.

As he watched her action, a thrill that was almost a shudder passed through Kingston Keene's strong frame at sight of the single plain gold ring on one white and shapely hand. He sank down upon the seat she had vacated, looking vacantly at the chess-board before him and idly fingering the men. He was a nervous gentleman, surely, thought the lad at his side, observing how the brown hands trembled.

Presently through the hushed room rang the solemn tones of a rich contralto voice. It was always said by Ella Hicks, after indulging an appreciative audience there with her little treble pipe, that the schoolroom was delightful to sing in. Mr. Archer, who was musical, stood transfixed, a light of pleasure on his face; he had not heard Mrs. King's voice to such advantage before. The room seemed to throb to the rafters with the melodious sounds. The voice, thrilling and accusing, shook the heart of one man who listened, and the eyes of the boy at his side grew wet with tears, The singer had been excellently taught; in addition to the natural talent she possessed, she had learnt the art of pronouncing her words distinctly, of weighting them with deepest feeling. Not a syllable was missed of those she now sang, and there was a passionate complaint conveyed in them beyond what they themselves or the music to which they were wedded expressed.

"Alone through summer sunshine,
Alone through winter's rain,
Alone 'neath sheltering hedgerows,
Or 'mid life's scorching plain.

Smiles wreathed in feigned pleasure,
Heart racked with trouble sore;
Alone, alone in a pitiless world
For ever and evermore!

"Never to fill youth's promise,
Never to know life's bliss,
Never to rest in shielding arms,
To feel no infant's kiss:

To be, 'mid love of others,
Outcast, weary and sore;
Alone, alone in a pitiless world
For ever and evermore!"

As the last notes died away, Mr. Keene awoke as if from a dream. He turned to the lad beside him; who, having pulled out a large red handkerchief, was blowing his nose vigorously, looking at his neighbor the while with moistened apologetic eyes.

"She makes ye feel bad, don't she, sir?" he asked. "I never heerd one give it tongue like her before."

For all answer Mr. Keene pushed the chess-board from him and rose. He crossed over to his sister.

"Agatha, you will excuse me if I do not wait for you. I am going to walk home."

Lady Hicks turned a startled face on him.

"Home!" she repeated. "To walk! Why? Aren't you well?"

"Well enough; but the room is stifling. Don't you feel it so? I am longing for a mouthful of air."

Without further ado, he passed down the room. Close by the outer door Mrs. King was standing, apparently watching a game of Merris, over which two youths knit puzzled brows. Involuntarily Mr. Keene stopped. Against his will he looked over the bent heads of the young men to the calm and beautiful face on the other side of the table. Mrs. King kept her eyes lowered; but, as one of the players broke into a loud laugh over a blunder he had made, she smiled sympathetically, then raised her eyes, and quiet and unembarrassed, met for a moment the look fastened on her; then slowly the black lashes dropped over the cloudless eyes, and she was again apparently absorbed in the game.

A minute more and Mr. Keene had gained the wet road, and was splashed recklessly homeward through pools of muddy water, unheeding the pelting of the rain or the dark discomfort of the way.

"An odd fellow, that Keene!" the Rector remarked a couple of hours later, as he with his woman folk also tramped the Eastwick roads. "What made him rush off in that strange fashion? Fine-looking man, is he not? What do you think of him, Mrs. King?"

Mrs. King thought a great deal more than she choose to say. Among other things, she thought of the difference which five years had made in the appearance of this man of whom they spoke—of Kingston Keene—her husband! Was she herself altered as much as that? At any rate, he had recognized her instantly—she was sure of that—and she said to herself that the change in her had been more inward than outward. It had been with a sense of triumph she had stood calmly to-night in the man's presence, and had recognized that her strongest feeling towards him was now one of contemptuous indifference. After the first shock of the surprise—after that first sick quailing—she had felt and shown no embarrassment in the meeting. She knew this, and was proud—proud of the strength and the composure which had come to her at her need; and she walked homeward with a firm step and proudly-carried head—free, she told herself, free and independent!

One Dog to Thousands of Sheep.

An immense drove of sheep went stumbling, tumbling, and trotting out of Newark the other day, on their way to Philadelphia. They seemed to walk all over one another, bumped together, and crowded until it seemed as though some must have been trodden under the feet of the others. A rough-looking countryman trudged ahead in the middle of the road, and the sheep followed closely. He seemed as dusty, ill-humored and out of sorts as the sheep themselves.

In the rear, a tall and gaunt farmer tramped along, with a long hickory stick in his hand. At every few steps he uttered a peculiar cry, and whenever the sheep lagged behind, he touched them up with his hickory stick.

At his heels, and bringing up the tail end of the procession, was a long-bodied lean and scarred shepherd's dog. He ran with his nose close to the ground, and apparently paid little attention to the drove. But when two of the sheep got astray, and trotted into a garden, the dog jumped over the fence and chased them back in line in no time.

As he forced them into the herd the sheep swerved away from him. The dog trotted around the drove, making it still more compact in form, and then returned to his master, who by this time was walking on the side walk beside the writer.

"How many sheep are there in the drove?" was asked.

"Well, about eight hundred."

"You're way off," said the man with a good-natured grin. "There's three thousand three hundred and twenty-eight."

"Where do yo take them to?"

"We drive them from here to Philadelphia, selling them on the way to butchers, or whoever wants to buy them, and getting rid of all that remains, in the 'City of Brotherly Love.'"

"They are owned in Philadelphia, are they?"

"No, they ain't," said the man, quickly, "they are owned by A. B. Matthews, of Kansas City, Mo., and they travel about fiftee nmiles a day, and they're an infernal nuisance!"

After this he walked along in silence for some time, and then made a general remark that indicated that his life was not one of unalloyed happiness.

"If it wasn't fur that dorg," he said kicking the brute affectionately as he passed him, "my mate and me could never get these cattle through on time, but that animal is worth ten men. Good sheep dorgs, you know, are scarce now in this part of the country. I wouldn't take anything on earth for mine. He's as faultless as can be, and he knows as much as any man, I don't care who he is. If I should tell you some of the very wonderful things that dorg has done, you'd call me a liar, and as I don't wish no such reputation I'll be quiet."

Reflection, caused by this thought, overcome him, and he trudged along in absolute silence for some time. At last he raised his head and continued:

"When we get at the end of a day's march, if we find that three or four of the sheep are missing, I can send that dorg back after them if they are ten miles away, and it don't make any difference where the sheep are or who's got them, that dorg will get them to me, or I'll eat the whole drove, hoofs, bones and wool."—N. Shoeing Horses.

In response to an inquiry from a subscriber as to the propriety of shoeing horses, the editor of the Massachusetts Ploughman says: As the sole object of shoeing the horse is to prevent too great a wear of the ground surface of the outer crust of the hoof, it is very obvious that in certain districts where the roads are sandy and loamy the shoe may be dispensed with, much to the relief of the animal and to the pecuniary benefit of its owner. On pavements and macadamized roads the wear is too great and the foot must be protected. There are very many young animals that are shod merely because it is a custom to do so, and not because necessity calls for it. Where the shoe has never been applied, the hoof takes on a natural hardness, which fits it for an astonishing amount of work without injury. When it is desirable to remove the shoes entirely, the foot should be gradually inured to this new order of things by slow work, otherwise lameness will follow, especially in those cases where the owner has allowed the sole and frog to be mutilated by the knife of the blacksmith. These parts ought never to be touched with instruments. On icy roads, with heavy draught, it is probable that calkins cannot be given up, but these projections to the shoe are employed uselessly in many cases, much to the injury of the animal, especially where they are not all of equal height. In fine, there is no reason why every farmer should not try the experiment of using his horses without shoes especially on the farm work.

Nerviline, What is it?

Polson's NERVILINE is a combination of the most potent pain relieving substances known to medical science. The constant progress made in this department of science points upward and onward. Nerviline is the latest developement in this movement, and embodies the latest discoveries. For neuralgia, cramps, pains in the head—external, internal, and local—Nerviline has no equal. Expend 10 cents in the purchase of a sample bottle of Nerviline and be convinced of its marvellous power over pain. Sold by druggists. Large bottles 25 cents, at all druggists.

How Would it do?

This bad weather requires a remedy. It seems as if the whole responsibility should rest on Vennor and Wiggins, for we had some kind of weather before they appeared upon the scene. How would it do to string them up? Would it make things better? Another hint of importance—don't hang on to your corns as weather indicators. Better string them out root and branch. Putnam'z Painless Corn Extractor will do it quickly, painlessly, and with certainty. Don't buy dangerous flesh-eating substitutes. Get Putnam's, and no other.

THERE is a curious diversity of taste among smokers as to the kind of pipe they prefer. Some like the clay pipe best, others again the meerschaum some must have their pipe well seasoned before they can enjoy it, others again must have a new pipe and throw it away whenever it becomes a little old. But though this diversity of taste among them is curious, it is not at all curious that there is substantial unanimity among them that the "Myrtle Navy" brand of Messrs. Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star.

Oysters.

The oyster industry is rapidly passing from the hands of the fishermen not those of oyster culturists. The oyster, being sedentary except for a few days in the earliest stages of its existence, is easily exterminated in any given locality, since, although it may not be possible for the fishermen to rake up from the bottom every individual, wholesale methods of capture soon retult in covering up or otherwise, destroying the oyster banks or reefs, as the communities of oysters are technically termed. The main difference between the oyster industry of America and that of Europe lies in the fact that in Europe the native beds have long since been practically destroyed, perhaps not more than 6 or 7 per cent of the oysters of Europe passing from the native beds directly into the hands of the consumer. It is probable that from 60 to 75 per cent. are raised from the seed in artifical parks, the remainder having been laid down for a time to increase in size and flavor in the shoal waters along the coasts.

In the United States, on the other hand, from 30 to 40 per cent. of all the oysters consumed are carried from the native beds directly to market. The oyster fishery is everywhere carried on in the most reckless manner, and in all directions oyster grounds are becoming deteriorated, and in some cases have been entirely destroyed. It remains to be seen whether the governments of the States will regulate the oyster fisheries before it is too late, or will permit the destruction of these vast reservoirs of food. At present the oyster is one of the cheapest articles of diet in the United States, while in England, as has been well said, an oyster is usually worth as much as, or more, than a new laid egg. It can hardly be expected that the price of American oysters will always remain so low as at present; but, taking into consideration the great wealth of the natural beds along the entire Atlantic coast, it seems probable that a moderate amount of protection will keep the price of seed oysters far below the European rates, and that the immense stretches of submerged land along our coasts especially suited for oyster planting may be utilized and may be made to produce an abundant harvest at a much less cost than that which accumpanies the complicated system of culture in France and Holland.

Elizabethan Medicine.

The housewife was the great alley of the doctor in the days of good Queen Bess; in the still room the lady with the ruff and farthingale was ever busy in the preparation of cordials, conserves, cooling waters and simples. "All the herbs and flowers of field and garden passed through her fair white hands." Poppy-water was good for weak stomachs; mint and rue-water was efficacious for the head and brain; and even walnuts yielded a cordial. Then there was cinnamon-water, and the essence of cloves, gilly-flowers, and lemon-water, sweet marjoram-water, and spirits of ambergris.

Some of the remedies gravely believed in in those days will make the reader smile. Who would suppose now-a-days that the herb called shepherd's pouch held in the hand would stop the bleeding of a severe sword wound, or a dram of scrapings from a human skull taken daily in white wine stay hæmorhage? Lady Macbeth's doctor—one though, of Shakespeare's time—would have composed a poultice of pounded garden snails, while a quart of ale, dram of treacle, handful of rue, and a spoonful of tin shavings, boiled together, composed a remedy against the bite of a mad dog. The plague medicines were very numerous, and in all probability never effectual: if the patient recovered at all, he had to thank his own constitution. One of the plague waters is composed of rue, agrimony, wormwood, sage, ringwort, dragon's root, pimpernel, marigold, fever-few, burnet, sorrel, wood betony, brown ring-wort, tormentil, rosemary, angelica, burdocks, green walnuts, shredded into a kind of salad, and mixed with roots; these were infused for three days, covered close, and then distilled. "Some think," says old Burton, "physicians kill as many as they save, and who can tell how many murders they make in a year, that may freely kill man and have a reward for it?" Who, indeed, especially if allowed to prescribe as above? But Burton, who wrought over sixty years after the death of Elizabeth. recommends as infallable a human skull ground to powder, the corns in a horse's legs, and a wolf's liver.

The whole system of medicine in the days under review was founded on a series of curious theoretical views, partly those of Paracelsus. This physician divided the body into humours and spirits; the humours were blood, phlegm, choler, and melancholy. Courage was supposed to have its seat in the heart and stomach, reason in the head, and passion in the liver: a white livered man was a coward, and he who would not fight had no stomach for fighting.

A young married woman writes to the New York Crematory Company: "Can you burn a man before he dies? If you can I will be pleased to give you a job on my husband, who is of no earthly use to me or any one else."

TO REMOVE STAINS.—Tea, coffee, and fruit-stains are easily removed from napkins and table cloths (if done as soon as stained, all the better) by drawing the linen tightly over a vessel, and pouring boiling water through the stains.

GOOD WHITEWASH.—Walls ought first to be washed with thin lime and water; then take a bushel of lime, mix it well with plenty of water, dissolve three pounds of glue in water over the fire, and again whitewash the wall. It should be made the thickness of paint. Dwelling rooms should be whitewashed at least yearly.

Hoops and bustles will be all the fashion next Spring, and six fashionable women will once more manage to occupy all the room in a street car.

Wife—"John, our coachman must go!"—"But why, my dear? Our only daughter is married."—"Yes, but—John, I'm not so very old myself, you know!"

"Has that baby got the jaundice?" asked a cranky old bachelor of a young mother.—"Of course it hasn't. Why do you think so?"—"Because it is such an ugly yeller."

"Mamma," said a little girl, "I think I've got ammonia." "You must not say ammonia, dear; you must say pnuemonia.' "But it ain't new, for I think I had it yesterday."

Little Eddie took a curious freak when he went to bed the other night and attempted to say his prayers backward. "Why, Eddie, what are you trying to do?" asked his mother. "Only trying to say my prayers inside out."

"Do you remember that young man who used to live next door to me, and who sang every night!" "Yes, I remember him." "Well, he has taken to drinking, and is getting lower and lower every day. "Well, I always thought his tone a little too high."

A cynical old bachelor, who firmly believes that all women have something to say on all subjects, recently asked a female: "Well, madam, what do you hold on this question of female suffrage?" To him the lady responded calmly, "Sir, I hold my tongue."

"Your daughter! It is impossible. Why, you look more like twin sisters." "No, I assure you she is my only daughter," replied the pleased mother. And the polite old gentleman spoiled it all by remarking, "Well, she certainly looks old enough to be your sister."

An Eastern man received a telegram from the West announcing the sudden demise of a relative, and replied, "Send on the remains at once." No telegram was received in answer, but a few days later a letter came saying simply: "Thar ain't no remains. He war kicked by a mul."

An Austin man who went fishing recently lost his lunch on the road, and went back to look for it. Meeting a negro who was picking his teeth, he asked, "Did you pick up anything in the road?"—"No, sah, I didn't pick up nuffin—couldn't a dog have found it and eat it up?"

The following advertisement, it is said, appeared recently in a French newspaper: "Found—On Sunday last, a lace mitten, embroidered with pearls. If the person who lost it will be kind enough to leave the other one at the office of this paper, she will greatly oblige the person who found the first."

"Where are you going, pet?" asked a woman of her husband, with whose relatives she was not on very good terms. "I am going to call on my folks," he replied; "but is not this coat rather shabby?" "Yes," replied his wife, turning up her nose; "but as long as you don't go among decent people it is good enough."

How little we know of the inner life of our closest friend! While we may imagine that his thoughts are of friendly serenity he, in thinking may muse: "Strange he does not mention the five dollars he borrowed from me." Ah, human nature, thou art a deceptive rascal. Thou amjest the smile of the sweet herb, and thinkest the thought of quinine.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A cookery book says, "Always smell a salt codfish before buying it." We always do, and after buying it too—a good many days after. In fact, one can smell a salt codfish without buying it at all if he gets within ten rods of it. The odor of a salt codfish is like the darkness that once settled on Egypt; it is something that can be felt.

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

Mr. Swan has estimated the life of an electric glow lamp at about 5,800 hours. This is a very high average, and the conditions under which it was attained, in the case of the Swan lamp at least, must have been exceptionally favorable.

Suberine, the characteristic component of cork, is a true fat, saponifiable by alkalies and oxidizable by nitric acid, which converts it into a mixture of suberic acid and cerie acid. It is composed of the mixed glycerides of phellonic and stearic acids.

Vulcanized fibre has been employed for valves for marine condensors. It is said to do much better than india-rubber. Valves of this fibre do not skew or corrugate, withstand well the action of water and oil, and give very little trouble after they have been carefully fitted in place.

Aseptol, a new antiseptic, says M. E. Tramser, has for its scientific name orthoxyphenyl—sulphurous acid. It is an acid phenol, capable of neutralising ammoniacal bases. It is said to be preferable to phenol as an antiseptic, because it possesses the decided advantage of not being poisonous.

The eider duck does not, Dr. Sundstrom of Stockholm, has ascertained, take her young during the summer into the ocean, as is so generally supposed, but remains with them among the islands on the coast. It appears that the eider duck has greatly increased in the south of Sweeden during the last few years.

Snails in a state of captivity can, Dr. Rawitz of Berlin, has discovered, be fed on paper. Dr. Kessel confirms this fact by a statement based on his own observations. He says that after feeding snails with highly calcareous paper for some time he found abnormal calcareous deposits in their monstrously developed shells.

It is maintained by Herr S. Ralisher that no steps have established the development of electricity during the conversion of water into steam, and that even upon electrified surfaces the steam which arises is electrically neutral. He also states that it can be experimentally demonstrated that no electricity results from the condensation of the vapor of the atmosphere.

A first study on the paraliax of the sun by M. Bouquet de la Grye has been submitted to the Academy of Sciences, Paris. This paper is founded on the calculations made in Mexico by the author and M. F. Arago during the late transit of Venus. From the measurements then taken there results a mean parallax of 8.76, with an apparent approximations of one-hundreth of a second.

Professor Hellriegel has made special researches on the influence of heat and light upon the development of plants. At a constant temperature of 40° C. in the soil the roots of barley cannot develop themselves. A constant temperature of 30° is not destructive, but decidedly injurious. A constant temperature of 20° is best adapted to the wants of the plants, but one of 10° is not distinctly injurious.

For the rapid preparation of standard solutions of carbon disulphide, M. A. Livache takes a solution of soap, with which he incorporates a certain quantity of petroleum. In this solution he can dissolve on stirring more than 200 hundred grams of disulphide of carbon per liter for 150 grams of soap. The solution so prepared, after water is added, remains perfectly limpid, the disulphide of carbon not separating out.

It must be of importance to dyers to learn that Mr H. Koechlin has published a new method of fixing chromium oxide, founded on the proporty of alkaline solutions of chrome of giving up their oxide to organic fibres on being left in contact for some hours. Thus, if cotton is steeped in a mixture of two parts acetate of chrome at 16°, (Beaume,) two parts caustic soda at 39°, and one part of water and after 12 hours' immersion the cotton is washed, the mordanting is complete.

Bush Horses.

From the mode of life the half-wild bush horses of Australia lead, unaccustomed to the hand of man, and not dependent upon him for food, they learn to look upon him with alarm and suspicion, and it requires some manœuvring to approach them without creating a premature panic. On the approach of a horseman one or two on the outside sound an alarm and make off toward the rest, who thereupon rush together, and a general concentration takes place. It is a fine sight to see a herd of these horses, of every size, age, and color, mustering in this manner from hill and valley, as if by common consent. Though physically very powerful, they assume no threatening aspect; their safety lies in their speed; and as they eye the suspicious object their meaning is obvious. They say, as plainly as looks and gestures can say: "Now, what do you want? If you are a stranger, pass on quietly; but if you are for a gallop, we are quite ready to try of what mettle that horse of yours is made."

Establishing Relationship.

"Ma, is the devil the father of lies?"

"Yes, dear."

"And is a lie an invention?"

"Yes."

"Then necessity is the devil's wife, ain't she, ma?"

"How do you make that out?"

"Why, she's the mother of invention."

It has been proved, by repeated experiments, that straw saturated with a solution of lime or common whitewash, is incombustible. The fact is of great importance, especially as thatch is not only rendered fireproof, but more durable. A solution of alum has been tried, but being soluble the rain destroys its virtues.

DOMESTIC RECEIPTS.

THE QUEEN OF PUDDINGS.—One pint of bread crumbs, (not crumbs of stale bread unfit for the table,) one quart of sweet milk, one cup of sugar, and the well beaten yolk of four eggs, the grated rind of one lemon, and a piece of butter the size of an egg. Bake until done, but not watery. Whip the whites of four eggs, and beat in one cup of pulverized sugar, in which you have put the juice of the lemon. Spread over the pudding a layer of jelly or raspberry jam; then pour over it the whites of the eggs. Set it in the oven to brown slightly. Serve cold with cream. This is an excellent dessert for an elaborate dinner, as it may be made early in the morning and so be out of the way.

STEAMED FRUIT PUDDING.—One pint of flour, two teaspoonsful baking-powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, one cup of milk, two tablespoonfuls melted butter, two eggs, one half cup of sugar, one pint berries, or ripe fruit, or one cup raisins, stoned and halved. Mix the baking powder and salt with the flour; add the milk and melted butter. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the sugar, and beat them well into the dough. Then add the whites of the eggs, beaten stiff, and then the fruit, well rolled in flour. Steam two hours, and serve with lemon, or foamy sauce.

CHESTNUT STUFFING FOR ROAST FOWL.—Shell one quart of large chestnuts; pour on boiling water, and remove the inner brown skin; boil in salted water or stock, till soft; mash fine; take half for the stuffing, and mix with it one cup of fine cracker crumbs; season with one teaspoonful of salt, one saltspoonful of pepper, and one teaspoonful of chopped parsley; moisten with one third of a cup of melted butter.

LEMON SAUCE.—Two cups hot water, one cup sugar, three heaping teaspoonsful corn starch, grated rind and juice of one lemon, and one tablespoonful of butter. Boil the water and sugar five minutes, and add the corn starch, wet in a little cold water; cook eight or ten minutes, and add the lemon rind, juice, and butter; stir until the butter is melted, and serve at once.

WHITE CANDY.—One quart of gradulated sugar, one pint of water, two tablespoonsfuls of vinegar; boil just as you do molasses candy, but do not stir it. You can tell when it is done by trying it in cold water. Pull as if it were molasses candy, and have a dish near by with some vanilla in it, and work in enough to flavour as you pull.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—One cup of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, half a cup of grated chocolate, a piece of butter the size of a walnut; stir constantly, and let it boil until it is thick; then turn it out on buttered plates; when it begins to stiffen, mark it in squares, so that it will break readily when cold.

CELERY.—A dish which is sure to find favor with lovers of celery, is made by taking the stalks which are not thoroughly bleached, cutting them in pieces of about an inch long, and cooking as you would asparagus, the same length of time being required to boil it; season with milk, pepper and salt.

SCALLOPED CHICKEN.—Take equal parts of cold chicken, boiled rice or macaroni, and tomato sauce. Put in layers in a shallow dish, and cover with buttered crumps; bake till brown. Cold roast turkey, using stuffing and gravy, may be prepared in the same way.

CHESTNUT SAUCE.—Remove the fat from the dripping-pan, add nearly a pint of hot water, thicken with flower which has been cooked in brown butter; add salt and pepper and the remainder of the chestnuts.

FOAMY SAUCE.—Whites of two eggs, one cup of sugar, one cup boiling milk, juice of one lemon; beat the whites of the eggs till foamy, but not dry; add the milk and lemon juice.

PARSNIPS boiled, then sliced and browned in butter, are delicious.

WINTER SQUASH is best when cut in pieces and baked.

Secret Societies in Germany.

One of the reasons of the successes of the Socialists is the astuteness displayed by the central authorities in party tactics. Blind fanaticism is no longer the chief characteristic of the social Democracy. Of Burke, that great enemy of revolution, it is said that he took up every cause that he was engaged it like a fanatic and defended it like a philosopher. It may be said of the leadels of this party, that, although fanatics in their cause they display a wonderful amount of sagacity in the choice of means and methods for compassing their ends. Their plans of operations for eluding the law where resistance would be dangerous or hopeless are remarkable for coolness of judgment and thoroughness in execution. Ministers, like von Puttkamer, defend the law against the Socialists on the ground that "Social Democracy, as far as it is of a revolutionary and subversive character, must hide its actions in darkness." But the concealment does not decrease but rather increases the efficiency of its organization, Thus, e. g., in direct contravention of the first paragraph of the Socialist law, which forbids all associations of a social Democratic tendency, they manage to spread their ramifications like a network all ever the country. Although meetings of every Socialistic kind are strictly forbidden, yet, as a matter of fact, they are held whenever it is necessary for party purposes and under the very nose of the police authorities. The whole country is mapped out by the Socialists into electoral districts, officered in each case by "trusted persons," who act as delegates at provincial meetings, and these again act in concert with the common centre (verkehrsstelle) in Switzerland. To facilitate intercourse in the local centres, without arousing the suspicion of the authorities, the "trusted persons" of the district convene meetings from time to time which takes the form of friendly gatherings in houses or excursions into the country. Under the innocent title of singing classes, smoking clubs, and the like, associations are formed for party purposes. Sometimes the character and object of Socialist organizations and meetings are no secret to the authorities, but are connived at because it is not always desirable to act up to the utmost rigor of the law, or because it is advisable to ignore the illegality of the proceedings so as to gain information profitable to the powers that be. Much latitude of this kind is allowed at election time for obvious reasons.—[The Fortnightly Review.

Two Cautious Women.

"All women are alike in their fear of the cars," said an Illinois Central conductor. "They carry their caution to absurd extremes. That reminds me of a little story. Down in the southern part of the State we have up at road crossings some of the old-fashioned signs, "Look out for the cars when the bell rings."

"At one of the crossings the other day two women came up, driving an old horse hitched to a buggy. They looked all about and couldn't see any cars, but happened to read the sign.

'Stop,' said one, 'I hear a bell.'

"They both listened, and sure enough, they heard a bell tinkling. One of the women got out, and amid considerable excitement took hold of the horse's bridle. The other one tightened her grip on the lines, set her jaws, and prepared for the worst. They looked anxiously up the track for the train, but still couldn't see it, though they could hear the bell a little plainer than before. They waited and waited.

"Five minutes passed, then ten, and still no train. The old horse went to sleep, while the women's nerves from long straining threatened to throw them into hysterics. Nearer and nearer came the bell against which the sign warned them, and so they stood stall.

"In about a quarter of an hour an old brindle cow came walking down the pasture by the side of the track, chewing her cud and monotnously jingling her bell. One of the women cried from nervousness, and the other one got mad at the railroad company, and said they were nothing but mean old monopolies anyway."—Chicago Herald.

The Expansion of Germany.

In Germany itself the foundation of a colonial empire has come to be one of the most prominent of national questions; and, as is well-known, Prince Bismarck has placed himself at the head of this new and irresistible movement. The German nation has two objects in view—fresh openings and opportunities for its commerce and new fields for its redundant population, without that national severance from the mother country which is now the result of German settlement in Australia or North America. The Germans are becoming anxious ultimately to secure that emigration shall mean what it now means for Englishmen, not the loss of the national population, but merely its redistribution within the national boundaries. In the Fatherland these colonial aspirations are rapidly taking very practical shape. The commercial Geographical Society of Berlin has for some years made a special advocacy of colonial extension, and now we have an actual Association for the Acquisition of Colonies, and among several new periodicals specially dealing with this subject, one—the Deutsche Kolonial-Zeitung—wholly devoted to securing a colonial empire for the German nation. German commercial energy is just now second only to that of England, and has established itself firmly on nearly every coast. But in regard to new fields for its redundant population no active measures have as yet been taken. It is true that until quite recently there was hardly any area of territory outside Germany that was German soil, and the consequence was that there was no predetermining causes of patriotism to direct the German emigrant to any particular locality. Thus it is that the German patriot is now keenly regretting that there are 7 000,000 of German born citizens in the United States; that much of the prosperity of Russia depends entirely on the German element in the population and that in the quondam Provinces of the Turkish Empire in Southeastern Europe Germans are forced to seek those opportunities from which they are crowded out in the Fatherland. And just as one cause of German emigration is avoidance of the conscription, so the denationalization of so many Germans of enterprise and spirit is regarded not only as so much loss of strength to the German nation, but as so much accession of strength to certain rivals and possible foes. All this is keenly felt in Germany and the argument is common, "Why should not Germany as well as England have new national territories sufficient for the expansion of the nation, sufficient to allow all Germans to push their way without being forced to sever themselves from the Fatherland?"—[The Nineteenth Century.

"Mamma, be late suppers bad?" "Yes, my child, very bad." "What makes 'em bad?" "Why it injures the health to eat just before going to bed." "Oh, I thought maybe it injured the health to go to bed right after supper." Johnny wasn't hustled off to bed as early as usual that night, just the same.

"No, ma'am!" exclaimed the provoked young man to a young lady, who, on the refusal of her favorite, had asked him to accompany her to a party, "I don't play second fiddle to any one!" "No one asked you to play second fiddle," replied the girl with a smile: "I only asked you to be my beau."

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 1, 1885.

—The Dominion Parliament will doubtless be called upon, during this coming cession, to consider the advisability of reducing letter postage from three to two cents. The experience of the United States, since adopting a similar change, is a powerful argument in its favor, and, as it is a matter which interests all, we hope the present government may see its way clear to reduce the rates.

TURN OVER A LEAF.

This is an opportune time to make resolutions for improvement. The first day of the year we are led to look over the past as well as anticipate for the future; and, while it is folly to grieve or encourage despondency, on account of the shortcomings of the past, it is desirable to make amends for the future. Then, in turning over a new leaf, let the pages of character for 1885 be an improvement on that any former year in our lives.

Nominations.

Glenelg nomination was well attended, and, owing to the general increase in taxation throughout the township, a more than ordinary interest was taken in the proceedings, the old council however explained, to the general satisfaction of the ratepayers present, the cause of the increased taxes. The following were nominated: for reeve, Thos. Davis and F. McRae; For deputy reeve, J. A. McMillan and Wm. Jackson; Councillors, N. Dunsmore, P. Neil, Arch. McCuaig, Christopher Williams T. Sullivan, J. Ellison, Peter Neil and Ed. Rutledge. Considerable spouting was indulged in for nearly three hours during which time, F. MacRae resigned his nomination, also Wm. Jackson for deputy, leaving Davis and McMillan elected by acclamation for reeve and deputy respectfully, C. Williams and Edward Rutledge also resigned leaving the following six candidates for councillors, Messrs. Dunsmore, Patrick Neil, Peter Neil, McCuaig, Sullivan and Ellison. The prospects are that the old council will be all re-elected.

Osprey nominated for Reeve Messrs. T. Gamey and A. McIntyre, deputy reeve E. Potts and J. Sing. Councillors, J. Hudson. J. Inkster, T. Johnston, Jas. Sinclair, John Speers and Joseph Taylor.

Owen Sound nominated for Mayor, John Rutherford; Reeve, John Chisholm; 1st Deputy Reeve, John W. Frost and W. A. McClean; 2nd Deputy Reeve, J. C. Miller. Councillors, Bay Ward, John. Fox, Geo. McDougall, James Fife, Wm. Brown, J. H. Little, A. Pratt, W. A. Joseph, Sam'l Scott, J. Sanderson; River Ward, R. Malcom, S. McClean, Jas. Brown, Ewiflg Cameron.

Meaford nominated for Mayor, C. Watt, and J. J. Johnston; Reeve, A. Thompson and R. Agnew; Deputy-Reeve, D. McCann, and J. Hill; Councillors—North Ward. J. Groom, H. Law, M. Robinson, H. Carson, G. P. McIntosh, J. J. Johnston; East Ward, J. Sparling, C. Little, W. Harkness, C. Barber, J. Hogg; West Ward B. Snider, S. Borden, C. Burns, H. McDonald, Wm. Cook, Wm. Gibson, A. W. Carley.

Holland nominated for Reeve, John Cameron, by acclamation, Deputy Reeve, Wm. Norton and A. Shute. Councillors. J. Galbraith, T. Williscroft. M. Howey, John Murray, and R. McKinnett.

Durham nominated Dr. Jamison, Mayor by acclamation.

Euphrasia nominated Gilray, Reeve by acclamation.

Midnight Mechanics.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I seldom pay attention to neighborhood slander, or petty jealousies; but, when my poverty renders me an object of suspicion of perpetrating filthy crimes justly due to my more aristocratic neighbors, whose table abounds with luxuries my family cannot dream of.

On the evening of the night upon which Mr. Benson's store was robbed, a young man came into my premises and borrowed a pair of shoes. The shoes, so borrowed, I claim the shoes in question, and if necessary will prove, by substantial testimony, that the villanious plot was well matured, and the loan of my shoes, on the night in question, shows that a cunning fox played the game

I am, yours respectfully,

South Side Glenelg.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—Being personally acquainted with you, I take this liberty for the first time to send you a few items for the STANDARD from the South of Glenelg. Being a subscriber to the STANDARD for some time and always receiving it punctually, I beg leave to state that I like its contents well. We, the people of the South, are generally good natured fellows. I do not know how many are getting the STANDARD. I would suggest to those who are not, to do so, and have communication from North to South. Your paper, Sir, being the only one in Glenelg, it ought to be well patronized by its residents

It being near election time, I suppose you will be busy receiving communication from this, that and the other fellow; but, how is it with Glenelg? We do not hear much complaints against the old members. Would it be a surprise for to see Glenelg, for the first time since her creation, going on the acclamation ticket for 1885? We hear rumors that the Deputy-Reeve is going to run against the Reeve. We would say to both, if elected by acclamation, to go home and be satisfied. We are well satisfied with our honest friend, Mr. A. McCuaig, in Ward No. 2, who has always discharged his duties faithfully and honestly, and we hope, should there be a poll demanded, that he will be well supported in the North.

Crops on this side in general were good, with the exception of oats, being a failure in some instances, from the effects of sowing frozen seed. Times are pretty dull on account of every thing being so low in price.

This (18th Dec.) is the coldest day felt for a long time. Snow about a foot deep on the level.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—The annual meeting of Meaford Road Union S. School took place on Wednesday, Dec. 10, '84.

Meeting opened by singing and prayer. Auditors' report of the finances read and adopted. Minutes of former meeting read and approved.

Constitution of school read. The Rev. Mr. McDowell being present, he was requested to nominate the superintendent for the coming year, (that power being vested in the minister of the circuit); but, instead of doing so he informed the school that he had come to form a Methodist Sabbath School then and there, and read that constitution, and when it was explained to him that we could make no change in the constitution without one month's notice to all interested parties, and then only by a two-thirds vote, it did not change his purpose or his manner of carrying it out; but said, "I am going to and I will;" and when an officer of the school ventured to say that he thought that our present constitution was better and more to this place (being of various creeds). He was abruptly told by the Rev. McD. that he (the officer) had nothing to say about it—not being a Methodist—and that if he did not like to join in with the proposed school he could step down and out. In like manner several who tried to speak were interrupted, and some received severe personal snubs by his Reverence until the evening was far advanced, and the meeting, by motion, adjourned, having made no election, when he told them "you need not, the Lord's not with you."

Teachers, officers and others interested met pursuant to adjournment on Dec. 24th, when the following were elected to the several offices for the coming year:—

Wm. Buchanan, Jr., Superintendent; Thos. Boland, Assistant Superintendent; J. I. Graham, Sec.-Treas.; Geo. Wright & Wm. Kells, Librarians; Misses. A. Kells & Lowie Bowler, Organists; J. C. Buchanan, Teacher Bible Class (Females); R. Douglass, Teacher Bible Class (Males); Miss E. Boland. Teacher 1st Testament Class; Miss A. Buchanan, Teacher 2nd Testament; Miss Kells, Junior Class (Girls); John Freeman, 1st Testament Class (Boys); James Buchanan, 2nd Testament Class (Boys); Miss Buchanan, Junior Class (Boys).

Resolved—That we, the scholars and friends of the Union Sabbath School, Meaford Road, feel ourselves in honor and duty-bound to show our gratitude towards the officers of our school who so nobly defended our rights and resented the priestly attempt of the Rev. Mr. McDowell to compell them to change the constitution of this school without first having due regard for the trust received from us, and that we sympathize with them on account of the abusive treatment they received from him on that occasion.

J. I. GRAHAM,
Secretary.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

On Tuesday evening, the 23rd inst., a free concert was given in the Town Hall in this village by the pupils of Flesherton public school, under the able management of D. S. Munroe, teacher. There was a good attendance. The hall was beautifully decorated with evergreens: and a very handsomely decorated Xmas tree was well laden with presents for the children. The pupils all deserve credit for the way each one done their parts in singing, and reciting. The most amusing part of the evening's entertainment was the distribution of the presents as each name was called, as there was all manner of presents for a large number of our citizens as well as scholars, a few of which we might mention. We observed Mr. C. Sproule and J. Blackburn got the mitten; also we noticed our good friend, the editor of the Advance, was not forgotten, as some kind friend remembered that scissors was much used by him, and at the same time his favorite companion, a tobacco pipe (made of clay) was not forgotten, accompanied by a missive which exhorted him to either cut his hair or put it up in curl papers. A pair of diminutive corsets were addressed by the unknown giver to Mr. Fred Leitch, "Dude." We do not know whether our young friend felt more grateful or flattered by the compliment. We hope, however, his corsets fit well. Mr. Rutherford, the stone cutter, was presented by the model of a tombstone with his own epitoph on it Ancient Xmas customs still have their charms for some of our citizens who yearly meet on Xmas morning to usher in the natal day of christendom with carol and song. A company of about 20 started out at midnight, Mr. J. Davis having volunteered the use of his team and a good large sleigh and himself as driver, they went the rounds of our village, making the welkin ring with their vocal music. The company was kindly entertained at a good number of houses with coffee, cakes and oysters.

The Sabbath School anniversary in the Presbyterian church on Xmas evening was as usual, quite a success. An interesting programme was gone through, principally by the children. Proceeds $70.00.

Flesherton Nomination was held on Monday last in the Town Hall and passed off quietly, but with one exception our old council, who must surely be men of clean hands, was re-elected by acclamation. No serious complaints were heard from any quarter of the township.

From some little feeling of opposition that arose between our present Reeve Dr. Christoe and Thom Wright at the last municipal election the Dr. was then notified to prepare himself for an opponen at the present election, therefore we expected to see an exciting contest but or some unknown reason the new aspirant did not make his appearance at all, the Dr., in his remarks while on the platform spoke very kindly of Mr, Wright, complimented him upon his ability at the council board, said he had no ill will toward Mr. Wright whatever.

In Ward No. 1, Mr. McCarthur, re-elected by acclamation; Ward No. 2 Mr. Elliott re-elected by acc.; Ward No. 3 Mr. Bleakley re-elected by acc.; Ward No. 4 Mr. Pedlar who has represented that ward for about 12 years although will be opposed by Mr. Mc Kee who Mr. Pedlar defeated last year Mr. McKee had no serious charge to bring against Mr. Pedlar. But thought he could represent the ward as well or a little better than Mr. P. between the two men we believe there is little choice, both are good men and well able to represent the ward. We think the contest will be close.

Flesherton Cheese Factory.

A meeting of the patrons and officers of the above cheese factory was held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on the 13th inst., for the purpose of winding up the business of the past year.

The secretary gave a statement to the patrons as follows:—

Milk received	898,790 lbs.
Cheese made	87,176 "
Cash realized	$9,199 67
Expenses	2,042.54
Amount divided among the patrons	7,157.13

The average price per lb. for the season's make being a fraction over 10½ cents.

The president also gave a statement of his part of the work, and the principle on which the factory had been run during the past year.

The auditors also made a report of having examined the secretary's books and found them kept in a very satisfactory manner, which, by resolution of meeting, was received and adopted. —COM.

Christmas & New Years Beef.

Our meat market is not behind in display this season. While all other departments of trade have done admirably, they are well to the front. Prominent is the Messrs. Sargent & Burnside, who display a rare lot of first class quarters, dressed in an artistic manner, consisting of beeves, mutton, veal and pork, of the choicest quality; while poultry of every description adorn their walls, and of a quality the best the country can afford. A visit to the aforenamed stalls will amply repay the trouble. They purchase none but well-fed, sound stock, and their meat is a guaranteed luxury. The highest price paid for any of the aforenamed articles.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

Leckey, 2nd Com.; Samuel Leckey, 3rd Com.; Wm. Stinson, 4th Com.; Jas. Foster, 5th Com. —COM.

ANNUAL TEA.—The annual Christmas entertainment, in connection with the Methodist church of this place, was in every respect a grand success. Tea was served in the Orange Hall, after which the company repaired to the church, which was filled so that many went away not being able to gain admittance. C. W. Rutlenge was voted to the chair a few minutes to 8 o'clock, and a splendid program followed, in which Rev. T. Grandy, Dr Sproule, M, P., Rev. Mr. Casson and Rev. Mr. Howell of Owen Sound, took part in speech-making, while the choir discorsed choice selections of music, as also Mr. John Hill, with Mr. Mason's accompaniment with bass viol, and Mr. and Miss. Henry a song. The best of order was mantained throughout, a fact which would strongly indicate the interest manifested in the proceedings, this was the first entertainment in behalf of the new church building fund. The proceeds were $84.

FOR THE FARMER.

Fall Feeding Mowing Lands.

No farmer can afford to allow his cattle to feed off the growth of grass in his mowing lands in the fall. It injuries the grass roots and diminishes the grass crop the year following, for more than the feed obtained is worth. It is cheaper to buy hay and feed to the stock in the barn than to have them feeding down the mowing fields.

Fertilizing Lawns.

Heavy dressings of stable manure should never be made to a lawn. Not only does it present a very unsightly appearance when thus treated, but the dressing lying in lumps, as it usually does, is liable to kill out the grass in places, and greately injure the appearance of the lawn. When any dressing is needed, it is much better to apply in the spring, a light dressing of bone phosphate or guano.

Green Food for Poultry.

Green food is very necessary to the health of poultry. So eagerly is every green substance devoured by fowls that every green thing is destroyed in the hen yard, unless the yard is very large. It is well to have a large yord divided into two parts, allowing the poultry to occupy one division at a time. By ploughing the unoccupied division and sowing it to grain, a good growth of green food will spring up, which, when a few inches high, is ready for the hens, and will afford them an excellent quality of green food for some time, and it will keep growing as fast as it is eaten off, While the poultry is eating this supply, another growth can be started in the unoccupied portion of the hen yard, and in this way a constant supply of green food can be provided.

Keeping Apples.

A Pennsyvlania farmer who had tried various methods of keeping apples, obtained the best success by wrapping each apple in paper, placing in a barrel, and heading it. He bored holes in the top and bottom so as to allow a free circulation of air, and laid the barrel upon its side in as cool a place as was safe from the frost. The variety of apples was the Fallowaters. On the fifth of May he opened the barrel and feund them in most excellent condition. There were only twenty specked and rotten apples in the barrel, "while the color was beautifully preserved, and the apples had a delicious flavor. Tney were fresh and beautiful in appearance, without any dampness or moisture. A gentleman present when the barrel was opened, pronounced them the best kept apples he had ever seen. The success seemed to be due to the fact that the paper absorbed all the moisture that was given off by the apples, while the holes in the top and bottom allowed the free circluation of air."

This is a method worth trying for preserving a few apples for home use, but evidently could not very well be practised for preserving large quantities of fruit. When large quantities of fruit are stored for preservation, the best method seems to be to keep down the temperature as near the freezing point as possible without chilling the fruit. Low temperature is the best preservative, and if it could be maintained near the freezing point until midsummer, there would be little difficulty in preserving fruit until that time. Some store in racks, allowing a free circulation of air, and others store in barrels closely headed up. Very good results are obtained by either method.

Best Way to Seed to Grass.

The old, and still too common, practice of seeding land with grass and grain at the same time may do under specially favorable circumstances, as when the land is constantly moist, and the grain is sown thinly. It does better, too, in a cool, northern climate, or where the grain is removed late in the season, after the hottest weather is passed. In northern Vermont, we have seen oats being harvested late in September, and cut at that season the grass is not so likely to be killed by hot sunshine after the grain is removed. But in southern New England and westerly, on the same parallel of latitude, probably at least three-fourths of all the grass sown with grain is seriously injured by being grown with it. We find that Western farmers are learning that grass is worthy of being given a better chance than when sowed with grain.

A writer in the the Philadelphia Press, says that farmers in the West seem to be coming to the conclusion arrived at in the East, that grass seeding is best when made alone. The reasons given are that "sowing grass seed with grain crops is on a par with trying to get two crops from the soil in the orchard. No land is rich enough to serve two masters, for either it will have one crop smothered in infancy, or the other choked and robbed in its old age. If you wish a fine catch of grass for a superior meadow, then follow the following: "Get the land in good tilth and well enriched for a crop of wheat, harrow until the surface is perfectly pulverized, and sow the grass seed alone. Farmers make the mistake sometimes of looking upon their cows as machines for producing milk and butter, forgetting that they are mothers every year, and their daughters are soon to take the places of their dams. In like manner, the grain crop is considered the main one on the farm, because this is sold and the grass and hay are not. Without the grass and the hay the grain would be light indeed."

A Wisconsin farmer stoutly maintains that he prevents the ravages of the beetles in his potatoes by planting one or two dazsfleein each hill. He says the bugs will shun the flax every time, and that he has grown potatoes in this way for ten years and secured good crops when others failed.

Mr. Lyman has Stopped Swearing.

The people of Lee Township, about seventy-five miles north of Louisville, Ky., are in a state of excitement over the case of James Lyman. Lyman recently moved into Lee Township. His family consists of a son and two daughters. In early years he was a seaman. When 11 years of age he ran away from his home in Boston, conceal'ed himself in the hold of a ship about to weigh anchor, and was carried off to sea.

On board a vessel Lyman soon learned to swear. As his years increased, his profanity became more voluble. His ship touched many foreign shores, and by frequent associations with the natives he gradually acquired their manner of speech, and in time became the master of four different languages. In all of these he was an adapt at swearing. The slightest trifle met with a volley of oaths. Let some one vex him and the air would be perfectly sulphurous with his wicked declamations. When excited his wrath was terrible, and few dared to remain within earshot, while curses and imprecations rolled with mighty vehemence from his tongue.

One day while superintending a force of hands in making a clearing, a silly accident threw Lyman in an excess of passion. Words more blasphemous than ever before uttered rolled from his fluent tongue while he danced about in a perfect paroxysm.

Suddenly the impious de'amations ceased. Lyman fell, face downward, to the ground, and was unable to move a muscle. A genuine thunderbolt or a bullet through the heart could not have despatched his senses quicker. Sight was destroyed, speech gone, and motion impossible. After thirty minutes' prostration he recovered slightly, but he was unable to regain his lost speech. His eyes were also dimmed. On the arms of two strong laborers he was borne to his house, where he has since been resting in a half-conscious condition.

Devout people in the neighborhood look upon Lyman's calamity as a righteous punishment and a fearful warning against blaspheming. They verily believe that it was a visitation of the wicked man's prolonged sins upon his own head.

Ice Skating.

Will roller-skating supplant its parent sport? We trust not. But there is no question that runner-skating has been on the decline among us for some years. In Holland, Denmark, and Germany it is universal. There every body skates, old and young, high and l w, rich and poor. Probably its decline h re arises from neglect of our ponds. T ere is skating until the first snow, and af er that pains are taken in but few places t clear the ice. There are also no conveniences for putting on skates, taking care of garments, etc. It is both uncomfortoble and dangerous to skate in overcoats and cloaks. In Germany and other European countries the public ponds are leased by the cities to parties who, charging small sums to skaters, keep the ice clear and in good condition, and also provide the other facilities mentioned. It would be a good idea to adopt the same course in our cities, while in country towns the organization of skating-clubs might effect the same ends.

Why the Swiss Can Drink So Much.

Owing to the small portion of moisture in mountain air and the low barometric pressure, evaporation is very rapid. Even after the heaviest rain the ground dries in a few hours. This quality of the air tends to make perspiration more profuse and the skin dry faster than is the case at lower elevations. There is greater thirst, the tissue waste faster, and a high authority has said that a man's tissue is the only thing which it is his duty waste, new tissue being out of all comparison better than old.

It is probable this rapid evaporation at grea heights and the thirst which it engenders that the Swiss have to thank for their wonderful drinking powers. The other week the marksmen of Canton Vaud held their annual rifle meeting at Payne, a picturesque village on the Broye, and the local papers mention with something like pride that the shooters and their friends drank the place dry.

Everybody who has been in the Highlands of Scotland, or any other mountain land, and tried the experiment, knows that he can drink with impunity much more whiskey, or whatever the vin du pays may be, than he can drink at home. This, it may be as well to observe, is mentioned as a dry fact, not as an additional reason for going to the mountains.

At a recent meeting of the Neurological Society, Dr. C. L. Dana read an interesting paper on spinal concussion and its results. He thought the fact was now established that railway accidents produce severe shocks to the nervous system which impair its activity and sometimes cause hysteria. The sufferers are sometimes as much injured as though they had lost a limb or actually injured the spinal cord. The trouble is to determine how ill such people are, how much they are shamming, how much the prospect of damages affects them, and how many are predisposed to disease, for a road cannot be called to account because it does not provide perfectly for valetudinarians. The term spinal concussion was, the Doctor thought, a misleading and often incorrect one—mental shock and physical bruising expresses the idea better. The prospect of partial recovery from these shocks to the system is good, but not so good as regards complete recovery. Concussion of the cord alone followed by temporary loss of function or by myelitis, does occur in some instances.

THE WORLD OVER.

M. Pasteur is going to Rio Janeiro to study yellow fever.

Over 5,000 patents on churns have already been granted by the U. S. Government.

A bill is pending before the Alabama Legislature compelling persons carrying concealed deadly weapons to designate the fact on their persons by wearing a badge inscribed "I am armed."

In the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. Klein says that sixty-seven per cent. of Jewish physicians occupy professorships in medical colleges, and thirty-six per cent. are medical authors.

In a recent work entitled "The Health of the Senses," Dr. H Macnaughton Jones states that "eye troubles are found more frequently in inveterate smokers who abstain from alcohol than those who take some of it."

According to the Pharmaceutical Record freckles may sometimes be made to disappear by an application of citric acid night and morning. Dr. Duhring advises an emulsion of almonds, to be applied until a slight amount of desquamation takes place.

Paper from the yucca, a hairy plant found in Arizona, New Mexico, and Lower California, is becoming popular in Great Britain. It is readily bleached, and has a fibre almost as strong as hemp. It can be manufactured at about the same cost as paper made from mixed cotton and linen rags.

There is great trouble in the iron and steel market on account of the alleged practises of English foundrymen of mixing crucible steel with Bessemer, and selling it as the former. The one costs $56 and the latter $25 a ton, so that a large profit inures to the adulterator. The Board of Trade desire to have it made a criminal offence.

The Drug News notes an important discovery, by which alnminium may be produced in unlimited quantities at $1.25 per pound, or one twelfth of the price now quoted. The discovery was made by Wm. Frishmuth, of Philadelphia, a pupil of Wohler, the discoverer of the metal itself. Mr. Frishmuth is said to have devoted twenty-eight years to this end.

According to the British Medical Journal there was last year an enormous less to the effective force of the army and navy from intemperance. In the army 1,490 cases of drunkenness were tried by courts martial, besides over 4,000 convictions from crimes springing from excessive drinking. During the year 15,904 soldiers, or 102 in every thousand, were mulcted in their pay for drunkenness.

English physicians have had strong discussions of late as to the truth of Dr. Crichton Browne's report upon over brain pressure in schools and its pernicious effects. The Lancet says: "We have grounds for believing that certain well-known depravities which progress with cerebral exhaustion are on the increase among these overworked children. Dr. Browne's protest has the support of the medical profession, and, as a body, we distinctly endorse what he has said."

In northern Siberia, if a young man desires to marry he goes to the father of the girl of his choice, and a price is agreed upon, one-half of which is then paid down. The prospective son-in-law at once takes up his residence with the family of his lady love, and resides with them a year. If at the end of a year he still desires to marry the girl he can pay the other half and they are married on the next visit of the priest. If he does not want to marry he need not, and simply loses the half he paid at the start.

The use of arsenic is alarmingly on the increase. The researches of Dr. Draper and Profs. Wood and Austen show that it is extensively employed in wall papers textile fabrics, writing and printing paper, candles, toys, confectionery, playing cards, theatre tickets, rubber balloons and balls, sweatbands of hats, paper collars and bed hangings, and in amounts sufficient to cause sickness and even death. Prof. Austen recommends a law prohibiting its use in all materials consumed or employed in the household.

Anton Warning left Chateau, M. T., a short time ago to get logs from the mountains, and not returning within a few weeks, search for him was made by friends, when his body was found beneath a great tree, which had fallen upon him and held him prisoner until death ensued from starvation and cold. After the accident he had written a note and tied it around the dog's neck, telling the particulars of the misfortune, but the faithful animal would not leave his master, and was sitting on the body when it was found, nearly famished.

The public baths at Vienna are said to be the finest in the world. The building is situated in the heart of the city, and encloses a basin of 570 feet in length by 156 feet in width, and varying in depth to twelve feet. The enormous quantity of water contained in this basin is removed three times a day. The whole establishment has accomodation for 1,500 persons, and is open from May 1 to Oct. 31, and from 5 in the morning until dusk. There is also a bath restricted to ladies, open from 9 in the morning until 1; and the Vienna ladies are especially good swimmers.

Dr. O. E. Davies writes to the Cincinnati Lancet and Clinic that, having been a sufferer from blood poisoning until he became a total wreck, he visited Las Vegas, New Mexico, took the "mud baths" administered there, and recovered his health. It seems that these baths of mud are made of earth through which the hot mineral waters of the place have percolated for ages. The patient is dropped into a cavity in this earth, and becoms really "poulticed." The doctor should be familiar with the subject, for he went through the process sixty-eight times.

A doctor was lately brought before the German tribunals for having neglected to keep himself informed as to modern methods of practice. A servant who received a wound in the chest in April last died from septicæmia under the care of this doctor, who, despising antiseptic dressings, treated his patient according to ancient usages. The court held that "every medical practitioner should keep himself informed on the accomplished progress of sicence, and have an exact knowledge of modern systems of treatment. If these had been employed the patient's life might have been saved, hence the liability for negligence." The Court of Appeal sustained the judgment.

A curious phenomenon was observed recently at the London Zoo. A few weeks since a fine lioness began to eat her own tail. In one day she removed at her leisure about twelve inches, and after a brief interval she resumed her repast and swallowed some more. She was then placed in a very narrow box in the hope that something might be done with the bleeding stump, and that she might be prevented from further assaults upon herself. But she was not to be denied. The tail has almost entirely disappeared, and she has now directed attention to one of her forepaws. If time only is allowed she may succeed in performing the astounding feat of disappearing down her own throat.

Successful experiments in distributing the electric light to great distances have been made in connection with the Turin Electrical Exhibition. A Siemens machine of 30 horse-power generated a current which was simultaneously used by several electric systems spread over a circuit of about 25 miles.

Wind Work.—A gale at East St. Louis in 1871, according to Mr. C. Shaler Smith, overturned a locomotive, exerting a force of no less than 93 pounds per square foot. Below these extraordinary pressures Mr. Smith has instanced numerous cases of trains blown off rails, and bridges, etc., blown down, by gales of 24 to 31 pounds per square foot.

Pictures of Sound.—Some remarkable photographs of a pistol bullet in its flight—under the illumination of an electric spark—have been secured by Prof. E. Mach, of Prague. He has also photographed the air streams which one may see over a Bunsen burner placed in sunshine, and has even obtained pictures of waves of sound; these last being made visible by a method in which advantage is taken of the irregular refraction of light by air set in vibration by sound.

Money Vegetation.—A short time since Paul Reinsch discovered several kinds of minute plants—including two algae which had before been unknown—growing upon coins after having been long enough in circulation to receive thin incrustations of organic matter. A Hungarian botanist, Jules Schaarschmidt, has more recently found the microscopic growths upon paper money, even the cleanest specimens not being free from them. He has detected seven species, including—although they are rare—the two new algae described by Reinsch.

The Theory of Vaccination.—Prof. Tyndall suggests that just as the soil may be so effectually robbed of some essential ingredient by one abundant crop, as to be incapable of producing another, so in the human system a parasitic disease may so completely exhaust the blood of some ingredient necessary to the growth and propagation of the parasite that the production of a second crop in fatal or considerable quantity may be impossible. It would thus appear that protective vaccination or inoculation is simply the introduction into the blood of weakened and comparatively harmless disease germs to consume the material which might become food for similar in a more vigorous and dangerous condition.

Great Worms.—According to Mr. F. E. Beddard, a London zoologist, earthworms two feet in length have been found in the British Isles, and various species as large or larger are known to exist on South America, Western Africa, Australia and New Zealand. The largest species known, however, inhabits South Africa. Forty years ago a specimen was described which measured six feet two inches in length, but it seems to have been nearly forgotten until the other day, when a gigantic creature of the same species was sent to the London Zoological Gardens from Cape Colony. The longest measurement of this worm yet taken reaches six feet five inches, its diameter being nearly half an inch.

A Lesson in Astronomy.

They were young and romantic, and although the minute hand was pointing to 12 o'clock they stood upon the porch gazing at the stars.

"That's Jupiter, dear, isn't it?" she murmured.

"Yes, pet, and that is Sirius," he replied, pointing to another star.

"Are you Sirius?" she cooed.

He kissed her several times. Then he pointed upward and said:

"That's Mars, dove."

"And that's pa's," she whispered, as a footstep sounded inside.

Mr. Spurgeon: "I wish to say that I am not ashamed of anything whatever that I do. I don't think that smoking makes me ashamed, and therefore I mean to smoke."

PERSONAL ITEMS.

About More or Less Prominent People.

Campanini owns two hundred and fifty head of cattle in Italy, where he now acts as farmer, wine-maker, miller, silk-grower, linen manufacturer, cattle-dealer, and tenor.

Senator Edmunds is about to build a handsome house in Washington. He has the credit of having driven out all the minor lobbyists who used to lounge about the cloak-rooms of the Senate.

Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the philanthropist and banker, ough in advanced years, still rides hors back almost daily in the streets of Washington, and was neither scared nor hurt when a vicious mare threw him, not long ago.

Colonel Robert Ingersoll's fee of $100,000 from ex-Senator Dorsey, for defending him in the Star Route trials, has awakened some interest among the members of the bar; but there are New York lawyers whom such figures do not surprise.

In a recent dramatic criticism Lord Lytton says that actors invite critics to supper, pat them on their backs, take them behind the scenes, and open their hearts to them, and that in consequence the critics "behave well" to them.

Senator John Sherman smokes small cigars before a wood fire in his commodious library in Washington, and is an interesting and instructive talker on politics, and perhaps the oldest living authority on matters of national finance.

Mark Lemon, late editor of Punch, as described by Mr. Edmund Yates: 'He was made for the part. Corpulent, jovial, bright-eyed, with a hearty laugh and an air of bonhomie he rolled through life the outward impersonation of jollity and good temper."

Mr. E. W. Gosse, now on a visit to the States, has been warmly received. He is the Lecturer on English Literature at the University of Cambridge, and is learned in the languages of northern Europe, besides being a poet and literary critic of note. His wife is a sister of Mrs. Alma-Tadema.

Mrs. Rebecca M. Levy, who died recently in New Orleans, was the sister of the late Judah P. Benjamin, in whose house for for many years she dispensed a graceful and generous hospitality that many Northern friends of his still remember with pleasure.

Our British cousins are taking very kindly to American periodical literature. More than seventy thousand copies of the December number of the English edition of Harper's Magazine were sold within a few days after its publication; and the sale of fifty thousand copies of the first number of the English edition of Harper's Young People shows how well that paper is appreciated by the little subjects of Queen Victoria.

On the 3rd inst. Mr. George W. Childs celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his purchase of the Philadelphia Public Ledger from Mr. W. M. Swain. At that time the paper was loosing heavily, but through the extraordinary business tact of Mr. Childs it soon became one of the most profitable papers in the country. It is pleasant to read that the man who was foreman of the composing-room under Mr. Swain, and was an important factor in the management of the paper, is living to-day, and is on Mr. Child's pension list, drawing his salary as though still in working harness.

Miss Mary Gwendolen Caldwell, of New York, who has given $300,000 to found a Catholic university, was of age last October. She and her younger sister are orphans. Their father was William Shakespeare Caldwell, a Virginian; their mother, Miss Breckinridge, a Kentuckian. Each parent left them a fortune, and they possess about two millions apiece. No young lady, in this country at least, ever made so magnificent an educational endowment. "Personally," she says, "I should prefer to see the university built at the South, for though born and educated at the North, my family are Southerners, and my feelings are Southern."

The valuable paintings belonging to the estate of Mr. Thomas G. Appleton will not be sold, although his furniture and bric-a-brac will. He bought some noble examples of Jean Francois Millet's brush-work when Millet was so little appreciated as to be compelled to beg bread for his children. The taste for Millet's pictures was first awakened in this country by the examples imported by Mr. Appleton and the late Mr. William M. Hunt. Did Alexander the Great die from drink? Dr. Alfred Carpenter says that he did, but a recent essayist reminds the doctor that there is no trustworty evidence on the subject, and, from the nature of the case, can not be. "I have heard," he continues "that Lord Eldon, who died at the age of eighty-seven, and who certainly suffered neither 'downfall' nor 'ruin,' was accustomed to drink a bottle of port-wine after his dinner every day, except Sundays, when his brother, Lord Stowell, dined with him, and they drank two."

One of the Rothschilds was once upon a time playing cards, when one of the players, a noted miser, let fall a small piece of money, and insisted upon stopping the game while he took the candle and looked for it. Whereupon the great banker, taking a bank note from his pocket, lit it, and handed it to the miserly player, bade him hunt for his money with that.

The following incident has the true Hibernian flavor: A gentleman, wishing to preserve some beautiful ruins on his estate near Belfast from the ravages of passing vandals, employed a contractor to build a wall around them. When the wall was finished the owner came to see it, and was horrified and disgusted to find that the contractor had used every stone of the ruins as material for the wall, which therefore enclosed nothing.

WONDERFUL FACTS.

A Visit to the Prison of Louvain—Convicts Consigned to Living Tombs.

In the whole of Europe there is but one prison in which the systeme cellulaire of absolute isolation by day and by night is still enforced, and it has, on that ground, a strange and sad celebrity. That one prison is the Maison Centrale of Louvain.

In England and in France prisoners are submitted to less severe penalties, for although they are condemned to silence, they at least work in common, walk in common, pray in common, and confinement in their cells is only a temporary measure recurred to in case of an insubordination or misbehavior. The question now pendant in France of replacing the actual penitentiary system by the solitary system adopted in Belgium gives interest to the details of a visit paid to the prison of Louvain.

The buildings are situated on the anterior boulevards, nearly outside the town. They date from twenty years back, but their tall reddish walls have retained the freshness of newness. Admission to the interior can only be given by the Minister of Justice, who grants the permission with so much difficulty that the rare visitors are always treated with the utmost courtesy and consideration, and enabled to see as much of the interior administration as is consistent with the rules and discipline.

The buildings all converge to a central apsis, whence a warder can easily survey the six immense avenues or wings, consisting of two stories of cells. While some slight repairs were being done to one of these cells, a figure suddenly appeared standing motionless at the door—a mysterious and ghastly apparition, clad entirely in white linen, head and face closely masked by a hood of the same material. Air was admitted to eyes, nose and mouth by four round holes. Obeying a rapid sign from the warder, the figure turned to the wall, and crossed its hand behind its back. It was a convict. Even through the apertures of his concealing headgear, the prisoner of Louvain must never catch a passing glimpse of any human face beyond his keepers, and no breath of the outer world must ever pass upon his shrouded cheek. He wears his linen hood summer and winter, but during the cold he is provided with warm brown woolen cloths. Labor is compulsory, and the days are spent in one unvarying monotonous round of self-same duties.

At six o'clock the peals of an organ wake the convicts. They come from the chapel, all the doors of which are thrown open, and the prisoner who can play the organ strikes the first chords. This is the signal for all the others to rise, dress, and make up their beds and bedding. The music lasts for fifteen minutes, and may, at the will of the player, consist of religious anthems, operatic airs; waltzes or polkas—notes that must strike with weary significance on the ears of some of the wretched beings cloistered there. They do not all belong to the dregs of society. Leon and Armand Pettyer are there expiating the murder of the lawyer Berneys, whose trial two years ago startled the world by its cynical revelations.

At the last sound of the organ the warders must each find a man at his work. Breakfast consists of half a pint of coffee and bread, and the other two meals of the day of soup and vegetables. Three times a week the convicts have fresh meat, but never wine. The convict who has earned a certificate of good conduct, however, can procure some at the prison canteen, as well as beer and tobacco in stated quantities. Each day the prisoners are taken out of their cells in rotation for solitary exercise in seperate yards. The rest of the time is entirely given to up to the accomplishment of their alloted portion of work, except on Sunday, which is a day of absolute rest. Between the religious services the convicts are at liberty to employ their liberty in their cells as they think proper. The prison library contains a considerable collection of books of travel, and such publications as "Magasin Pittoresque from which each man can make a selection. Only those who can neither read nor write are compelled to attend school for instruction between mass and vespers. This takes place in the chapel itself.

Nothing can be more striking than the construction and internal arrangements of this chapel. It is a huge circle, or wheel, consisting entirely of superposed flights of steps, like a circular and reversed amphitheatre, the centre of which forms a raised stage, on which stands the altar, towering far above the heads of the phantom like congregation. Each row of steps is divided into compartments or pigeon holes, just large enough for a man to sit and kneel. When the hour for divine service has come, the first cell is opened by a warder, and convict No. 1 is lead out, conducted to the chapel, and entering the row to which he belongs, walks to the furthest compartment, which at once closes upon him. Then only No. 2 leaves his cell and goes through the same performance. And so on till all are settled—no man being permitted to move until the one immediately preceding him has entered his allotted pen. After mass they are all taken back into their cells in the same order and with the same precautions.

There are about twelve flights of steps, containing about sixty seats each, but as the circle of the chapel is divided by five or six immense partitions, into each of which the prisoners are carried similtaneously, the operation takes comparatively only a short time. From his stall each convict is able to see and follow every movement of the priest who officiates at the altar on the central platform, while he cannot even catch a glimpse of his right and left hand neighbor, owing to the height of the dividing doors, nor can he look over at the opposite row, which is hidden by a boarding higher than himself, and which as effectually shuts out from his view those above or below, before and behind him.

The cells are clean and well arranged. Daylight is admitted by a small window beyond the prisoner's reach. The ventilation is perfect. In winter the mouth of a hot air pipe gives sufficient heat, and in the evening the necessary light is procured by a gas jet, to which there is no access from the interior of the cell. The furniture consists of a washstand, a commode on the best sanitary principle, a shelf supporting some pewter utensils, and an iron bed. The bedding is a foundation of sacking, a mattrass, two sheets, one blanket in summer and two in winter, and a bolster. The convict has to fold and put these things away. The bed itself is taken to pieces and placed against the wall, forming a table in front of which is a stool. The remainder of the space is taken up by the implement necessary to the convict's obligatory daily task.

Some of the convicts are shoemakers; others bookbinders, tailors, carpenters, even smiths. The new comer, who knows no trade is taught one. Those who have had a superior education are employed in copying student's essays. The produce of each man's labor is divided equally between the State and himself. This latter portion is again sub divided, one-half being put aside for the day of his liberation, if not incarcerated for life, and the other deposited at the canteen for his private use. His earnings never exceed two or three cents a day. In the evening, labor ended, he dines and goes to bed. To the dreary silence of the day succeeds the dreary silence of darkness.

The rules of the prison are such that the convicts must replace their hooded masks as soon as the doors of their cells open. They cannot expose their faces even to their warders. If, perchance, a face is seen by a doctor it is paled by the long sunless shadow in which it lives, and the want of bracing, blowing air, for even the daily walk of an hour in the prison yards is at best only exercise in cramped passages between two high walls, partly roofed, shut in by iron gates, stretching out like the sticks of a gigantic fan, and where a few stunted plants soon wither and die. The prisoners have that flaccid fleshiness which comes from absence of movement and stimulating activity; yet in contradiction to the opinion prevailing in France that no man could stand solitary confinement for ten years without succumbing or getting insane, it has been found not to be the case at Louvain. Two of the inmates have dwelt there since 1864, the date of its foundation being transferred to the Central house after a ten years' imprisonment at Ghent. They had been condemned to death, but, owing to the virtual abolition of the penalty of death in Belgium, the King had commuted their sentence to the perpetual entombment of their present abode. When prisoners have deserved an alleviation of their penalty by ten years of uninterrupted good conduct, they are sent to Ghent, where the rules of the prison allow of their working in common.

The secondary buildings contain the infirmary, laundry, linen rooms, bath rooms, bakeries, and kitchens, all kept with a scrupulous cleanliness remarkable even in that land of unrivalled cleanliness. Huge iron pots contained an abundance of excellent potatoes boiling for the evening meal, and the bread, although brown, was sweet, crisp, and of better quality than that rationed out to the army.

None but isolated cases of revolt have ever taken place at Louvain. These are punishable by incarceration in a subterranean dungeon containing nothing but a single wooden bench, where nearly total darkness prevails. The time of retention within its walls cannot exceed eight days, during which the prisoner is kept on bread and water. This mode of punishment is rarely resorted to, as there is another which is viewed with far greater dread—the privation of work! For those silent recluses, this labor is the only link which connects them ever so remotely with the living world. It is more than an occupation—it is a favor, a recreation, almost a pleasure, and the threat of taking his tools from him never fails to insure the submission of the rebel.

Whether or not the system of solitary confinement has greater advantage for the repression of crime and the security of the community than the system of labor in common now generally adopted in penitentaries, and which only half sequestrates the offender from his fellow creatures, is a question not easily or lightly solved; but it is impossible to leave the Maison Centrale of Louvain, admirable as its administration is in the minutest details, without a feeling of almost superstitious horror at the vision of those miserable beings cloistered in eternal isolation, doomed to unbroken silence, buried in their livery of infamy as in a shroud, the face of each remaining as sealed to his six hundred companions of crime and shame, dropped into the same tomb with himself, as if the lid of a coffin had closed upon it and the hand of death forever obliterated its features.

An Intelligent Colt.

Tom Lenard, coachman for A. I. Migeon in Torrington, has taught a 5-year-old colt in his charge a variety of tricks. He will stand with his two fore feet on the end of a barrel, lie down, or kneel at command, and raise his fore feet as if in the act of shaking hands. He will stand upon his hind feet, and imitate the coachman in rubbing the floor with his shoes. He will also follow through the barn and if the coachman offers to go up stairs the colt will put his two feet on the stairway in an attempt to follow, and if chance offers he will steal the whip and run round with it in triumph in his mouth. He will also pick a brush from the floor and endeavor to brush himself, and like Dike Turpin's Black Bess will lie down as if dead.

Advantages of Travel.

Two beautiful young damsels meeting on Fulton street the other day, says the Brooklyn Eagle, beamed with delight as they scanned each other's Summer finery.

"And where have you been, my love," asked the brunette.

"Travelling," responded the blonde. "Been gone three months, studying our own country. Ma said a lady's education was not finished till she had gone abroad, and 'twas vulgar to go to Europe without knowing something of one's own country."

"How grand," sighed the brunette, whose sight-seeing had been limited to Central Park and Coney Island.

"Yes, but pa didn't want to go a bit, so ma and I planned and planned. Finally I fell in love with a plumber. Pa reasoned with me, so did ma, but I got firmer and declared I'd have my own way. Ma got awfully uneasy (before pa) and—well, in short, pa concluded to let me travel."

"You naughty thing. But where have you been?"

"Just everywhere. First South and—"

"Oh! then you had a chance to study some of those Southern problems one is always reading about?"

"I don't remember them; but pa first tramped me over miles and miles of battlefields, and I saw where—Oh! what's his name?—Oh! that big general; you know who I mean?"

"Yes," responded the other, eagerly. "never mind his name."

"Well, we saw there—Oh! Grant, that's it; where Grant and Lee, yes, I'm sure t'was Lee, fought, or bombarded, or surrendered; anyway, I don't remember details. And then we went to Mexico, and that was awful; flies and sand, and pa just wore me out with his old Spanish towns, and graveyards, and dug up things. But ma said it was all important, and I wanted to be able to describe them all; so I just got through somehow."

"How lovely to travel and improve one's self!" murmured the listener with an admiring eye on Kitty's terra-cotta bonnet.

"So ma says. Well, then we went to Utah, to Salt Lake City."

"Oh! those horrid Mormons! Did you really see them?"

"Yes indeed, and made a study of them. Ma said that was proper. Were there two or three days, and such dowdies as those women are, and the men—well, they are too insignificant. Pa took us to the—the—Oh, Temple—no, Tabernacle, 'Twas ever so queer, and ma got me a book on statistics and things; so I'll be way up, see?"

"How splendidly you'll be able to converse with everyone! I quite envy you."

"Yes, ma says that few girls have such opportunities, and I mean to improve mine. Then we've been to California, and oh, such big trees and those wretched little Chinamen. San Francisco isn't much to see. The shops are not any nicer than Brooklyn. But St. Paul is too lovely. Got one of those stylish looking ulsters. Will you believe me? Pa wanted to drag me off to see the falls of—of—Millie or Minnehaha, just because Whittier, or Lord Byron, or some Tom, Dick, or Harry wrote a poem about it. But we only had two days there, and I was a fright."

"And you have seen all the great, grand West—the splendid mountains, the rolling prairies, and breathed that pure air—"

"Oh, my! yes!" interrupted the tourist eagerly, "and we visited a real mining camp. But I soiled my new silk jersey. I was so disgusted. But pa—well, once get him started and there's no going back. Chicago and Cincinnati are not like New York. Thank goodness, we are home. Travelling is improving and all, but pa did manage to take us to some horrid places. Now ma says, 'Europe next Spring, to give a final polish.' Pa is awfully contrary, but ma and I are patient with him, and we generally work together. I guess he will give in."

"Of course he will," murmured the brunette, "for he must be proud of you."

"Oh! he is, but pa is queer and thinks it silly to show one's feelings. But come round to lunch some day, and I'll tell you more. Ma says next thing to travelling one's self is to cultivate those who have enjoyed the privileges."

"How kind you are, dear!"

"Good-bye."

And the sweet creatures separated, one buying her ribbons with an envious soul, the other selecting ruches with complacent pride.

The Well-Dressed Man.

The golden rule in dress is to keep clear of extremes. The well-dressed man never wears anything striking or peculiar, and his garments are always of the best material, one suit that cost $50 being preferable to two suits that cost $25 each—and the tailor's risk, it will be observed is just the same in both cases. We are bound to add, however, that the gentleman who has but one suit instead of two can not escape embarrasment when it comes to sending his trousers to the shop for the purpose of having the wrinkles pressed out of them. The proper cut for coat and vest is that which makes them fit snug around the waist and loose over the chest, as the polite citizen is thus admonished at every turn that he will not only look better, but also feel better if he stands straight.

Dr Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops should be used in almost every household in Canada it is one of the best and safest cough remedies known. In large bottles at 50 cents.

The best of a book is not the thought which it contains, but the thought which it suggests, just as the charm of music dwells not in the tones, but in the echoes of our hearts.

A New Way to Pay Old Debts.

Shakespeare tells how this can be accomplished in one of his immortal plays; but debts to nature must be paid on demand unless days of grace be obtained through the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is not "a cure all," but invaluable for sore throat, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, consumption, and all diseases of the pulmonary and other organs, caused by scrofula or "bad blood." Scrofulous ulcers, swellings and tumors are cause by its wonderful alterative action. By druggists.

GOOD FOR ALL.

For all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and bowels take Burdock Blood Bitters. It is purely vegetable, can do no harm, and is always beneficial.

ODDS AND ENDS.

GATHERED FROM EXCHANGES AND JOTTED DOWN FOR THE STANDARD.

The contest for the Mayoralty in Toronto promises to be a lively one. Mr. Alex. Manning and Mr. J. Witherow are the candidates.

G. R. Middleton of Dundalk has recently had J. P. added to his name.

The dwelling house and contents of W. H. Steinhoff of Dundalk were totaly consumed by fire last week.

J. J. Middleton, Reeve of Proton, was banquetted in Dundalk last Monday night on the eve of his resignation of public affairs.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

On account of its purity and concentrated strength, and great power over diseases, Burdock Blood Bitters is the cheapest and best blood cleansing tonic known for all disordered conditions of blood, liver and kidneys.

A lady appeared on the platform on Monday last and nominated a gentleman for Mayor.

NO HARM IN IT.

No harm can come from using Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam; as a remedy for throat, bronchial and lung complaints it is always reliable and positively safe.

A motion to allow street cars to run on Sunday failed to find a seconder in Toronto Council.

Worms often cause serious illness. The cure is Dr. Loy's Worm Syrup. It destroys and expels Worms effectually.

Bruce County Council have passed a resalution to memoralize the Provincial Legislature for the abolition of tax exemptions, including those of church property and ministerial stipends.

For The Complexion.—For Pimples, Blotches, Tan, and all itching tumors of the skin, use Prof. Low's Magic Sulpher Soap.

Meaford is to vote on a by-law, on the 12th January, to raise $12,000 for the purpose of building a Town Hall and Fire Hall.

The Signs of worms are well-known, but the remedy is not always so well determined. Worm Powder will destroy them.

The Mt. Forest Index is growing in size.

Good The Year Round.—National Pills are a good blood purifier, liver regulator and mind purgative for all seasons.

The following village police trustees were elected in Markdale:—Thos. Mathews, Thos. McNea and Geo. Grant, all by acclamation.

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm Allan, of Acton, declares that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds, and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

Osprey.

From our own Correspondent.

Messrs. J. W. H. Hamlin and J. Deargent are home from the University, Kiugston, for the holidays; also W. Burk, from Pickering.

The tea-meeting at Feversham, by the Presbyterians, was a grand success, and a very enjoyable time was spent. The proceeds, amounting to $40, go to the church improvement fund.

A. Herron has leased his farm, lot 18, con. 8, Osprey, to Philip Hollingshead.

Some of the Feversham Salvation Army recruits are said to have been "off their base" on Christmas.

Arch. McKinnon is doing an extensive business in square-timber this winter. Several gangs are to work through this and other townships.

There are numerous changes of school teachers in this district for the year '85.

[The above came too late for last week.—ED.]

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment on 26th Dec., 1884. Members all present: minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

The time for the collectors to return their rolls was extended until the 20th January, 1885.

Joseph Manary, collector, was instructed to strike off his roll $3.00, charged in error to John Hethers, and also $22.67, charged in error as arrears against N. W. ¼ of lot 1, con. 6.

By-law No. 344, providing for indemnity of members of council for the current year, carried through different stages and passed.

The Treasurer was ordered to remit to H. Manley, Esq., Meaford, $3.15, payment for medicine furnished to Robert Robinson.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz: To George Richardson, Esq., $2, statute labor charged in error; Geo. Reekie, $5, repairing road scrapers; George Cruikshank, $7, repairing road scrapers; James Falls, $11, salary as janitor of Township Hall; Robert Dunlop, clerk, $130, balance of salary and extra service, also $20 postage.

The following amounts were paid to members of council as indemnity for attending council meetings and all other services throughout the year, viz.: Thomas Gilray, Reeve, $96; Wm. Fawcett, Deputy-Reeve, $67; James Boyd, councillor, $69; Wm. J Black, councillor, $58; Henry Hurd, councillor, $64.

On motion being made and seconded the council arose.

ROBERT DUNLOP,
Clerk.

More Eggs in Winter.

This is the very time when eggs are worth the most, when hens want to lay as much or more than they do at any other time, and when they are not allowed to do so by most poultry keepers. Folks think there is a great mistery about making hens lay in winter, There is none; anybody can do it; that is, the hens will lay if you let them. They bear a good deal of cold in the sunshine, and even freeze their combs and toes, and yet will not stop laying altogether if they can sleep warm. Now do not begin to plan setting up a stove in the hen house, or introducing steam pipes. Artificial heat is not peisonous perhaps, but very nearly so to chickens. They are warm themselves and need only to be crowded on their roosts, with the roosts all on one level. The ceiling of the roosting room should be only a few feet above the fowls' heads, and provided with ventilation from the floor if possible. Give them very close quarters, with no drafts of cold air, and clean out under the roosts every morning, not excepting Sundays. The combs will then redden up, and the eggs will be plenty on less feed than usual. It must not be corn, however, or only a small percentage of it, for this will make them too fat to lay well if they sleep warm.—COL. WELD in American Agriculturist for Jan.

Death of Mayor Creasor.

While last week we informed our readers that the Mayor was in a fair way of recovery from his prolonged illness, it is with a feeling of profound sorrow that we are new called upon to record his death, which occurred on Monday evening shortly before six o'clock. Mr. D. A. Creasor was born on the 11th of September, 1838, in the Township of Vespra, County of Simcoe, and was educated in Barrie Grammar school. He came to Owen Sound in the year 1855, and has remained a citizen since that time. Mr. Creasor studied law under his brother Mr. John Creasor, in the office of Wilson and Paterson, of Toronto, and was admitted to the bar at the Easter term in 1860. Mr. Creasor commenced to practice law in Owen Sound, and soon commanded a large and lucrative clientage, and during his residence here has accumulated a fair share of this world's goods. Though by no means an office-seeker he was always ready and willing to serve the town in the various positions to which he was called by his fellow citizens, and occupied the positions of Councillor, Deputy Reeve, and Mayor, which office he ably filled at the time of his death and during the past three years, having been elected each time without a contest. Mr. Creasor held a high position in the Masonic fraternity, and was also a prominent member of the Orange Society, having at one time occupied the position of County Master. Mr. Creasor was possessed of a most genial and hospitable disposition, and delighted to entertain his friends at his elegant mansion, Ingleside. Mr. Creasor was married in 1863 to a daughter of Mr. John Platt, of Toronto, and leaves a widow and three children—one son and two daughters—who have the sincere sympathy of the entire community in their irreparable loss. As a mark of respect the flag of the town was at half-mast from the time of his death till after the funeral, which took place this (Wednesdey) afternoon, and was very largely attended by our citizens generally, the Town Council, the Masonic fraternity, the Orange body, the Firemen and the band.—O. S. Advertiser.

Horse Breeding in America.

Fifteen Million of Horses are now owned in America, and more than a million a year must be bred to keep up the supply. The largest portion of these are used for agricultural and heavy draft porposes and such horses bring from $175 to $250 each. It would be impossible to breed them if it were not for the importations of Percheron horses. 500 stallions are now annually imported from France to the United States. The immense wealth they are adding to the nation will be better understood when it is known that the first cross of a Percheron stallion with a native mare doubles the selling value of the colt when mature. Large numbers of Percheron stallions are exported from the United States by Canadian breedres to renew the old French blood so highly prized, and also to give quality, style and action to the large English Draft and Clydesdale stock which has been bred there so long. Nearly one hundred Percheron stallions have been sold to Canada during the past two years by M. W. Dunham, "Oaklawn Farm," Wayne, Illinois, the greatest importer of the French race, who has imported from France nearly 2,000 head. He now has on hand several hundred of the finest Percheron to be found in France, nearly all recorded with their pedigrees in the Percheron Stud Book of France.

Meaford Inundated.

HOUSE AND SEVERAL ACRES OF LAND SWEPT AWAY BY A BURSTING MILL DAM.

MEAFORD, Dec. 21.—About six o'clock this morning the embankment of Vain's mills dam gave way, and the immense body of water held by it swept across the road and down the street in front of Chief Grant's. In a few hours the bridge gave way. Over five acres of land have been carried away. Mr. F. Abbott's entire lot, dwelling-house and outbuildings, are swept away, and a part of Chief Grant's orchard, including seventeen choice fruit trees. What was once a fine street is now the bed of the river. The water is still rising, and it is impossible to estimate the damage at present,

Good Manners.

Good manners constitute the most valuable of earthly possessions. All may have them by the cultivation of the effections, and none without it. Only for the few are learning and genius, wit and beauty, wealth and fame; but good manners, with their dowery of happiness, are for all who are willing to pay the price of self-culture. That lady lives not, whatever her station in life, but who by amiable temper, pleasant words, and kind acts, may shed light and comfort on the hearts and homes of earth. That man is yet to be born who may not possess those elements of power, if true to the obligations of his being, which brighten and bless human society. There is a wealth of affection and kindness in every human heart, if properly developed; and the development and expenditure of the same in social life is a duty we, at once, owe to ourselves and the world.—Truth.

The Want of Energy.

Want of energy is a great and common cause of the want of domestic comfort. As the best laid fire can give no heat and cook no food unless it is lighted, so the clearest ideas and purest intentions will produce no corresponding actions without that energy which gives power to all that is of value, which is never more necessary or available than in the mistress or mother of a family. Those who have it not—and many constitutionally destitute of it—would do well to inquire of their experience and their conscience with compensating virtues they can bring into the marriage state to justify them in entering on its duties without that which is so essential to their performance. They should consider that the pretty face and graceful languor, which, as it is often especially attractive to the most impetuous of the other sex, gained them ardent lovers, will not enable them to satisfy the innumerable requisitions and secure the social happiness of the fidgety and exacting husbands, into which characters ardent and impetuous lovers are generally transformed.

Warming Up.

"But, doctor, I must have some kind of a stimulant," cried the invalid earnestly; "I am cold and it warms me." "Precisely," came the doctor's crusty answer. "See here; this stick is cold"—taking up a stick of wood from the box beside the hearth, and tossing it into the fire, "now it is warm; but is the stick benefitted?" The sick man watched the wood first send out puffs of smoke, and then burst into flame, and replied, "Of course not, it is burning itself!" "And so are you when you warm yourself with alcohol; you are literally burning up the delicate tissures of your stomach and brain." Oh, yes, alcohol will warm you up; but who finds the fuel? When you take food, that is fuel, and as it burns out you keep warm. But when you take alcohol to warm you, you are like a man who sets his house on fire and warms his fingers by it as it burns.

MIRIAM.

CHAPTER II.

Before Mrs. King had left her own room the next morning, a letter was brought to her. She divined whence it came, although she had never before seen the handwriting; and it was with more nervousness than she would have cared to acknowledge that she broke the seal. It was dated the previous night, and began abruptly.

"My presence was, of course, no such surprise to you as yours was to me. I recognized you instantly. It is necessary that we should meet alone for once; there are some words that must be said between us; then I need trouble you no more. Will you please select place and arrange time of meeting?"

Miriam perused this twice, a look of disdain on her face. Then came a knock at the door.

"If you please, ma'am," said the housemaid, putting in her head, "the boy is waiting below for an answer."

"He shall not wait long," said Miriam, and, tearing the note into four pieces, she flung them carelessly into the fire burning newly in her grate. Then she turned to a devonport standing in the window of her pleasant room, and wrote her reply.

"You are mistaken; your presence was as great a surprise to me as mine was to you. I see no necessity for the interview of which you speak. It would be an annoyance to me in every way. I decline to grant it."

Having despatched this concise epistle, Miriam proceeded with her interrupted toilette, brushing her long hair at the glass which gave back to her vision a scornful lip, a proud and steady eye.

"He thinks I knew that he was here; he thinks—great Heaven—I sought him! He shall find out his mistake," she said, and twisted her abundant wavy locks about her head with firm unwavering touch.

In the course of that day another letter was brought to her.

"I insist on speaking to you," it ran. "I will wait for you by the chapel on the Newton road from three to four o'clock this afternoon. If you fail to appear, I shall call on Mr. Archer, and explain to him the difficulty in which I am placed."

To this Miriam deigned no reply

"Let him insist, let him explain!" she muttered. "I am not bound to do his bidding, I thank Heaven!"

However, as the appointed time drew near, she saw fit to alter her first decision.

"He shall not think I am afraid," she said. "Better see him, and have done with it!"

"Going out?" cried Mrs. Archer, in surprised accents, looking up from her book, as Miriam presented herself before her. "My dear, what a day! Better by half stay at home over the fire with me!"

"The day isn't so bad, Georgie—dull, but the wind is high enough to keep off the rain. Good-bye. I shall be back before dusk."

"Come forward and let me look at you. Are you well wrapped up?"

The girl showed herself in her long sealskin coat and hat, her friend regarding her with admiring eyes.

"Mind no one runs away with you," she said, laughing "You always look your best in your furs."

"Little fear of that!" Miriam declared, as she nodded farewell.

The parish of Eastwick was but a suburb of the town of Newton, and the town encroached yearly on the suburb. The road along which Miriam briskly walked was adorned with villa-residences, let and unlet, while many more were in the course of building. The road was not picturesque in any way, nor a favorite of Miriam's. The chapel, a thorn in the flesh of Sir Robert Hicks and his protege, the Rector, stood by itself at the boundary of the parish. It was a dreary edifice enough, the villa-residences for the present holding aloof; but fields on either hand were marked out for building purposes, and black boards therein on tall poles called the attention of the rich and speculative to the admirable sites to be disposed of. A dreary lane, looking miserable and uninviting enough on this bleak November day, ran up one side of the chapel, and it was at the entrance to this lane that Kingston Keene stood as his wife came up. She silently bowed her head to him as he silently raised his hat, then turned into the muddy lane.

"Will you be good enough to come this way?" he said. "We shall not be interrupted here."

Miriam walked by his side in silence, her head well erect, an air of protest in her face, looking like a beautiful captive princess. He switched restlessly at the branches with his umbrella as he walked, a look of embarassment on his bronzed face, a huskiness in his voice when he began to speak.

"I have asked you to come," he said. "It seemed right to me that a few things should be settled between us. I have to thank you for complying with my request." She bowed her head; and, after a moment, he went on—"It was a surprise for me to see you last night—a very great surprise!"

"It was not a less one for me to see you," she interrupted. "I should not have been likely to seek to make a home here, had I known."

"And yet," he rejoined, "it was not such a very unlikely thing to contemplate that I might at one time or another visit my sister."

"And could I guess that Lady Hicks was your sister?" she asked hotly, resenting something in his tone. "A moment's thought will remind you that you never told me anything of yourself or your belongings. Your after-conduct proved that my antecedents were of importance to you—they were important enough for a pretext, at least; but you did not condescend to treat me as a rational being who might have possessed some interest in yours."

"When we, together, committed that mad act five years ago," he began, but she interrupted him.

"I beg your pardon, the madness was yours alone; I was sane enough. I simply did as I was told, as I had always done. The project was distasteful to me, as you must have known all along, although you pretended that the knowledge came upon you as a shock; but my feelings in the matter were not consulted, if you remember My mother's consent was asked and given."

"Of course I must leave you your woman's privilege," he sneered. "You must make wild statements and use opprobrious epithets unreproved; but do not forget that something has to be said on my side—something!" he repeated, with a bitter laugh. "You were a child—granted; but not so much a child that you could not tell right from wrong, nor know the meaning of what you did; not too much of a child to have had lovers by the score, to have jilted them, to have been jilted by them; not so much of a child that you did not know the meaning of the word 'adventuress'—and that your mother was—nor the meaning of the word 'convict'—and that your father was; not so childish nor so innocent but that you had learnt the art of making dupes, and you made one of me!"

All the little color natural to the girl's cheeks faded at the cruel words, leaving her face white as marble.

"As Heaven is my witness," she said, in trembling, solemn tones, "of that last disgrace of—of my father, I knew nothing until that fearful day—I knew no more than you! I knew that we had no money—my mother and I—that we were in debt, that we moved constantly from place to place, that—that I was to be married as the only chance of escape from such a life; the rest had mercifully been kept from me."

"And from me," he returned bitterly, "till I learned it all too late—thanks to your disappointed lover. And so you see the wrong is not all on your side. I was tricked—tricked into allying my honorable name with one that in every conceivable manner had been dragged through the dirt. I was to have been tricked into paying your mother's debts and spending my life with the daughter of a forger for my companion. I declined. Who could blame me? There is nothing for which I can blame myself. You spoke just now of your poverty—at least, I guarded you against that—I saved you and your mother too from the life you were leading. That you are fortunately, however mysteriously, circumstanced to be able now to dispense with all assistance from me is gratifying no doubt to you; but I am of course anxious to continue to do what is right in the matter."

"Thank you," she said, with ironical calm; "you are too liberal. Do not, however, imagine that the allowance to which you allude ever benefited me. Do you think that I would have touched your money," she cried, with sudden fire—"one farthing of it? My mother took what you gave; I could not help that; but I—I worked for my bread. I drudged for years in second-class schools until I had fitted myself for something better, for when you freed me from yourself you freed me from another bondage. I was a slave to my poor mother no more; I have been mistress of myself since then, and shall ever be. When you wrote to me just now that you 'insisted' on an interview, did you think that such a paltry show of authority would influence me? I came entirely of my free will—as, presently, I shall leave. I acknowledge no right of yours, and I fear no threat."

"Nevertheless," he remarked, "I must still ask you to answer one question which"—with a cold smile—"I fear I shall have to 'insist' on your answering. What are your means of support at present? At the second-class schools did you make your fortune, or—"

"Do not trouble to make any further conjectures," she interrupted quickly. "I have no objection in the world to tell you. My money—a few hundreds a year—came to me from a brother of my mother's, who refused to help us while he lived, for the same reason which induced you to turn your back on us when we were in trouble and needed help."

"And you selected Eastwick as a place of residence—not permanent, I imagine?"

"Why not? I have every intention of making it permanent."

"Eastwick," he said, "is hardly big enough to hold you and me at the same time. One of us, I think, will have to go" He spoke with intentional cruelty, his eyes fixed upon the darkening landscape. "One of us must go."

"Then it will not be I," she answered, with quick decision.

"Very good," he rejoined calmly. "In that case you leave me no choice."

The short dull day was nearly over, the daylight fading slowly from the sky. The wind had dropped unnoticed as they talked, a drizzling rain had come on. Mechanically Mr. Keene, having opened his umbrella, held it over his wife's preoccupied head; so, walking side by side, they regained the entrance of the lane. Here Miriam, looking about her for the first time, became conscious of the increasing darkness, of the down-falling rain.

"If that is all you have to say to me, I should be glad to be getting home," she said.

"I think I need trouble you no further," he replied; then, after a moment's hesitation—"It is dark and wet, and you have no umbrella; I will walk by your side, if you will allow me."

"I should not dream of allowing it," she answered shortly; and, bowing her head, partly to free it from the protecting umbrella, partly in farewell to Mr. Keene, she left his side and walked away quickly down the sloppy road.

It was well perhaps that she had something to take her mind from the dismalness of that return journey. There was not light enough to show her where to choose her way; the Newton road abounded in pit-falls in the shape of sloughs of slushy mud and pools of standing water; the rain came down in torrents now, running off her little sealskin hat in streams over her face. She hurried on, only dimly conscious of the discomfort, but unpleasantly conscious of the irritation caused by the regular tread of a footstep a couple of yards behind her. She hailed with delight the corner where this annoyance would cease, where she should turn off into the road leading to the Rectory, while he would still continue his straight course to Eastwick Park. This welcome spot was marked by a public-house—at what corner is there where human beings congregate which is not so distinguished? The lights from the windows and door streamed upon the road, illuminating for a space its mud and its puddles. As Miriam reached this patch of light half a dozen men, noisy and hilarious, came out. For a moment she was in the midst of this boisterous and swaggering group; then, seeing with dismay that they also bent their straggling steps in the direction of the lonely road she must pursue, she drew back, shrinking into the shadow for a moment; and in that moment Mr. Keene was again beside her.

"You are not frightened?" he questioned; and the instinctive desire to shield what was weak and defenceless had given an unconsciously softened tone to his voice. "I shall walk beside you for the rest of the way."

And so for that further half mile Miriam trudged through mud and rain at her husband's side, as though she had played Joan to his Darby for many a year. The path was narrow in many places, and he had to flounder in the gutter to give her the best of the way; she never demurred, that loftily repudiated umbrella now held carefully over her head was a signal of defeat to her; she did not try again to escape from its shelter; she was beaten, she told herself, unnerved, unstrung! The excitement of the interview she had gone through, now that it was over, began to tell on her. How could she be dignified in her present wet and cold and draggled condition? How could she attempt to assert the independence of her spirit when he had been a witness to the terror with which a handful of half-tipsy men had inspired her?

Mr. Keene could only catch glimpses now and again of the pale face beside him; but he noticed the short quick breath she drew, and understood the dejected droop of her head. In spite of his anger and unrelenting sense of injury, a feeling of pity and involuntary tenderness stirred anew at his heart as he walked by her side. A few paces from the Rectory gate they encountered Mr. Archer sallying forth at his wife's command to seek for Miriam, and Mr. Keene resigned her to his care.

* * * * * * *

When next Miriam heard Mr. Keene's name mentioned, it was announced, amid some surprise, that he had left Eastwick Park, to the great disappointment of its inmates, and had betaken himself to London, where he had business which would detain him some little time. Two days after this news was conveyed to her she was at church, and it was somewhat of a shock to Miriam, in face of such welcome intelligence—having turned her head, at the sound of a firm footstep advancing up the aisle—to find Mr. Kingston Keene quietly taking his seat in the Eastwick pew. After that hurried glimpse of him, she looked no more, but was uncomfortably conscious all through the service of that embarrassing presence, all insufficiently separated from her by the intervening aisle—was troubled many times by the certainty that Mr. Keene's eyes were upon her.

"Why could he not have stayed away?" she asked herself, ashamed of her quickened heart-beats and her nervous self-consciousness. "He is right—there is not room in Eastwick for him and me."

Little Mrs. Archer was a good and tender-hearted woman, but she loved her ease and was a thought less devout than her indulgent husband would have preferred. Standing cloaked and bonneted by his side for afternoon service on that same Sunday, she looked a little enviously at Miriam lying back in a big chair, luxuriously at ease over the drawing room fire.

I wonder James does not make you come to church as he makes me?' James's wife said, with a pout and a smile.

Miriam looked up, laughing, into the face of her pastor and master.

"He is wise enough not to strain his authority in my case," she said. "I am not his miserable down trodden wife, and, much as I delight in his eloquence, I should rebel at having to lend an attentive ear more than twice in one day. I shall have little Tommie down directly, and we will amuse ourselves after our usual artless Sunday after noon fashion."

"Only don't make him ill with sweets, as you did last Sunday," the Reverend James stipulated, as he drew his wife away.

Miriam sat and dreamed on for another half hour, with a somewhat sad and troubled face, then aroused herself with a sigh, and ran up to the nursery. Tommie, a small and chubby urchin just promoted to knickerbockers, ran to her at once, and caught at her dress.

"Tommie go down with Mim," he announced, while a fat cherub of a year-old baby drew attention to itself by much infantine crowing. Miriam caught her up in her arms, cuddling the little head against her own neck as she carried her down stairs, while master Tommie, clinging to her dress, conscientiously bringing down both fat short legs on to every stair, remarked aggrievedly that—

"Baby were a bad girl. Her n'oughtn't to cry, and to want to come down with Mim, because her were only a baby—her weren't Mim's dear little Tommie, were he?"

Those Sunday afternoons spent in uninterrupted enjoyment of Mim's society, with leave to play with her watch and the big pocket at her throat, to search her pocket for the sweeties which always lurked there, were times of intensest enjoyment to Tommie. To-day his pleasure was a good deal marred by the uncalled for presence of baby, who had, as yet, he considered, no claim to the enjoyment of life. He eyed her discontentedly as she sat sucking her fingers and placidly staring at the blaze of the fire from the shelter of Mim's arm. That was his place on a Sunday afternoon, as baby ought to have known, and "Her's greedy!" he declared, with a grieved quiver of his lips, when the intruder mad it evident she would not consent to be ousted from that pleasant resting place. Then Miriam kissed the sweet trembling mouth, and made room for him beside her in the big arm chair.

The three of them made a pretty picture sitting there—Miriam in her black dress, her dark silky hair a little ruffled, the fire playing upon broad bands of gold at her throat and wrists, the children's curly flaxen heads nestled against her.

"Tommie wants a song?" the little man announced presently—"not a Sunday song, not a hymn."

So Miriam, in her rich sad voice, sang softly to him all the nursery rhymes—not a few—that she could remember. Tommie was a quiet and appreciative listener. Baby, from the soothing effect of the singing, or of the finger she incessantly sucked, had fallen asleep, when there came a ring at the door, Miriam stopped for a moment.

"Who can that be, Tommie? Some one to see nurse, I expect."

But Tommie was impatient.

"Go on," he said—"go on! You hasn't sung me that about the pig yet—that little pig what left his mummie."

"'Where are you going to you littl pig?'" began Miriam, singing Tom Hood's words to an improvised tune of her own. This tragedy of the pig was given in a manner which thrilled Tommie always.

Neither Miriam nor he heard the door open, nor noticed that some one stood for half a minute earnestly regarding that group by the fire, imprinting a picture on his memory that he would never forget, that he was to look at many a time afterwards with such a pang of longing and regret as his heart had never before known.

"'The butcher is coming, I've grown so big,'" sang Miriam, in tragic accents of woe, they broke off suddenly, with a start which woke the child in her arms and made Tommie cling closer to her.

Had the butcher really come? he wondered, looking with terror at the strange man who stood before him, putting out a hand to Miriam, which she could not or would not take. Instead, grasping the children, she rose from her chair, and moved towards the door.

"Do not go," said Mr. Keene; and Miriam, hesitating, looked him questioningly in the face, while baby, having inspected the stranger, broke into a loud wail, hiding her face on Miriam's breast. "I find that there is still a word I must say to you—you must suffer me to say it now."

Then Miriam rang the bell, and gave the child into the nurse's arms, Tommie, as he was led from the room commenting loudly on his sister's behavior.

"Her's a coward!" he declared, as he trotted off. "Tommie's not a coward; Tommie'll take care o' Mim."

Miriam's face had grown pale; but she spoke with ordinary quiet self possession, standing proudly before her husband, looking with unwavering glance into his face.

"I had hoped that we had had our last interview," she said. "Is it not passible that you can spare me this?"

"No," he answered, "it is not possible," then he paused a moment. "Will you not sit down?" he asked; but Miriam shook her head, standing erect and proud and fearless before him.

"Since I saw you," he began presently, speaking with some hesitation and even nervousness, "I have thought a great deal over things which you said. I have reviewed the circumstances of the case, all that took place five years ago. I have always told myself that I acted then in the only way in which it was possible for me, for any honorable man to act; but—I don't know—you have also your way of looking at matters, and I would not wish to have done you a wrong. My impulse was naturally to save my name from dishonor and my life from a too probable disgrace. I still think the action defensible, although it may have been, as I now see, an action fraught with more terrible importance, both to you and me, than I have ever somehow considered it before."

He paused a moment; she was still standing before him, regarding him with the same unwavering eyes.

"I have said all that I have to say on the subject," she replied coldly. "It seems to me as unnecessary as it is unpleasant to open it all up again."

"But I have told you that I had yet something to say." He turned slightly from her as he spoke, and, leaning on one hand on the mantelpiece, looked down into the fire; then he asked—"Will you come to me now? You are my wife; will you share my life, and my fortunes as my wife should?"

She made no answer—she was silent through utter surprise. He looked up from the fire and turned to her again, the nervousness gone from his voice and manner. He held out his hand to her.

"Never she replied, through white l firm lips. "I say never! How co you suppose for one moment that I sho consent to that? For what manne woman do you take me? Don't you k that I would rather be dead than yo wife now, that I would sooner kill m self?" Then, he remained silent, gave a little scornful laugh, and spok a lighter tone. "Besides, you are n earnest," she went on; "you have sufficiently counted the cost. This is day of my prosperity certainly, and was the day of my necessity and helpl ness; but I am still the daughter of mother, remember, and the daughter my father. You would still run the r of sullying that honorable name of yo And—and trouble might come agai some one might vilify and slander once more—who knows? When yo you had owned me as your wife, it mi not be so easy for you to turn your b on me, to slink away and leave me bear the burden alone. No; you have properly considered the risk you run, M Keene."

His face had grown almost as white hers; the hand which had lain on the m telshelf grasped the marble now with unconscious powerful grip; his voice hoarse when he spoke.

"Is that your final answer?" he ask

"Final, though you asked me every d of your life on your knees for the years," she answered.

"I shall not do that. But you are a perhaps that, if it were worth my w —if I liked, I could compel you to sent to my proposal."

"I do not believe it," she said calm "Laws are to protect liberty, not to sure oppression. And if it were not if I failed with the tale which I sh tell to prove my right, in spite of any to keep myself as far as might be from you—why, then, as I said, I wo kill myself—that is all."

And she meant it. The man knew t full well, looking at the proud fearl eyes, listening to the passionate scorn her voice.

"No," she went on more calmly, " cannot be forced to live with you, a you cannot be forced to let me go entir ly free. I know so much of the laws the land."

"Of the latter part of your asserti you have probably assured yourself" remarked suspiciously.

For the first time she turned away h eyes from him, and a rush of color st ed the pale face.

"The matter was inquired into for m she said. "There is no reason that I sho not tell you that."

At sight of that suddenly crimson face he started upright, his hands clinch his blood on fire with the hitherto guessed at madness of jealousy. He wai ed a moment to control his voice.

"Some gentleman probably prosecute those inquiries?"

At the sneering tone, she lifted h eyes again calmly to his face, and answ ed deliberately—

"Exactly! You are right; he was gentleman."

"And supposing that I had be dead, or the law had been more co plasant?"

"In that case I should have been h wife now."

The look which came into his face nea ly daunted her for a moment.

"How dare you tell me this?" he aske suppressed fury in his voice. "How da you?"

Why should I not dare? Of wh should I be afraid? But, having told yo so much, I will tell you more, that, whe once it was found to be impossible, wh once we knew that I must for my life yours be bound to you, he—this man whom you grudge the title of gentleman and I said farewell for ever. We kno how to accept the inevitable. He woul have died rather than have run the ri of causing fresh trouble to me."

"Confound him!" Kingston Kee said, through clenched teeth. "Confou him!"

Miriam looked at him, infinite co tempt in her eye.

"He anathematised you," she said bi terly—"perhaps with better cause."

SOUPS.

CALF'S HEAD SOUP.—Procure a head
d liver. Clean the head thoroughly, d split it in two; remove the brains, d lay them in cold water, with some pper and salt, and let it boil until it is t enough to take the bones out. Then llst the head is out of the water, put the liver and boil it until it is quite e, after which it must be chopped up y fine, together with the head, adding me onions, parsley and thyme. Then t it on to boil awhile, with a few unded cloves, a few potatoes, and some mplings. Make a thickening of two lks of eggs, and a piece of butter about e size of a walnut, all beaten well to-ther. A little vinegar or lemon juice y be added, if desired. When suffiently cooked, take the soup off the fire, rain the brains through a sieve into it, d stir it well. Better put the head on boil early in the morning, as it requires ng cooking before the bones can be re-oved. Boil gently.

GUMBO A LA FRANCAISE.—Cut into all pieces three quarters of a pound of esh beef, a slice of ham, a small piece codfish, or the meat of three crabs and y it all well. Brown an onion and cut into small pieces; cut into small, thin ices a quarter of a peck of okras; tie all bunches of thyme, and parsley toether, and remember that these must e taken out of the soup before it is erved. Take the seeds out of half of a reen pepper. Put all the ingredients nto a saucepan, add as much salt as is greeable to you, and cover them with oiling water; stew them slowly for five ours, stirring frequently with a silver poon, and occasionally adding boiling ater to them.

GUMBO SOUP MADE WITH GUMBO POWDER.—Make a nice broth (using whatever meat you please), and season it with fried onions and spices. Just before serving it, stir into it well some of the gumbo powder—about two tablespoonsful for three persons—and keep the pot over the fire until the soup thickens; then, if you have them, add some oysters or the meat of crabs.

GUMBO OR OKRA SOUP—AMERICAN.—Put five pounds of lean beef into a pot with one gallon of cold water; boil it until the scum rises, and then skim it thoroughly. Next add three peeled and sliced tomatoes and a small, finely-chopped onion, two small green peppers, and a quarter of a peck of gumbo, cut into thin slices across the grain. Salt the soup sufficiently, and let it boil slowly, but steadily. The beef should be set to boil about half-past nine o'clock, and the soup should cook from five to six hours. Skim off all the fat very carefully.

GUMBO SOUP—GENUINE WEST INDIA.—Boil four crabs; when cooked enough, take off the claws and outer shells, and whatever is considered unsafe eating, but keep the bodies whole. Place a pot over the fire, put into it a tablespoonful of lard, and then add the crabs, with a portion of some fat bacon or ham, cut into squares an inch thick; let the whole simmer and fry, without burning, until handsomely browned; then add two tomatoes, two peppers, a small onion sliced, and some salt. Have ready some boiling water, and pour a small portion of it in with the ingredients for the soup. After the sputtering subsides, continue to add the boiling water until you have about three quarts of soup in the pot; then add a quarter of a peck of chopped gumbo, and boil it five hours. Serve it without the bacon. Be careful to skim it, so as to remove all the grease.

MOCK TURTLE SOUP.—Prepare a calf's head very nicely, add three or four quarts of water to it, and let it boil until it is perfectly cooked; then take out the bones and cut it into fine pieces. Put it in the water it was boiled in, adding mace, cloves, and pepper, to your taste, and let it boil well. Prepare some well-browned flour (this ought to be attended to previously), adding as much butter as will make it rich, and some chopped onion-peel which has been browned; also, small portions of thyme and sweet marjoram. Stir all together, put it into the pot containing the calf's head, and when you think it is enough cooked, add some vinegar or lemon-juice to it; or, if you prefer, it can be served without the wine. Two or three hard-boiled eggs, chopped, and stired into the soup, is a great improvement.

The Camel.

The camel has twice the carrying power of an ox. With an ordinary load of 400 pounds he can travel twelve to fourteen days without water, going fourteen miles a day. They are fit to work at 5 years old, but their strength begins to decline at 25, although they live usually until 40. They are often fattened at 30 for the butcher, their flesh tasting like beef. The Tartars have herds of these animals, often 1,000 belonging to one family. They were numerous in antiquity, for the patriarch Job had 3,000. The Timbuctoo breed is remarkable for speed and used only for couriers, going 800 miles in eight days with a meal of dates or grain at nightfall.

Counterfeit Russian Notes.

An enormous quantity of counterfeit Russian notes have been accidentally discovered near Berne, Switzerland. Some children were playing on the bank of the river Limmath, when they discovered an odd looking parcel, which they carried home. The parcel was found to contain several thousand splendidly executed imitations of Russian bank notes. Most of them were of the denomination of three roubles and the whole amount represented on the face of the notes was $325,000. The Swiss authorities have notified the Russian Government and detectives are on their way here to make an investigation. It is feared that many of the counterfeit notes have already been circulated both in Russia and this country.

Poisoning.

In the year 1881 there were 569 deaths recorded in England alone from poisoning, while the year 1882 shows a record considerably in excess of this, viz, 599, or one in every 363 of the total deaths registered. Fully two-fifths of these cases are classified under the heading "Accident and Negligence;" the remainder are suicides; and as it is not too much to assume that in nearly every instance such cases are preventable, we purpose calling attention to some of the more common causes of these fatalities, in the hope that the suggestions and warnings thrown out may not be without their influence in producing more care in the handling and use of these dangerous substances. Glancing over the various poisons, we find that the well known preparations of opium, laudanum, and morphia—opium itself being included—head the list, having caused 85 deaths through accident or negligence. This might have been expected from preparations so largely used in domestic remedies; but the 78 deaths from lead poisoning which followed do surprise us, in view of the fact that the conditions which produce as well as the conditions which mitigate or counteract the effects of this subtle poison are now so well known. Lead is followed by the four stronger acids—hydrochloric, nitric, sulphuric, and carbolic—which among them have caused 34 deaths under the same category. Arsenic, again, caused 9; phosphorus, 11; chlorodyne, 6; chloral, 14; chloroform, 4; soothing syrup, 4, with a host of casualties from substances of minor importance. Reading between the lines of the Registrar-General's report, which it is not difficult to do with the help of the medical journals, we will find that there are two prolific causes of these accidents—first, the giving or taking of overdoses of certain remedies containing poison, and, second, the substitution of one bottle or substance for another, as, for example, where a number of substances are congregated together, as in the case of the domestic cupboard. In the first case may be instanced the giving of overdoses of opiates or soothing preparations to children; the taking of overdoses of narcotics or soothing compounds, such as chloroal, by habitual drinkers, and the general familiarity which the handling or using of these powerful agents frequently begets in those habitually using them. In the second class may be instanced such mistakes as the substituting of one bottle containing, say, a poisonous liniment for a mixture intended for internal administration; the hasty and foolish practice of quaffing off a draught from any jug, bottle, or dish without examining the contents, and, lastly, mistakes caused from accumulating within easy access powerful medicines in the hope that they may come of future use.

HAVE A SMILE.

Feminine instinct is nearly always unerring. This is why all women choose good husbands, and why they always know that their own boy is in the right when everybody else thinks he is in the wrong.

"No," said the dying punster with a grim smile; "no, I don't object to flowers, but don't have any violets, please. I shouldn't care to have my grave violeted, you know." It was immediately agreed that it was best that he should go.

A Texas man made a bet that he could invent a question to which fifty people would give the same answer. He won the bet. The question was: "Have you heard that Smith has committed suicide?" The answer in each case was: "What Smith?"

A young lady whose very best young man lived over the way with his parents, took a seat by the window one cloudy morning. "Why do you sit by the window such a chilly morning, Laura?" asked her mother. "I'm waiting for the son to come out, ma," she replied.

An English magazine contains an article entitled: "What Dreams Are Made Of." As the author fails to mention mince pie, pickled pigs' feet, fruit cake and several other indigestible things, it is evident he has tackled a subject upon which he lacks information.

"Bric-a-brac is fast disappearing from fashionable mantle-pieces," read Mrs. Crimsonbeak from the daily papers the other evening. "I'm glad of that," replied her husband, looking up for a moment; now a fellow will have some place in the house to put his feet.

The passion for sealskin sacques, which was exclusive two or three years ago, has been working down among the people until they are discarded by the elite and are worn by carters' wives and the green-grocers' daughters. There seem to be some objects which carry the female mind away from its moorings, and among them is the sealskin sacque.

The head of the house has been in the habit of occasionally taking home a ready-made pie, believing that "pie and civilization go hand in hand." Last Sunday a home-made one was put on the table. The crust was not as brown as that of the others had been, and little Rilla, examining her section with a critical eye, said: "Mamma, this ain't a laundry pie, is it?"

Language of the Shop.

The language of the shop and the market must not be expected to be very exact; we may be content to be amused by some of its peculiarities. I cannot say that I have seen the statement which is said to have appeared in the following form: "Dead pigs are looking up." We find very frequently advertised, "Digestive biscuits"—perhaps digestible buscuits are meant. In a catalogue of books an "Encyclopædia of Mental Science" is advertised; and after the names of the authors we read, "invaluable, 5s 6d.;" this is a curious explanation of invaluable.—[Macmillan's Magazine.

THE GRIFF HALL MURDER.

Near the town of Settle, in Yorkshire, England, stands Griff hall. Edward Strongtharin was the occupant. He was the brother of the former occupant, whose only daughter, Eveline, was his sole heiress. On her father's death she was left to the guardianship of her uncle, and at the time of which this narative treats was on a visit to a relative in Somersetshire.

On the evening of Dec. 17, 1824, a carriage drove to the main entrance of the hall and three gentlemen alighted and asked to see Mr. Strongtharin. One of them, who gave his name as Mr. Lovett, said he was a lawyer of Gloucester, and introduced another as Mr Shotwell, a London attorney. The other a youth of about 23, was not introduced until later on.

"We have come," said Mr. Lovett, "about a very peculiar affair. Your late brother married here, I believe, about the year 18 6, and has one child, Eveline. Were you aware that he was married previous to that time? We have evidence incontrovertible that in June, 1800 he was married near Cardiff, in Wales, to one 'Eleanor Lewis,' by whom he had a son, who is alive and heir to his father's estate. This is the young gentleman—Mr. Charles Strongtharin, named after his father."

Mr. Lovett with a wave of his hand indicated the young gentleman referred to.

"Now," said Mr. Lovett, "I may say that this young gentlman's mother, the lawful wife of Charles Strongtharin, still lives."

"I know not," replied Mr. Edward Strongtharin, "what to answer. At the best it would be but a temporizing one, as, of course, Miss Eveline and her legal adviser would have to be consulted."

After further talk the visitors rose to depart, but on reaching the door was informed by the coachman that one of his horses had gone lame and it was impossible to use them, and there was nothing left for Strongtharin to do but to offer them shelter for the night.

When the servants arose at Griff hall the next morning they found their master in his bedroom with his throat cut. His strong box had been broken open and its valuable contents, consisting of its old family jewels and silverware and a large sum of money were missing. The library had been ransacked and other places where anything of value was likely to be had been visited, and a magnificent sword studded with precious gems of priceless worth, presented to an ancestor of the family by Charles II, was among the articles missing. It is needless to say that the three visitors of the evening before could not be found.

Detectives from London began a very thorough investigation. The fact was ascertained that the carriage which had passed through the neighbouring toll-gate at about 7 o'clock in the evening returned at 3 o'clock in the morning. It had avoided the main road for some distance, and was then heard of at Castleton, on the great north road. At Castleton the men had separated and gone away singly, and all search for them was in vain.

After the death of Mr. Edward Strongtharin the heiress, instead of returning to Griff hall at the end of her visit in Somersetshire, went to London to reside with her grandaunt, Lady Ainsworth, a woman advanced in years and of great wealth. Among her aunt's domestics Eveline saw a woman named Harper, whom she fancied she had seen before, and, after some reflection, it suddenly occurred to her that the woman had for some time been employed in the laundry at Griff hall, just before Eveline's departure for Somersetshire. The woman evidently did not recognize the person of Eveline, but on learning from her fellow-servants that the young lady was the niece and ward of Mr. Strongtharin, who had recently been murdered, she grew nervous and excited, and in a few days afterwards gave notice that she intended to leave, on the ground of ill-health and want of rest.

"She is pretty well off," Eveline's maid said to her mistress, "for she has plenty of money in her trunk, and I have seen her with jewelry in her possession fit for a queen. When I asked her where she got them she replied that one of her old mistresses gave them to her at her death. One of them is especially beautiful—a griffin of carbuncles and garnets with emeralds and diamonds mixed, set in silver."

Now, this was an exact description of one of the pieces of family jewelry stolen from Griff hall on the night of that dreadful crime. Eveline communicated the fact to Lady Ainsworth, who considered it of such importance that she immediately drove to her lawyer's, who went to Scotland Yard and consulted with the authorities there. The result was the examination of the contents of the servant's trunks, unknown to her, and indentification beyond question of the silver griffin and of a small gold watch made at Florence, and studded with pearls, as part of the jewelry stolen from the hall. The same evening a notorious outlaw, known as the Hawk, was discovered prowling in the neighborhood of Lady Ainsworth's dwelling, and in a little time the servant Harper came out and joined him. They were traced to the great Turnstile, in Lincoln Inn Fields, and there the perpetrators of the Griff hall murder and several of their associates, wanted for other crimes, were captured.

The three men engaged in the crime at Griff hall were tried at hall assizes in 1826 and convicted, and in twenty-four hours paid the penalty of their misdeeds. The woman was sentenced to penal servitude and dispatched to Botany bay.

At present there are something over 3,000 Indians in southern California.

LITTLE BITS.

An exchange puts it thus: "Lucy—your spring poem is accepted, but its publication is indefinitely postponed."

When the marriage ceremony was over, the parson was approached by the groom with the question: "What's the damage, elder?"

We heard of a man the other day who was said to be mean enough to steal a coat of paint. But he can't equal the party who tried to steal a dog's pants.

"For my part," said Mrs. Partington, "I'm disappointed in your Charlie. I thought when we went to see the Indians at the circus that Charlie could talk with them, but he didn't know a word of their language, and here he's been every evening for a year practicing with Indian clubs."

"These candidate fellers," cries an exasperated farmer, "can talk pretty slick about the grandeur and independence of farm life, but I'll wager my last year's straw hat that none of 'em ever tried to convince a pig that it ought to go out of the garden by the way of the same hole in the fence that it came in!"

I understand you have been on a sick bed for some time, said Smith, in a tone of condolence, as he shook Jones by the hand. "Not at all," replied Jones: "Not at all. The bed's as good a bed as a man ever lay on. 'Twas I that was sick, not the bed." Smith was so taken aback, that he went on without speaking the words of sympathy that he intended.

The Difficulties of Disposing of Land in England.

That land in small parcels should be looked upon as a good security for loans by bankers in Switzerland is strong evidence of the system of transfer and registration of charges. In England and Ireland the possession of land in small parcels remains, notwithstanding recent changes in the law, as Lord Brougham described it, "a luxury which a rich man may indulge in, but a ruinous extravagance in the man of small means. Sir Robert Torrens thus describes the effect of the English system on land considered as a security for a loan: "The value of the land as a basis of credit is seriously depreciated by the curiously fictitious, we may say absurd, procedure in the case of mortgage; the object being to hypothecate or charge the land with a sum of money as security for a loan. Instead of doing this in a straightforward and direct manner, as is done by a dozen lines in the space of fifteen minutes under registration of title, the estate of the mortgagor is conveyed to the mortgagee by deed subject to a right of redemption." In the words of the same writer: "The system of conveyancing in this kingdom is by means of its insecurity, costliness, delays, complexities, and cumbrousness, unsuited to the requirements of this commercial age, and does seriously depreciate the natural value of land." In spite of the undoubted fact that, no matter how ample may be the value of the parcel of land in comparison with the loan, the security of a small plot of land is bad because it is only realizable at very great expense, an urgent demand is made that public money should be largely lent in Ireland on small parcels of land. Little is said and nothing proposed in the way of changing the law so as to make the security good by being easily realizable and transferable. This might be done by bringing land on which public money is loaned, and at the moment when the title is cleared for that purpose, under a system of registration of title and by prohibiting for such parcels the creation of entails, trusts, and such estates as would make the title complicated and not transferable at any moment.

What Number of Meals?

Respecting the number of meals one ought to patronize, that must be regulated by want and habit. To digest well, it is necessary that the stomach should have completely dealt with the previous meal. However feeble and delicate stomachs have need to eat but little at a time, though frequently. Also, to make an intelligent selection of those aliments which refresh, heat and sustain. The aliment which digests best is the most suitable. Digestion is but the preference of the stomach for some things it likes, the attraction of suitable ingredients; it is the sustaining of our organs and their tissues, and if the stomach be healthy and well-constituted, its instinct will never be at fault. "Strawberries and cream make me sad," said Madame du Deffand, but they agreed with her not the less.

VICTORIA'S LITTLE STORY.

How the Millionaire's Daughter Came to Marry the Coachman.

Notwithstanding the fact that volumes have been written and published about the famous Morosini elopement case, and various explanations made as to how the lady became enamored with her father's coachman, the real facts were never brought to light until they were obtained by a reporter from Mrs. Schelling herself. The story is a remarkable one. Mrs. Schelling, in reply to questions on the subject, said:

"From childhood up it has been my pleasure to roam at will through the forest which surrounded my home. Riding, too, was a great enjoyment to me, not because Ernest drove, for then I had no interest in him. One day I went to ride on the road that winds along the banks of the beautiful Hudson River. From one point on that road, the ruins of an old stone mansion are visible. It stands on the top of a hill at a considerable distance from the road to the right. I had often wished to go nearer to its moss-grown walls, but had always been deterred by some member of the family being with me, or else the sign marked 'dangerous,' which was nailed to a tree in front of it. But this day I was alone and determined.

ERNEST DROVE,

and, notwithstanding his entreaty, I sprang out of the carriage and was soon peering into the great entrance of the old ruin. Arming myself with a stick, I pushed aside the vines and creepers that overhung the open door and stood within the great hallway, which was filled with poisonous undergrowth. The interior presented such a wild and gloomy aspect that I was almost on the point of running away. Had I done so, Victoria Morosini would never have married Ernest Schelling. Being that day

IMBIBED WITH A SPIRIT OF ADVENTURE,

I mounted to the top of a flight of stone steps. There I found a narrow hallway leading into a large room at the back. I started to traverse that hall, but on taking three or four steps forward there was a crash. I felt myself falling, falling, and then I became unconscious. When I regained my senses some days after, I was lying in bed in my father's house, surrounded by anxious friends and relatives, and Earnest (who had rescued me, crushed and bleeding, from beneath the wrecked floor) stood over me with a white face. They were awaiting for the doctor's decision as to my chances for life. I had lingered for days, wasting slowly. "It is a serious wound," said the physician. "She has suffered great loss of blood, and I predict her death within an hour, unless the one chance that alone remains for her is taken. It is blood transfusion." All this I heard him say without being able to open my eyelids or speak a word. Then there was another pause. Not one of them moved. Then Ernest Schelling stepped forward, and without a moment's hesitation he and said calmly, yet oh, so determinedly: "Take from my veins the last drop of blood if it will save her life." The blood was transfused from Ernest's arm to mine. He saved my life, for I was strong almost immediately. Then there arose an intuitive attachment between us. How could I resist loving the man to whom I owed my life, and who pleaded for that love—the being whose life-blood courses in my blood, warming me back to life? It was a great debt I owed him, and one I have cheerfully paid—if, indeed, the poor recompense of my willing hand could pay it. He says it has. Our vows, at least, are indissoluble. It is a bond of love between us that is fixed, unaltered, unalterable. Had I a thousand years of my life, I'd live it all with him; and now you know why Victoria Morosini wedded Ernest Schelling."

About Oatmeal.

A dish of oatmeal on the breakfast-table is now so much a matter of course in this country that the rising generation who properly appreciate the matutinal porridge will be astonished to learn that this wholesome diet has only come in general use within the last fifteen years. Curiously enough, the merit of its introduction among us is mainly due, not to a native of the "Land o' Cakes," as might reasonably have been the case, but to the business energy of a poor but far sighted German, who, in the nature of things, had practical acquaintance with the excellent qualities of the food which he has been so largely instrumental in giving to a willing people.

The story of this old German, Ferdinand Schumacher by name, who began the manufacture of oatmeal at Akron, O., in the most modest way, and who is now the owner of great wealth, including half a dozen mills, two grain elevators, and several warehouses, with upward of a thousand people employed in his oatmeal business, is remarkable, illustrating as it does the success which sometimes results from a happy idea wisely carried out.

So far there has been nothing but benefit to those who use the morning porridge as a palatable and healthful change from the cakes made of buckwheat and other grains, which were formerly consumed in far greater quantities than since oatmeal made its appearance to share the favor then and still accorded them. Kind nature has dealt so lavishly with us in the variety and excellence of the cereal products that we have not to depend upon any single one of them to round out the pleasures of the morning meal to their fullest proportions. But oatmeal, nevertheless, has given us a new and wholesome dish, for which we are duly appreciative.

MARKDALE JAN. 8, 1885.

INCONSISTENCY.

If there is one weakness in an individual more despicable than another, and which is certain to shake the confidence, and expel the trust which the public may have placed in him, whether in public matters, business relations, or in the social circle, it is inconsistency; and of all the uncouth characteristics exhibited by our con temporary, the Flesherton Advance, the above undesirable feature stands out glaringly prominent.

A charitable allowance must be made for the inherited peculiarities of perverted human nature. From such we know what to expect, and are not disappointed, inasmuch as they pursue an undeviating course of senseless opposition to the recognized rules of common sense.

The inconsistent man is the more base, as he possesses a superficial knowledge of right and wrong, and therefore cannot plead absolute ignorance of the social laws he violates.

The appearance of Flesherton news in the Advance a week later than it had appeared in the STANDARD is quite a common occurrence. The civil question we put to the editor of that paper two weeks since, as to where he got his report of the East Grey Conservative meeting held in Markdale, has not been answered; of course we knew where it came from all the same, as there was no person or paper had it but ourselves. It is a recognized custom among country editors to clip from city papers without always giving credit, but to steal matter from a neighboring exchange, (even he should mutilate it before publishing) is a different matter.

In regard to Mr. F. endeavoring to create a little denominational sympathy, we will not here make further reference; the public are generally aware of his tactics, and will doubtless credit him with his full due.

ANOTHER BEAR SCARE.

Since the great bear hunt last summer, the particulars of which appeared in the STANDARD at the time, each and every of our sportsmen who try their luck in the neighborhood of the Saugeen. keep a sharp look-out for bruin.

Last Friday afternoon Mr. —— Smith, our popular tonsorial artist, and Mr. Burnside, of the Meat & Poultry Mart, sallied out in the direction of the R. R. crossing over the Saugeen, each taking opposite sides of the river. Toward evening Mr. B. discovered a grizzly high up on a hemlock tree, and although his gun was only charged with fine shot, he fired, at the same time shouting to Mr. S. on the opposite side of the river, "a bear, a lynx, or a wild-cat." Mr. S. had to make a considerable detour to reach the spot, but by this time Mr. B. had exhausted his ammunition, without making any perceptible impression on bruin. Mr. S. added the contents of two more charges, when there came to the ground, with a dull thud—horror of horrors! —not a bear, but an immense porcupine, not less than sixty pounds weight and covered with a coat of mail that would have resisted grape-shot; and but for an accidental hit which Mr. Smith got in on the under side of the body, the Nimrods might have been peppering at him yet, without any material effect. It is proposed to have the skin stuffed.

Magistrates' Court.

Last Monday afternoon W. Brown, Esq., J. P., with S. Rae, and Henry Irwin, J. P's, opened court at the Markdale House, in this town, to investigate a charge of house breaking, laid by Isabella Sinclair, of Flesherton Station, and said to have occurred during the "wee sma' hours ayont the twal," on last New Years morning. The implicated were Messrs. A. Patterson, R. Hannah, and T. Cornett, who were represented in the accusation as being the guilty parties, and the testimony went to show that their early morning visit to the mansion of "lady" Sinclair was purely in accordance with the old-time usage of New Year Calls. The family servants of the mansion appeared to have deserted their posts at this juncture. or may have been absent on a "jubilee;" for we learn that her ladyship had, in person, accompanied by the heir prospective, to attend the bell-ring, Patterson gained admittance into the spacious hall, and the customary cakes and wine not appearing, he grew obstreperous, and threatened to turn things inside out. The (supposed) men, Cornett and Hannah, left, while Patterson remained master of the situation, who left shortly afterward; but failed to attend the call of summons. The witnesses, when confronted with Mr. Cornett, acknowledged their error in implicating him; and as to Mr. Hannah, they identified him by the color of his clothing—a difficult task at the present day. Mr. Lamon, who appeared for the defence, demanded an acquittal of both Messrs. Hannah and Cornett. The latter was dismissed from custody; but, in case of Mr. Hannah, altho' there was neither sound of voice, nor other peculiarity, except the clothing, to identify him, the remaining witnesses had to be examined. The testimony of the latter witness for the prosecution elicited no new information. Mr. A. Hannah, for the defence, distinctly stated that Mr. R. Hannah went to bed at the usual hour, and could not have left or returned to the building without his knowledge, being unwell on the night in question. Very much of the straggling testimony of the prosecuting witness was overthrown by Mr. Hannah, in such conclusive manner as to convince both court and audience that there was "something rotten in the state of Denmark," and a complete dismissal of the charge, as against Messrs. Hannah and Cornett, was rendered. Much sympathy was expressed for Mr. Cornett and his blooming spouse, who had necessarily to attend in order to prove an alibi; but, as for Mr. Hannah, we believe he rather enjoyed the joke, as he was able to prove his presence in Toronto on Christmas day when he was sworn to as being present in Flesherton Station.—Is there such a law as duality of person, or is it only a phantasm of "seeing double?"

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

I see, on reading the Advance of the 1st inst.. that I am specially favored by that scurrilous sheet, being made the subject of one of its vile editorial screeches. In the first place, in his usual loose-mouthed way he says I lied. Now, Mr. A. R. Fawcett, as the only safe way to treat any man who uses that expression without any provocation, as you have done, is Josh Billings' plan of handling the skunk: pounding him to death with a pole 365 feet long; and as neither the pole nor the ——— is at hand, I pass on to secondly, in which you make use of eight lines explairing your preference for the low, vulgar style of expressing your sentiments, that was a needless waste of ink, as your subscribers are fully acquainted with your debased and degrading tastes long ago. Thirdly. You say I "am not justified in expressing any opinion whatever in the matter," simply because "you do not know that I ever had a letter published in a newspaper before." That opinion of yours harmonizes beautifully with your weak-minded, lob-sided, narrow-souled way of viewing "matters" generally; but it is the privilege of wise men to profit by the experience of others. Fourthly. You say "the Advance never has and never will refuse to allow any man, woman or child to obtain a fair hearing in its columns;" and now, Mr. A. R. F., I will prove that you have published what you knew to be utterly false, a vile, sneaking lie, to give your paper a puff. I will prove it first from the Advance. In a snubbing, administered by you, to some person who had the "temerity" to open his mouth and speak about the 1st of July last. You describe the state of his intellect, and ascribe it to the fact that you had refused to allow him a hearing in the columns of the Advance. I will next produce proof from a more reliable source, as follows: At an entertainment given near here last winter, the chairman interupted a gentleman while reading, and made some very strong assertions regarding the article being read, giving neither proof nor reason: The result was, a variety of stories were floating round as to what the reading was. The chairman of committee sent you a copy of it, asking you to give it to the public in the columns of the Advance, and requested the person who had made the attack to prove his position. You not only refused, but returned, gratuitously, a large sheet containing your opinion of it which, for impudence and egotism it would be hard to equal.

JAMES HANSON, "ESQ."

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—A communication, purporting to be a report from Meaford Road Sabbath School, cannot be read without serious impressions. Let me say, that I am not a very great admirer of the rev. gentleman spoken of, neither am I connected with the Sabbath School in question, or with the congregation in fact; then, I am an outsider, but one who has heard a good deal about the doings of the Meaford Road people in relation to this business. It is easily conceivable, by the report, that its spirit is anything but christian forbearance—it is an onslaught on the doings of an aged Methodist minister—and altho' the plea of "Union" is put in, for vindication, it won't hold water, in the face of circumstances. It is well known, that when Union took place, the principal parties to it, were the Primitive Methodist and the Wesleyans—other parties being so insignificant, could not be considered a party to the transaction.—Recently it will be remembered a Union of all the Methodist bodies took place, and hence those who fell in with Union, assembled at the one place for worship. What then, would be more natural, than that the United parties, should fall in line and adopt the constitution, sanctioned by the United body for their Sabbath Schools; it was by this the rev. gentleman was impressed, and actuated, It should be known, that according to Methodist usage and law, all church property belongs now to the United church, held by trustees for that purpose. Mr. McDowell is the authorized chairman of this Board on and in behalf of the Confere ce. Then follows a sequence, that those churches may not be used for other purposes than those immediately affecting the body—certainly not for Union purposes, so called where, joint reports to the conferences from such Union schools, are inadmissible. But again every minister, faithful to his church, sees to it, or is expected to see a Sabbath school in connection with each congregation, overseen and controlled by officers duly under the influences of his ministry—so far as it may be obtained—not refusing the friendly assistance of others who take an interest in Sabbath school work. So far as this school is concerned, the principal was partially adopted, in the power vested in the minister by its constitution; so that a mere change of base would not affect the operation of the school one particle. Then if Mr. McDowell was merely discharging the behests of his Conference as pastor of the congregation, how is he to be blamed? But how must it appear with those of his congregation, who are expected to carry out the discipline of the church as well as the minister? It is a generally admitted fact that when a man or woman unites with any given branch of the church, their fidelity to act in all things tending to promote its interest should be unexceptionable. But in this case, Sir, a resolution carefully drawn, and as full of venom, as it is, is sent to the press by a Presbyterian secretary. What is the object? Is it to promote the interests of the school? It cannot be; for the sober thoughts of the congregation will resent such an offensive article—aimed as it was at an aged minister, for only attempting to discharge his duty, and who is greatly esteemed by many of the congregation. Who then was to blame? It is not my business to recriminate. It is only to notice the absence of the names of so many of the long tried Methodists of the congregation from its lists of officers and teachers, to know that there must be "a nigger in the fence" somewhere, and the sentiments uttered by Mr. McDowell, that "God is not with you" is as true as its utterance; proved by the resolution and its publication. It should not be forgotten in connection with the difficulty as before hinted that the Union cry has no force whatever in face of facts, but that the difficulty arises out of relentless faction by men who, altho' allied to the church, are its bitter enemies, and a source of weakness to it on this Sabbath school question—so thinks an OUTSIDER.

Many people in the States have the idea that Canada is a country of snow and ice compared with which their own is a perfect paradise of endless summer. Such a notion is not borne out by facts. They have quite as much frost and snow, and just as cold weather as we have. It may not last quite as long perhaps, but even in that respect there is very little difference.

The various councils of township municipalities will hold their first meeting at the place where the last meeting of the old council was held, commencing at eleven o'clock on the third Monday in January. County councils meet on the fourth Tuesday of January. The time of above meetings are fixed by statute.

Selling off at Cost.—Dundas is selling his entire stock of Groceries, Crockery and Glassware at cost. You can save at least 25 to 50 per cent. by buying above lines at Dundas'. His stock is fresh and good and well bought. This is no sham sale. I purpose giving my whole attention to the Boot & Shoe business. Don't miss this opportunity.

Commendable Enterprise.— Wm. Edward, eldest son of Mr. Thomas Brady, of Euphrasia, has a bull-calf 10 months old which weighs 880 lbs. This kind of enterprise manifested in farmers' sons at such a junior period in life, exhibiting a determination to have the best stock in the neighborhood, and thus take a prominent position in the agricultural community is certainly commendable.

The annual meeting of Harkaway Grange was held on the 27th ult., when the following officers were elected for 1885:—Worthy Master, Peter Smith; Overseer, David Squires; Secretary, E. W. Moore; Lecturer, Joseph Hawkins, Jr.; Treasurer, Robert Elliott; Chaplain, Jas. Logan; Steward, Wm. Corbett; Assistant Steward, George Ptolemy; Gatekeeper, John Thompson; Seres, Mrs. W. Moore; Flora, Mrs. P. Smith; Pomona, Mrs. R. Elliott; Lady Assistant Steward, Miss A. Smith. A resolution was passed to order a copy of the Grange Bulletin for each head of family connected with the Grange, for 1885.—Com.

The annual Christmas tree entertainment in connection with the English church S. School was held in the Orange Hall on the 30th ultimo. Notwithstanding the very unfavorable condition of weather and roads, the attendance was large, the hall being completely filled. The plays, singing & recitations of the S. S. scholars were generally well rendered; some of the plays were exceedingly entertaining and amusing. The great joy and delight of the little folks was in the distribution of the presents from Christmas tree, which looked very beautiful when illuminated. It was laden with numerous and valuable presents. Quite a number of the Maxwell friends were present.

Presbyterian Tea-Meeting.—Notwithstanding the bad state of the roads, there being neither sleighing or good wheeling, the Presbyterian church was well filled on the evening of New Years day. After a sumptuous repast was partaken of, and apparently much enjoyed, Rev. Mr. Wilson called the meeting to order and entered at once upon the program. The following took part, viz:—J. R. Anderson, J. Lamb, Miss Cornwall, Misses Ford, Miss Wilson, W. A. Brown, Alfred Moffat, Mrs. Trimble, J. R. Anderson and company, and Dr. Sproule. The latter gave an interesting address on "the five senses," viz:—Sight, Hearing, Smell, Taste, and Touch, delineating various degrees of pleasure which may be enjoyed by the cultivation of the senses. The entertainment passed off very pleasantly and terminated at an early hour. Proceeds $48.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Since last writing you, New Years day has come and gone, and we are fairly launched out again in another New Year. May each of its months, days and hours be better and more profitably spent than any that is gone. New Years day was very quiet in our village during the day, no particular amusement of any kind going on; a few persons idling around the shops that were kept open, M. Richardson's being the only business place that observed the day as a holiday. In the evening the annual New Year Anniversary of the Methodist Sabbath School was held in the Methodist church. Owing to the very bad state of the roads the attendance was not so large as usual. After a sumptuous tea had been served in the basement, and the company had assembled in the lecture room of the church. A most popular programme was gone through. The children performed their parts well. The singing by the school was very good. The dialogue by Edwin Richardson and company of boys, entitled the "Auction," was well done by Edwin and brought forth loud applause. Under the untiring efforts of Mr. C. Sproule and the company of about twelve that assisted him, the Cantata, "Santa Claus," was well rendered. The solos by Misses. Bellamy, Leitch and Richardson were well sang. Misses. Ada Sproule, Lou. Armstrong, Annie Richardson and Addie McDowell, as goddesses, rendered their parts well. Mr. A. R. Fawcett as "Frost King", and Master Edwin Richardson as "Santa Claus", fairly brought down the house.

Monday last, fair day, was poorly attended, not many cattle on the market.

A few days ago Mr. Joseph Watson, who resides about six miles east of this village, when on his way home, a short distance from the village, his horse upon which he was seated, frighted at something on the road-side, and threw the old gentleman from her back. He received some severe bruises, but since is recovering nicely.

The Rev. Mr. Shaw of Dundalk delivered a very interesting sermon in the Methodist church last Sabbath morning. In the evening Dr. Christoe addressed the people upon the subject of Temperance.

The election in Ward No. 4, Eugenia, being the only ward a vote was polled in this township was a keen contest between Mr. Pedlar and Mr. W. McKee. The contest was so keen that a number of ladies who have votes in that ward were driven to the polls. Mr. Pedlar suffered defeat this year by a majority for Mr. McKee of 13.

Walters Falls.

From Our Own Correspondent.

A complete thaw; snow almost totally gone. Saturday afternoon it was still freezing, as it had been for weeks almost before, but a little after dusk a sudden change came—so sudden that every one was surprised—rain began to fall, and quite a gradual thaw set in which continued all next day (Sunday), but yesterday became more rapid; rain all day to-day, and all vestiges of sleighing have disappeared. I have often observed, when a thaw commences, that if it is accompanied by a very high wind, the wind soon shifts round again in the freezing direction, but this is a quiet, insidious, but determined break-up, without any bluster; not a green Christmas, but a green New Year. Wonder if the thaw is so complete other places, as our connection with the outer world is very slight,—

For only twice a week,
Does the poor postman seek,
His weary, dreary journey.

A saddler has arrived and began business, a circumstance unprecedented in the past history of our future town.

We have had a very enjoyable Christmas here, notwithstanding the hard times. The annual tea-meeting in the Methodist church, was a great success. The church, though densely packed, was full to overflowing; even standing room, at last, could not be obtained. Numbers could not gain admission. The handsome sum of $160 was realized, including the sale of an autograph quilt. Short humorous addresses, appropriate to the occasion, were given by several clergymen who attended from a distance, conspicuous among whom were Revs. David and Chas. Perry, who were received with the warm welcome of friends, both having been on this circuit in former years, and both being highly esteemed.

A notable event since I wrote you last, was the marriage of Miss Helen Nora Griffin and Mr. Frederick Thompson, both of this place. This marriage has been on the tapis for a considerable time, and was confidently expected; but the sudden announcement at last, that it was to come off in a few days, caused considerable commotion among all classes. The union was appointed to be solemnized at the residence of the bride's stepfather, Mr. Thos. Campbell, by Rev. John Pepper. The eventful morning was ushered in by a snowstorm from the East: shall we say "Happy is the bride that the snow snows on"—snow instead of rain—well, by making allowance for the climate, and with the knowledge that snow is but rain congealed, snow may be just as auspicious an omen on the occasion as rain, then let us repeat with confidence, "Happy is the bride that the snow snows on," A great many of the residents had been invited, and about thirty made their appearance to witness the ceremony, which was performed with all due solemnity at 10 o'clock a. m. A sumptuous repast was then served up which was partaken of with zest by the assembled guests. The bride was the recipient of many valuable presents, and the happy couple, that afternoon, started from Markdale on a bridal tour to the States.

FOR THE FARMER.

Why Some Farmers do not Succeed.

They are not active and industrious.
They are slothful in everything.
They do not keep up with improvements
They are wedded to old methods.
They give no attention to details.
They think small things not important.
They take no pleasure in their work.
They regard labor as a misfortune.
They weigh and measure stingily.
They are wasteful and improvident.
They let their gates sag and fall down.
They will not make compost.
They let their fowls roost in trees.
They have no shelter for stock.
They do not curry their horses.
They leave their plows in the field.
They hang the harness in the dust.
They put off greasing the wagon.
They starve the calf and milk the cow.
They don't know the best is the cheapest.
They have no method or system.
They have no ears for home enterprise.
They see no good in a new thing.
They never use paint on the farm.
They prop the barn door with a rail.
They milk the cows late in the day.
They have no time to do things well.
They do not read the best books and newspapers.

A Farmer's Liability to His Hired Men.

There are duties of a master to men, which, if not faithfully performed, render the master liable for the injury resulting to the men from such failure:

1. To exercise due care in the hiring and retention of employes. 2. To exercise due care in the purchasing and retension of machinery. 3 To exercise due care in keeping his buildings and premises in safe and proper condition. 4. To exercise due care not to expose his men to other than the ordinary risks of the business for which they are hired. Among the general duties of the last group are: One of the risks which a workman assumes when he engages in any employment, is that which arises from carelessness on the part of his fellow workmen. If two farm hands, presumably competent, are set to work together, and one carelessly injures the other, the injured workman has no claim therefor upon the master. But if the master failed in the first duty above set forth, i. e., if he hired a man whom he knew to be incompetent, or if he did not exercise due care to ascertain that the man was competent, then he, the master, would be liable for injury suffered through such incompetence by another workman, without fault on the part of the latter, To illustrate this point: Suppose a farmer hires a careless boy and sets him to driving a spirited team; if the boy by his carelessness allows the team to run away and injure another workman, the farmer will be liable. He has here failed in his duty to exercise proper care in the selection of his employes. But if he had used the caution of an ordinarily prudent man in selecting a person competent to drive the team, and the man so selected had still proved careless and allowed the team to run away and injured a workman, the master would be relieved from liability for the damage done.—[American Agriculturist.

The Farmer's Station.

"We made a singular discovery the other day," remarked an official of a road running into Chicago. "About three miles beyond a certain station on our line there is a farm house by the side of the track. Just beyond the farm house is a little creek, over which there is a small bridge. About four years ago some repairs were made to that little bridge, and, of course, the bridge gang had put up a sign-board, 'Run Slow' on either side during the day or so the bridge was weakened. When they had finished their work they went off and forgot the signs. The fact is, the boards had disappeared, and they didn't take the trouble to hunt them up.

Some weeks afterward, no one knows just when, those signs reappeared in their former places. Nobody knew who put them there or what for. Nobody cared. If the section men noticed them at all they thought the bridge men had done it.

It was none of the engineer's business why they were there—it was their duty to observe regulations, which required them to slow down at all such signs. Observe regulations they did. For about four years not a train had passed over that little bridge without slowing almost to a standstill. The culvert, for that's all it is, has been as safe as any part of the roadbed, and yet stopping and starting trains there has cost this company thousands of dollars. Yes, it costs money to stop and start trains. You are wondering how it all came about, of course. Well that farmer stole those boards and put them up at his leisure. For four years he has been going into the town or coming from it on our trains, getting on or off right at his own door.

It was a slick scheme, and how he must have laughed at us and enjoyed it all the while. But his game is up now, and the engineers are having their revenge by keeping up an infernal screeching of their whistles at all hours of the day or night whenever they pass that farm house."

The Origin of Horse-Shoeing.

According to the Blacksmith and Wheelwright, it is evident that horses were not shod in Egypt, Assyria or Palestine. The latter country was supplied with horses by the Egyptians. Solomon paid 150 shekels of silver, equal in value to $75, for each horse. This was a high price, the difference in relative value of a shekel and a given weight of wheat being considered. Isaiah speaks of horses whose "hoofs shall be counted like flint"—a valuable quality where they were shoeless. The Syrians and Hittites were supplied with Egyptian horses by Solomon, who thus turned an honest penny by this means.

Aristotle and Pliny mention the covering of horses' feet in stony places to protect the hoof from breakage and wear, but it is probable that such a covering was a bandage or boot, and used principally on long journeys. Suetonius refers to the dismounting of Vespasian's muleteer to shoe his mules. Wrappings of plaited fibre, such as hemp or broom, were used, as was also leather. In Japan the horses have clogs of twisted straw, of which a large supply is carried on a journey; when worn another is immediately applied. The American custom of shoeing would, no doubt, appear a barbarous custom in their minds. Capt. Cook refers to the fact that the Siberians and Kamtschatkans use travelling socks for their dogs.

Camels in old times were similarly provided. These boots were drawn on over the feet, and it does not appear that iron or other metallic plates were nailed to the hoofs. Such boots were shod with metal for the rich. The mules of Nere were shod with silver; those of his wife, Pappœa, with gold. For less stately purposes mules were shod with iron. Homer mentions brazen-footed steeds, probably a merely metaphorical expression implying strength. Mithridates and Alexander experienced great difficulty with their cavalry, owing to the soreness of the feet of the horses in long marches. The first certain mention of shoes being nailed to horses hoofs is in the works of Emperor Leo. The practice of shoeing horses is said to have been introduced into England by William I.

In two respects the shoeing of horses in Holland differs from ours. First, to prevent slipping, the forehoofs are pared away to the toe and the shoe so fitted that the toes do not touch the ground when the foot stands flat; the weight resting on the middle and heel of the shoe. Second, the shoe is nailed on perfectly flat and close to the foot, which is flattened to receive it; the iron is thereby deprived of all spring and the hold of the nails is undisturbed. The frog comes in contact with the ground.

A Cholera Tragedy

The outbreak of cholera at Toulon and Marseilles this summer has led to the papers printing many ghastly stories; but none have the element of loneliness and desolation more vividly outlined than an incident which happened at Toulon early in August. A. M. Berard dwelt there, with a wife and family, and on the epidemic becoming severe, left town to proceed to a safe country retreat. One old and trusted servant, a hale and hearty woman, was left behind, partly at her own request. and partly because she did not care to face the journey. She was well, she said, and she had no fear of the plague. She would prefer to remain, and the family acquiescing, bade her good-bye with a light heart. She went about her duties after they left as cheerfully as usual. The house was duly closed up, the shutters bolted, and only the great heavy front door, common in French houses, kept on the latch.

In a panic and plague-smitten city there is no need to fear that people will pry into each other's business; and so, although old Marie was not seen about for a day or two, no notice was taken of the occurrence. Day succeeded day, but no window was opened, and the door was never seen ajar. At length a week passed, and a gendarme, thinking it curious, pushed open the door.

A rat bolted across his feet as he entered; and there, spread all her length within a yard of the entrance, lay the decomposed body of the faithful servitor, who must have been attacked with cholera and smitten with death just as she was on the point of crossing the threshold to seek for help or the last rites of the priest.

Statistics from a London Directory.

The population of London is sheltered by 550,000 dwelling houses, and the area of streets and squares embraces 122 square miles. Every day sees an average of 160,000 strangers enter the city, and 123 persons added to the population; while each year about twenty-eight miles of new streets are laid out, and 9,000 new houses erected. There are 129,000 paupers, upon whom 10,700 police keep a close eye. The population includes 120,000 foreigners, more Roman Catholics than there are in Rome, and more Jews than there are in Palestine. Two thousand clergymen preside over 620 churches and 423 chapels, of which latter buildings the Independents have 121, the Baptists 100, the Wesleyans 77, the Catholic 90, the Calvinists 10, the Presbyterians 10, the Quakers 7, and the Jews 10. The number of cats kept by the people is so large (700,000) that "cat's meat" is daily delivered at the majority of houses. The 3,000 horses which die each week are utilized to meet this demand.

A Terrible Weapon of Defence.

If a pompous wiseacre tries to sit down on you, ask him rapidly a few questions like the following:

What, if any, is the difference between a kaiak and a caique?

What, if any, is the difference between Jacobins and Jacobites?

What, if any, is the difference between the ear of Dionysus and the ear of Dionysius?

How do you accent vagary, coterie, and survey?

How do you pronounce pronunciation?

What is the meaning of the phrase to "bum your chuck?"

These questions will make it pleasant for him.

THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK.

Atrocities Perpetrated by him on the Bulgarians of Macedonia.

M. de Laveleye in the Pall Mall Gazette: In an article which this paper was good enough to accept not very long since I suggested, in the interests of humanity, that from time to time a separate sheet should be published containing exact accounts of the crimes and violence practised upon the unfortunate rayas of Macedonia, and that a copy of this should be forwarded to all the members of every European Parliament to excite general pity for this ill-used population. While awaiting the execution of this proposal the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette kindly allows me to assert in his paper such facts as come to my knowledge. Of course, as my sources of information are but limited, I am not acquainted with more than one tenth, perhaps not even with more than one-hundreth part of the atrocities committed on the Bulgarians of Macedonia. but I tell what I know. leaving others to add to the sad story. Here are a few recent facts: During the month of July last forty-five murders were committed by the Turks in the district of Velesse (Kurpouli, Macedonia), and at Bitolia (Monastire) sixty. Some of the most barbarous of these may be mentioned:

First—A band of eight men, headed by the bloodthirsty chief Feyzo of the village of Tchernilistcha (district of Prilep) set out for the village of Negilewo, and in the mountains attacked three Bulgarian shepherds of from 50 to 60 years of age, whose names were Naydo Tasseff Tcherenkewsky, Sowatcho Georgieff Tcherenkewsky, and Christo Newkewsky. They bound them, cut off their ears and noses, and then by order of Feyzo, tore the skin off their legs, arms, and necks, calling out to them as they laid the veins bare to "bear witness before the prophet that we know how to shed Slav blood." After this their eyes were put out and they were cut to pieces.

Second—In the village of Podles, near to Valesse, lives a well-known assassin named Hamidaah. He acquired his farm (Tchiwlik), which, by the way, he forces the peasants to cultivate gratuitously, by violence. He met, the other day, a Young Bulgarian, about 25 years of age, and asked for the loan of his horse. The young man informed him that the horse was just then at work in the enclosure. Enraged by this refusal, Hamidaah dealt the young fellow such a blow on the head with his gun that it killed him on the spot.

Third—A Turk found a cow belonging to the herd of a Bulgarian straying in one of his fields. Without more ado he at once fastened the man guarding them to a tree and put five balls through his body.

Fourth—At Podles several Turks seized upon a woman whose husband was unfortunately in exile in Asia. They took her to their home, and most grossly ill-treated and assaulted her. She complained to the authorities at Welles, who refused to seek out the criminals. The unfortunate woman dares not return to her village, and is now at Welles, supported by the ecclesiastical community.

Fifth.—In the village of Vintchany the Turks took violent possession of a young girl, and forced her to marry a Turk, living in the village. The latter treated her with extreme violence and ordered the girl to embrace the Mohammedan religion. The peasantry appealed to the authorities, who called in the police, and the complainants were taken off to prison. The wretched girl was among the prisoners, and was heard to call out in a voice quivering with emotion and agony:—"O God! are we handed over to tyrants, or have we a king to protect us? I have been torn from my family and barbarously outraged, and no one says a word in my defence." She was ultimately sent back to her home, but her assailants went unpunished.

Sixth—In the village of Nogilovo three Bulgarians were discovered massacred and their bodies most horribly mutilated. Their eyes were first put out, then their noses were cut off, then their hands and feet were amputated, and finally their arms were fastened behind them and their heads were cut off. These three unhappy victims were the village priest, a peasant who had brought him bread, and a passer-by who happened to be on the spot at the time of the crime.

Seventh—In the neighborhood of the village of Grasgo the body of an honest Bulgarian was found cowardly assassinated, and beside him lay his son grievously wounded.

Eighth—In one of the villages near Valesse a messenger, whose horse was walking behind him, was accosted by a Turk, who requested the loan of the horse. On the man's refusal, the Turk struck him dead with a blow on the head.

Ninth—In the villages of Nogayfzy and at Tcherivino, Bulgarians have recently been murdered by Turks, and in all these cases not the smallest effort is ever made to trace out and punish the guilty parties.

These atrocities are revolting to us, but the saddest part of them is the reflection that they are the necessary outcome of the situation created by Europe's intervention. Formerly it was to the interests of the Turks to treat the Bulgarians—who are the agricultural laborers—well; but since Europe has promised a better Government and an autonomy based on the principle of the most numerous nationality, the Mussulman's aim is to exterminate as many Christians as possible, so as to continue master himself. The Turks feel themselves menaced by danger, and they defend themselves by murdering and ruining those who would take their place. Europe ought not to have sanctioned the twenty-third article of the treaty of Berlin, promising guarantees to Macedonia similar to those accorded to Roumelia, if she can allow it at the present to remain a mere dead letter. England, who opposed complete freedom being granted to Macedonia, is responsible for the great evils now weighing on this unfortunate country. It is, therefore, her place to put a stop to all this, and to insist upon the Porte's observance of the stipulation of the famous twenty third article.

LOST IN THE SNOW DRIFTS.

Terrible Experience of Two Men in the Colorado Mountains.

The first report of hunger, cold, and death in the mountains comes from Eagle county, near Denver, Colorado. N. R Smith of Dotsero started a week ago last Tuesday with E bridge Forsyth and two teams from Dotsero for Coffeepot Springs for lumber and that night the storm began. On Sunday last the mail carrier reached Dotsero from Carbonate with the information that these men had not been seen since Wednesday, and as the storm had raged with unabated fury, it was known that something had gone wrong with the missing men. A relief party of four men was started at once, and after a struggle through the drifting snow and a furious gale of wind, they found Forsyth half dead from hunger and cold, and so weak that he was unable to move. When they asked for Smith the famished man pointed to a bank of snow some distance away and gasped:

"He died yesterday morning, and, boys, you are too late for either of us."

The white mound was examined and Smith's body was found half covered with snow and frozen hard. In Forsyth's clenched hand was a scrap of paper on which he had written with his benumbed fingers a brief word to his wife as follows:

DEAR ADDIE: We cannot live another night. I want you to have everything.

ROACH FORSYTH

He was carried to Willow Springs and cared for. His feet are badly frozen, and he will be crippled for life. Nathaniel Rochester Smith, the dead man, came from Rochester, N. Y. He was one of the pioneers in that newly settled region and had faith in its future. His brother, Henry R. Smith, lives in Salida.

Forsyth tells the following story: Soon after their start on Tuesday they killed a deer. When the storm struck them they thought it would be of brief duration, but on Wednesday they found themselves hemmed in on all sides by deep drifts, and they were unable to get fuel to replenish their fire. They were then left in the cold with only raw deer meat to eat. That day they saw the mail carrier in the distance on his way to Dotsero, moving along freely on snow-shoes.

They tried to signal him, but they could not, and they saw him disappear. With this failure their last hope died. On Thursday morning the storm abated, and Forsyth made an effort to get wood. He was weak and could hardly move, and Smith cried to him, "For God's sake don't leave me to die alone," and Forsyth dropped down where he was found by the relief party. For three days they lived on snow and raw venison. Forsyth thinks Smith died some time during Thursday night, but he cannot tell exactly.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

An oyster produces 125.000,000 young oysters in the course of a year.

If the public drinking places of England were placed side by side in a straight line they would extend a distance of 700 miles.

The cotton product of the several cotton-growing countries is as follows: United States, 2 770 000,000 lbs; East Indies, 407.000 000; Egypt. Smyrna, etc., 269.000,000; Brazil. 44,000 000; West Indies, 16,000,000. Total 3,506,000,000.

Some idea of the extent of the California canned goods trade and capital invested may be gained from the fact that the total pack of the Pacific Coast in fruits and vegetables, including pie fruits, jams and jellies, with a fair estimate of the tomato, quince, and grape packs not yet completed. is 606.900 cases, 14.157,600 cans, or 37.118 000 pounds; and the cost of the pack $1,830,120.

As to the depths reached in sounding the ocean. Lieut. Berryman obtained bottom at forty-five hundred and eighty fathoms a short distance south of the banks of Newfoundland. The depth of the sea is commonly exaggerated. People used to think that it ranged from seven thousand to eight thousand fathoms. The average depth is twenty-five hundred fathoms in both the Atlantic and the Pacific.

In the cotton States of Louisiana there are 197 000 000 acres of land in farms, of which 67,350 000 are improved. The cotton area actually tilled was about 44,000,000 acres in 1879. The crops in tillage now occupy about 53.000,000 acres, the difference representing the increase since the census from which the above figures were taken was made. The census value of farm productions for this section is $547,000,000. During the first four months of this year $54.000.000 was invested in Southern manufacturing.

A well educated person who possesses a college sheepskin, reads his Bible, his Shakespeare and the daily papers seldom uses more than 3.000 or 4.000 words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions and wait till they find a word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a larger stock, and eloquent speakers may rise to a command of 10,000. Shakespeare, who displayed a greater variety of expression than probably any writer in any language, produced all his plays with about 13,000 words. Milton's works are built up with 8,000, and the Old Testament says all that it has to say with 5,462 words. In the English language there are, all told, 70,000 words.

EARTHQUAKE IN SPAIN.

People Passing the Night in Fields and Public Squares.

Further details of the destruction caused by the earthquakes in Spain have been received in a special despatch to the London Daily News. At Antiquera, a small city in Andalusia, twenty-eight miles north-west of Malaga, five distinct shocks were felt during Wednesday night and Thursday. Every one of the seven churches in the city was destroyed. A coffee-house fell to the ground while it was filled with people, and many of them were injured. Several other buildings were demolished, and many casualties are reported. During the whole of Christmas day and night the public squares were filled with people, and many of them were injured. Several other buildings were demolished, and many casualties are reported. During the whole of Christmas day and night the public squares were filled with people, who were afraid to re-enter their houses dreading a return of the shocks. At one time as many as three hundred people, were in one of the squares, kneeling on the pavement and praying for deliverance. At night many of them camped in the fields outside the walls or in the old city, which is built further up the hill, and was deemed a place of safety.

Later details concerning the earthquake show the damage to property and loss of life to be much greater than at first believed. The provinces of Malaga and Granada were the scene of the severest disturbance. Many parts of Albuqueros are in ruins, and 160 pearsons are believed to have perished. At Arteas del Rey forty persons were killed. Disasters are reported from other towns. A slight shock has been felt in many places since Thursday. As far as known 500 persons were killed in Andalusia by the recent earthquake.

SERIOUS LOSS OF LIFE.

Official reports show that 266 persons were killed in the provinces of Malaga and Granada by the recent earthquake. The population of Granada is still encamped in the squares, and the richer classes lodging in their carriages along the promenade. The facade of the cathedral was seriously damaged by the shock. Many houses were destroyed in Jimena, and a whole family was killed in the village of Cajar by the falling of a chimney. Over half the inhabitants of Albunuelas were killed. Alhama is MOSTLY IN RUINS.

The province of Malaga suffered equally as much as Granada. Commerce is paralyzed. Two hundred houses at Alfarenetzo were damaged. The panic is subsiding. The shock was not felt in the northern and north-west provinces. The Government has granted $5,000 from the national calamity fund for the relief of the sufferers in the province of Granada,

FURTHER DETAILS.

Later advices show that 300 lives were lost at Alhama. Seven hundred and fifty houses and church were destroyed and 30 persons killed at Periana. The town hall and many houses were damaged at Trrox, and the inhabitants fled from the town panic striken. It is now estimated that 600 persons were killed in the province of Malaga, including those killed at Alhama.

FRESH SHOCKS.

Fresh shocks, more violent than the first, have occurred at Trrox and Alhama. The panic at those places has been revived.

The Proposed Saharan Sea.

With reference to the daring French project for flooding the desert of Sahara with what would be virtually a new sea, it may be well, says Engineering, to recall the opinion expressed by M. Elisee Reclus, that at one period in the world's history, the desert was covered by a sea very similar to the Mediterranean, and that this sea exercised a very great influence upon the temperature of France, as comparatively cold—or at any rate cool—winds blow over it, while now the winds which prevail in the great expanse are of a much higher temperature, and are, in fact, sometimes suffocatingly hot. The appearance of the desert seems to support the theory of M. Elisee Reclus, that it was at one time the bed of a sea of considerable extent, of which the great inland African lakes recently discovered are possibly the remains.

The present vast extent and configuration of the African continent would also appear to support the conclusion that at one time it comprised a less area of land than it does at present. The serious question which arises, assuming that the theory of M. Elisee Reclus is substantially correct, is, What will be the effect of the creation of a second African sea in the room of that which has disappeared? Would the temperature of France, and possibly even of England, be again reduced? It is a geological theory that in the glacial period of the world's history Great Britain was covered with ice and snow very much as Greenland is at present. Some great influences must clearly have been brought to bear upon France and Great Britain, which rolled the ice over so many hundred miles northward. What was this influence? Was it the large African sea which French enterprise is endeavoring to create? If it were, we should say that whatever the French may gain in Africa by the realization of a Saharan Sea would be much more than counterbalanced by what they would lose in France itself.

A Cure for Frost Bites.

The most effective remedy for frost bites: As soon as possible procure enough oil of peppermint to thoroughly bathe the affected part, and keep away from the fire until the frost is drawn out. Care should be take to get the oil, as the essence will not have the desired effect.

THE SKYE CROFTERS.

A Correspondent Tells How They Live.

I will describe a typical Idrigil house, which is occupied by the aged daughter and three grown-up grandchildren of a fisherman named John Macdonald, who has been dead for many years. The croft upon which it stands slopes outward toward the bay of Uig, and is one of some 350 that belong to Major Frazer, of Kilmuir. It is about two and a half acres in extent, and pays a nominal rental of rather more than £5; a temporary reduction of 25 per cent. of that sum having, however, been conceded during the last two or three years by the proprietor. Near the centre of the croft is a sea of sticky mud; and amid the slough are two very small stacks of corn, each about nine feet high by six in diameter, carefully thatched, and covered with old nets to prevent their being scattered to the winds. Close at hand is the house—a building of rough unmortared stone, measuring, perhaps, ten feet by twenty, and very thickly roofed; first with "divits" of turf, then with a close thatch of heather, and finally with fragments of coarse netting weighted with lumps of gray trap. The door is broken, and will not shut properly; there is no chimney; and the sole window, consisting of a single pane of glass, has an area of not more than three square feet. From the doorway, and from a small hole in the low roof, volumes of peat smoke escape; and when I entered the hut, I could not, for several minutes distinguish anything within, owing to the dense fumes that rose from a scanty fire smouldering on the floor in the middle of the gloomy room. At last my eyes became accustomed to the semi-darkness, and I was able to make out the forms of the inmates of the hovel. They sat huddled on a low black settle, warming themselves, and greedily watching a battered pot that, suspended from an improvised tripod above the fire, contained a quantity of thin broth; the main ingredients of which were, as I afterwards discovered, potatoes and fish. I shared the poor people's meal of broth and oaten cake, while the smoke curled upwards and hung beneath the roof in an impenetrable cloud; the whole making, with the festooned fishing-nets and the tattered oilskins on the walls, an interior which Tenier would have delighted to paint, if there had been any jollity in the scene. There was no table, but at one end of the room there was a shaky dresser, on which was arranged a poor display of cracked crockery and rusty tins. The inside of the house was divided, by means of rotten partitions about six feet in height, into three small chambers; one being the living-room, a second a bedroom, and the third a lumber or store room. In the bedroom the clothes were simply old rags and sacking, barely sufficient to cover poor humanity; and the floor throughout was formed, so far as I could see, of the hard earth. Yet this house of Macdonalds was a palace in comparison with some of the huts I visited elsewhere. One had neither door nor window. I crawled into it through an irregular aperture less than three feet high, and found myself among some ducks that were picking up scraps from amid the garbage with which the damp floor was littered. The sole tenant of this hovel was an old woman who had a hacking cough. In another hut the rain-water dripped from the broken roof and flooded the only room, in which seven people sat crouching.

One might reasonably expect to find that the people who live in such wretchedness are stunted and ill-looking. But they are not. They are a thick-set intelligent race; and some of the girls are models of buxomness, although before middle age all the women become withered. They are long-lived too. Their faults are that they are idle and saturated with superstition and prejudice. In only one out of at least a score of crofters' houses which I entered did I see any sign that the inmates regularly devoted themselves to any remunerative home employment. In that one two women were weaving home-spun tweed, and capital cloth they made on their awkward loom. I am glad to be able to say that most of the Skye landlords wear this tweed when they can get it; but if there was a wider demand there would be a larger supply, and the islanders would be proportionately benefitted. Until quite recently there were weavers in almost every township, and the art might easily be revived. The crofters can now get cheaper material for themselves from Manchester, and it is almost exclusively the richer classes who use the tweed of the island.—[St. James' Gazette.

An Infernal Machine.

A box containing an infernal machine was brought by a boy to the American Tract Society's office, 150 Nassau street, New York recently. It is believed the intention of the sender was to kill Anthony Comstock, special agent of the Society for the Prevention of Crime. The boy said a man, whose description he gave, had paid him 10c. at the corner of Leroy and Hudson streets to deliver the package. The machine consisted of a spring, parts of matches, broken glass 4 oz. bottle of powder and a phial of nitric acid. The package was addressed, "Bookstore, 150 Nassau street." Comstock said he did not think it was designed to reach him. He inclined to the belief that it was of infidel origin designed to harm the American Tract Society and Bible Society. When the box was brought in Comstock was called and took charge of it. The box had formerly contained collars, but had been altered into a modern infernal machine of the most approved pattern. Comstock removed the cover from the box, creating a stampede in the store, and then took the box and boy to the police station. Two policemen were detailed to accompany the boy to the place where he said the package had been given to him, Vanderbilt's Gold.

Vanderbilt is worth $200,000,000, of which $50,000,000 are in United States bonds and can be turned into gold at any time, and the rest is made up of stocks and bonds, the bulk of which are above par. Vanderbilt's wealth, therefore represents so much gold. The ordinary mind can get no sort of notion of such a stupendous pyramid of gold as $200,000,000. Put it into a pyramid of Egypt, what a monument it would make in the desert for its owner! Vanderbilt's capital of gold is greater than all there was in the world-conquering Rome in the glittering reign of Augustus Cæsar. It is greater than the whole amount of gold and silver there was in the civilized world in 1492, at the time of the discovery of America. It is more than the entire product for the past hundred years of the great gold mines of the Czar of Russia. It is more than the whole product for two years of all the gold mines of the world. It is nearly twice as much as all the precious metals produced thus far in in the gold and silver-bearing State of Colorado. Counting this vast fortune dollar by dollar at the rate of sixty per minute, it would take six years to accomplish the act. Placed one after another it would make a string of dollars from New York to St. Louis.

The weight of all this gold is 350 tons. How many freight cars would be required to carry it? Ten, you'll say at a jump But stop; ten tons is about the maximum weight that is carried by a freight car, consequently, at that allowance, we should have a train of thirty-five freight cars. And what a train for the robbers to loot at! How many Jumbos would it take to draw this amount of gold from the subtreasury? Of the African or Indian variety seventy could walk off with it, giving five tons to each. And what a show they would make—seventy Jumbos

Turn the gold into ten-dollar coins, lay them in a circle with their edges touching, and what would be the circumference of that circle? It would be so great that it would take Maud S., going at the rate of a mile in 2:10, twelve hours and forty minutes to get around it.

Two hundred millions of gold, run into a square bar a foot thick, said bar would be how long, do you think? One hundred feet, eh? Well, friend, you would get badly left if you sold it "unsight, unseen," for a 300 foot bar—left by 250 feet. To shoulder this tremendous bar of gold how many men would be required at 100 pounds each? Seven thousand, reader. What a procession they would make! Fifty men giving the dollars away at the rate of 1,000 a day, would have to stand there eleven years before their work was done.

With it he could buy up and own all the 11,314 newspapers in the United States, running them to suit himself as a manufacturer of public opinion on a gigantic scale.

With it he could raise an army of 100,000 men and keep them in the field for a year at an expense of $200 a head, which is about the cost of a soldier in Bismarck's German army.

A CANADA BEAR FIGHT.

An Exciting Adventure of Two New Yorkers in the Wilds of the Dominion.

Enfield Stout of Tioga county returned to Elmira, N. Y., recently from a two weeks hunt in Frontenac county, Canada. He relates a thrilling adventure Thomas DeWitt and George Pearson, two young men from one of Hudson River counties, had with a wounded bear in the Canadian wilds while he was hunting with them. They had been hunting at White Lake, in Frontenac county, and toward evening rowed from one side of the lake to the other on their way to camp. As they were about to step from the boat they heard a loud crash in the thicket a few yards away. On looking around the young men saw a well-grown she bear with two cubs come from behind a fallen tree. Pearson instantly fired, and the old bear fell to the ground. The hunter ran to the spot, expecting to find her shot through the head, and was confronted by her standing on her hind legs and savagely approaching him. The fierceness of her appearance was increased by her lower jaw having been carried away by the rifle ball.

The bear threw herself upon Pearson before he could defend himself, and hunter and bear fell together on the ground. Pearson's cries brought DeWitt to the scene, but he did not dare to fire for fear of hitting his companion, so closely was he held by the bear as they struggled on the ground. The bear could not do Pearson any injury with her mouth, and he seized her long hair in his teeth and buried his face in her fur, thus keeping it away from her sharp claws. Seeing that he could not be of service to his friend with his gun, DeWitt picked up a heavy club and beat the bear across the back and head. The second blow stunned her, and Pearson sprang to his feet; but the bear quickly recovered herself and sprang upon the hunter, receiving his hunting knife in her breast. The furious animal struck Pearson a blow with one of her paws on the shoulder, and hurled him several feet away. He fell against a stump, breaking two of his ribs.

The bear then rushed upon DeWitt, who is a giant in size and strength. He dodged to one side and seized the bear around the body, and threw her over his left shoulder, and then shouted to Pearson to place his gun against her head and blow her brains out. Before this could be done the bear had stripped the clothing nearly off DeWitt's body, and lacerated his flesh badly. Pearson sent a bullet through her head, and DeWitt held her, bleeding and struggling, on his shoulder until she died. Pearson was injured the worst of the two men, and reached camp with difficulty. The two young bears escaped to the woods while the struggle between the old one and the hunters was going on. The dead bear weighed nearly 200 pounds.

Despise Not the Day of Small Things.

Little things may help a man to rise—a bent pin in an easy chair for instance. Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are small things, pleasant to take, and they cure sick-headaches, relieve torpid livers and do wonders. Being purely vegetable they cannot harm any one. All druggists.

I don't understand what our Sunday school teacher was telling us about a camel going through the eye of a needle. Shouldn't you think his hump would stop him? Small brother of the average American type: No, sir; he'd have to hump himself to get through.

Pile tumors cured in ten days, rupture in four weeks. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

Intelligent non-professional people who do not belong to the English-speaking races have queer notions about the celebrities of England and America. Daniel Webster is still known to many folks as the author of a dictionary, and now the London Athenæum tells of a brilliant Spaniard who has confused ideas about Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood. He stood before the facade of London University, and after gazing at it long and thoughtfully pointed out the statue of Harvey to a friend who acted as his guide. "Just like you practical English," he said, "to erect a statue to a man because he invented a sauce."

There Shall be no Alps.

When Napoleon talked of invading Italy one of his officers said: "But, sire, remember the Alps." To an ordinary man these would have seemed simply insurmountable, but Napoleon responded eagerly: "There shall be no Alps." So the famous Simplon pass was made. Disease, like a mountain, stands in the way of fame, fortune and honor to many who by Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" might be healed and so the mountain would disappear. It is specific for all blood, chronic, lung and liver diseases, such as consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs) pimples, blotches, eruptions, tumors, swellings, fever-sores and kindred complaints.

Travellers out on the red hills, says a California paper, have often shuddered at the sight of horned toads, which are numerous as black birds. The ugly creatures are as much dreaded as rattlesnakes, but a Chinaman spent all summer and fall gathering them. Recently he made a shipment of two thousand of the toads to San Francisco, from which place they will be sent to China. The toads are there converted into various kinds of medicines, which sell very high. For the cure of chills and fever they are said to be the finest thing known. A toad is placed in a flask of whiskey for several weeks, and then the stuff is sold as a tonic.

All tobaccos except the best Virginia have a pungent effect upon the tongue and will smart it if the smoking is long continued. Some of them even will blister it, or at least destroy its outer skin at the point where the smoke impinges upon it. The "Myrtle Navy" is entirely free from this defect, which, together with its fine full flavor makes it a great favorite with smokers.

How quickly is it possible for a man's legs, in health, to increase their bulk by halt? A pair of trousers were made by a Chicago tailor so tardily that six weeks elapsed between the measurement and the delivery. They proved too tight. The maker sued for pay, and testified that the dimensions were in accordance with the size of the legs at the time he took the figures; while the defendant will introduce expert testimony to prove that he did not fatten so rapidly as such a conclusion would imply.

Nothing Hunts out Corns

Like tight boots. Corns are very small affairs, but apply to them a pair of tight boots and all other concerns of life sink into insignificance. Tight boots and Putnam's Corn Extractor (the great and only sure cure for corns) may go together and comfort will be their partner; but don't fail to use Putnam's Corn Extractor. Frauds, cheap, poisonous and dangerous substitutes are in the market Beware of them. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Polson & Co., proprietors, Kingston.

At Havana, when a distinguished stranger visits the tobacco factory of Senor Cabana or Partagas, the custom is to offer him an "obsequio" by fashioning a new brand of cigars in his honor. To this we owe the excellent cigars known as the Serrano and the Henry Clay. The London tobacco manufacturers elected to pay Charles Dickens the Cuban compliment. A neat little cigar, costing only two cents, was devised, and was christened "The Pickwick," which still retains its popularity in England.

The New Pain King.

Polson's Nerviline cures flatulence, chills, spasms, and cramps.

Nerviline cures promptly the worst cases of neuralgia, toothache, lumbago, and sciatica.

Nerviline is death to all pain, whether external, internal, or local.

Elisha Gray, now wealthy through the invention of electric instruments, used to be a very unsuccessful farmer at Oberlin, Ohio. He spent most of his time for several years in experimenting, and came to be regarded as a crank. His own family were inclined to take that view of him; and when one day he excitedly declared that he had devised "a self-adjusting helix," his uninformed wife hastily consulted with a physician about putting him under constraint.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops should be used in almost every family in Canada; it is one of the best and safest cough remedies known. In large bottles at 50 cents.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

Various unpleasent discoveries have been made by New York chemists as to the nature of some of the substances used to give candies their bright tempting appearance. Now a few of them are rank poisons. and are used in quantities sufficiently large to make canday colored by them anything but safe. It is just as safe for every one and especially children to eschew these brilliant morsels. If they must eat candy, let it be the plain unvarnished sort.

The Financial Reform Almanac of Britain for 1885, shows how the aristocracy have drained the public purse since 1850. The net result is that 532 noble families of 7.991 members have held 13,888 offices in that period, and have received £106, 614,632 sterling as their pay. No doubt much of this money has been honestly earned in the public service, and there can be equally no doubt that by far the larger part of it has been quite unecessary expenditure.

The American papers are paying a good deal of attention to Sis John Macdonald's Confederation scheme. Comparatively few of them, however, seemed to attach very much importance to it. They regard it as the brilliant dream of aspiring politicians. We are by no means certain that they are right in this estimate. We incline rather strongly to the opinion that there is more in it than many Canadians even are willing to admit, and that the scheme of confederation will prove to be the plank on which the Conservative party hopes to keep itself afloat at the next general election.—Truth.

Poetry.

Don't stop my Paper.

Don't stop my paper, printer,
Don't strike my name off yet,
You know the times are stringent,
And dollars hard to get;
But tax a little harder,
Is what I mean to do,
And scrape the dimes together,
Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it;
I find it doesn't pay
To do without a paper,
However others may.
I have to ask my neighbors
To give me theirs on loan;
They don't just say—but mean it—
"Why don't you have your own?"

You can't tell how we miss it,
If it, by any fate,
Should happen not to reach us,
Or come a little late.
Then all is in a hubbub,
And things go all awry,
And printer, if you are married,
You know the reason why.

The children want their stories,
And wife is anxious, too.
At first to glance it over,
And then to read it through;
And I to read the leader,
And con the book reviews,
And scan the correspondence,
And every scrap of news.

I can not do without it,
It is no use to try,
The other people take it,
And printer so must I.
I, too, must keep me posted,
And know what's going on,
Or else I'll be accounted
A fogy simpleton.

Then take it kindly, printer,
If pay is somewhat slow,
For cash is not so plenty,
And wants not few you know;
But I must have the paper,
Cost what it may to me,
I'd rather dock my sugar,
And do without my tea.

So printer, don't you stop it,
Unless you want my frown,
But—lest I miss a number—
I'll plank the cash right down?
So send the paper promptly
And regularly on,
Let it bring us weekly
Its welcomed benison.

Married Life.

A good wife is the greatest earthly blessing. A wife never makes a greater mistake than when she endeavours to coerce her husband with other weapons than those of love and affection. Those weapons are a sure pull if he has any thing human left in him. Forbear mutual upbraidings. In writing letters, during temporary separation, let nothing contrary to love and sincere affection be expressed; such letters from a wife have a most powerful emotional effect, sometimes little understood by those who write them. It is the mother who moulds the character and destiny of the child as to the exteriors, therefore, let calmness, peace, affection, and firmness rule her conduct towards her children. Children are great imitators, whether they have scolding or peaceful mothers, they are generally sure to learn from the examples set before them, and thus the consequent joy or sorrow is transferred to other families, therefore let mothers take heed to their conduct. It is not possible to exercise judgment and prudence too much before entering on the married life. Be sure that the affections on both sides are so perfectly intertwined around each other, that the two as it were, form one mind; this requires time, and a thorough mutual knowledge on both sides. Bend your whole powers to avoid deprecatory remarks, jibing and anger in every form, and specially avoid everlastingly dishing up any unsuccessful past action that was done from a good motive and with the best intentions at the time. Let nothing foreign to the spirit of love and mutual affection intervene to cause distance between husband and wife; to this end let self-denial rule over each, and reciprocal unselfishness. Avoid habitual faultfinding, scolding, &c., as you would perdition itself; many men tremble as they cross their threshold into the presence of scolding wives. Let husband and wife cultivate habits of sobriety, and specially avoid drunkenness in every form. What a dreadful spectacle it is to see a husband transformed into a demon, tottering homeward to a broken hearted wife, whose noble self-sacrificing devotion to him seems to partake more of the nature of heaven than of earth. Never part, even for a journey, without kind and endearing words, and as a kiss symbolizes union from interior affection, do not dispense with it on such occasions, repeating it when you return. In one word, let love rule supreme.

Draft Horses.

The following is a synopsis of a lengthy article which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, consisting of interviews of its reporters with the leading draft horse dealers in America. It was headed as follows:

"Breeding of Draft Horses—One of the Important Industries of the Day—Experience of Dealers who Handle 40,000 Horses Annually—Relative Merits of Percheron, Clydesdale and English Horses—Opinions of all Leading Dealers in New York and Chicago—They are unanimous in preferring the French Breeds over all Others, as they are more enduring, best dispositioned, stand the pavements best and bring higher prices."

The Tribune reporters were instructed to procure opinions as to the relative merits of the different breeds of draft horses being raised in this country and sold in their markets. The experience of dealers who sell perhaps 40,000 horses annually directly to those who buy them to wear out was thus obtained. This information is of immense value to those engaged in breeding horses.

Mr. I. H. Dahlman, of New York City, said: "I handle between 9,000 and 10,000 horses annually. Of the draft horses I handle, the greater proportion—nearly all—are Norman-Percherons. These horses are docile, intelligent, easily broken, steady in harness, powerful and compactly built. They are short in the back, deep in the body and broad in the chest. They have the best feet of any horses in America. I do not want it understood that all Norman horses have these good qualities. I have seen some imported that were as badly shaped horses as could be found. Long in the back, narrow waisted and not worth their freight from France here. That class of horses is only imported by people who buy them to sell and not to breed." In regard to the Clydesdale horses Mr. Dahlman said: "I will give you no criticism. I buy very few of them. I prefer to pass their stable and say nothing about them. From what I have said the Tribune readers, I think, will understand what breed of horses I would recommend them to raise."

C. & H. Hayman, East 24th Street, New York city said: "We handle about 2,000 horses a year, principally draft horses of all kinds—French, Clydesdale, English and Belgian. We handle more of the French than of any the others because the people like them better and will give higher prices for them than for any other breed. They have more endurance and are the best dispositioned horses we have. They mature sooner and are ready for the market younger than the other breeds. The Clydesdales are not so well shaped nor are their feet so good. We advise the farmers of the west to breed to the finest and best bread Percherons to be found."

The above opinions were the expressions of all the other dealers interviewed, with one or two exceptions. The object of all farmers who breed horses for use or for market, is to obtain animals that will mature the earliest and bring the most money. In order to accomplish this purpose with the greatest degree of certainty the use of the finest and best bred Percheron Stallions is recommended and advised by nearly all the dealers. The finest specimens are recorded with their pedigrees in full in the Percheron Stud Book of France. 126

Dress Not Sinful Vanity.

Ruskin is the first great writer who has treated the subject of dress with due gravity. He has shown us that a serious study thereof is a needful virtue, instead of a sinful vanity, and that a harmonious and well constructed gown is as much a work of art as a picture or a statue. Neither can it be argued that the work is mean, since it is to adorn human beings, who are, after all, nature's masterpieces. His words are but the expression of an opinion held by all artists from time immemorial, and indirectly expressed by most of them. For there is neither drama nor printing in which costume, both to color and drapery, does not form an all-important element, and there are few impressive scenes in our works of fiction in which the dress is not mentioned. The unconscious tribute to its insignificance is not only due to the realistic force of such descriptions, but also to their power in expressing character.—[American Queen.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up, at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

People talk about hard times and the great difficulty felt by multitudes in making ends meet, but after all have the people in general not themselves to blame? They drink whiskey and beer in such frightful quantities, and smoke tobacco at such a monstrous extent, that it is not impossible that there should be hard times from these two expenditures alone. Perhaps the people in the States drink a little more than we do and smoke tobacco somewhat more industriously. Yet after making all allowance we come pretty well up. In the States there is consumed about 1¼ gallons of whiskey to every man, woman and child in the country, and about 10¼ gallons of wine and beer. How can people be but poor when they waste at that rate?—Truth.

FIRE IN MELANCTHON.—On Thursday morning about 5 o'clock the barn of Mr. Robt. Oliver, was seen to be on fire, and past all possibility of saving. All the grain, machinery, implements, etc., were consumed, one fine cow burned to death, and one of the horses injured. The fire began in the mow, and is supposed to be the work of a tramp, as the doors were open when the fire was discovered, and some of the cattle had got out. The loss will be heavy as the insurance is small. Mr. Oliver has the sympathy of the community in the loss he has sustained.—Dundalk Herald.

CHAPTER II.—Continued

[illegible] Keene was silent for a while, wrestling with himself, striving to keep down a question which in spite of himself, would rise to his lips and which burst forth at last.

"You—you love this man?" he questioned hoarsely.

"I do not see that I need answer that question," she answered calmly. "I should have married him thankfully had it not been for you." She paused for an instant, and then, as if in spite of herself, went on—"He was an angel of goodnes to me," she said, a thrill of deep feeling in her voice. "He came to me when I was hopeless and penniless and friendless—"

"Penniless," Mr. Keene interrupted—"penniless?"

"Yes, penniless. He comforted and helped me, and—thanks to you—I had to give him the worst trouble of his life in return. He thought that I was free to marry when he asked me to be his wife, and I had to tell him all my dismal tale. He—who would not submit, he could not believe in such a cruel fate; but it was too hard for him."

"And why—why do you tell this thing to me?"

"Why? That you may be doubly sure of the uselessness of such a request as that you have made to me to-day. Why do I tell you? I will tell you more. It may be beneficial to you to contrast his conduct with your own. He, this man who loved me, attended my mother in her last illness—he is a clever and successful London doctor—and when I, who had left the school where I was working for my bread, fell ill too, he attended me. What money my mother had was spent to pay her bills and for her funeral—had there been thousands, I would not have touched it—it was yours; but there was nothing left. The little salary I had drawn went in the first week of my illness; and then he, my doctor, learnt that I was penniless and without a friend in the world. He sent me nurses, he supplied me for many weeks with every comfort and luxury, he gave me his constant care; and, when I could listen to him, he asked me—begged me—me, friendless moneyless, unknown—to be his wife. Then what a tale I had to tell him! I believe him to be one of the noblest men that walk the earth; but he cursed you, then. I did not beg for mercy on you. It seemed to me that you merited the contempt of all good men."

Kingston Keene answered her, as she finished, with a short laugh.

"Their contempt will not hurt me," he said. "I ought to thank you, I suppose, for your confidence, for entrusting me with the interesting tale of how you, the wife of one man, were thwarted in your desire to marry another—I ought to thank you, and I do. Such a woman, it is plain is not the kind of person I would ask to share my home and my life. Be sure that I will not trouble you with a repetition of my request. That is all, I think, which remains to be said; and I will go."

"Will you?" he asked. "Will you, Miriam? Let us obliterate these empty years we have spent alone—I have been as lonely as you—let us begin again together. What do you say?"

But, before he reached the door, Miriam knew by the sound of familar voices in the hall that the Archers had returned.

"You had better wait a moment, if you please," she said rather hurriedly, "You can explain your presence as you think best;" and so, with a whispered word of "the children" to Mrs. Archer as she passed her at the door, Miriam escaped, and left Mr. Keene to the hospitable cares of the Reverend James and his wife.

"What an odd thing for him to call to bid us 'good-bye' in the middle of a Sunday afternoon, when he might have known we were at church!" said Mrs. Archer to her husband, a quarter of an hour later. "And did you ever hear of anything so mad as his rushing back to Jamaica in this ridiculous fashion?"

"He is a most estimable person," answered her charitable husband, "and his sister's devotion to him is—is really touching; but he certainly does appear to have odd manners."

Meanwhile Mr. Keene, standing on the gravel sweep, sheltered by the fast increasing gloom of that winter's afternoon, looked up at the windows of the house he had left.

"Then that is over!" he was thinking. "I have done what appeared to me to be my duty—I have offered to make restitution, if I owed it, and it is over. Very good Better so—better, I am sure, for me. I am too old to bring such a change into my life, and the risk is tremendous. Better so!"

Repeating this phrase many times, as though to impress it on his memory, he turned away. But, before the rectory was quite hidden from view, he halted, stood irresolute a moment, and then retraced his steps. The window of the room he had just left glowed with the firelight within; he approached it, treading softly on the grass border, and looked in. Mrs. Archer, still in her out door dress, was standing on the hearth rug talking to her husband. Keene heard the sound of her voice as she chattered to him, although the words did not reach him, and her light laughter fell with a discordant sound on his ear, not attuned to mirth to-night. His eyes wandered over the fire-lit cosy room in search of one other form, and came back unsatisfied to the two on the rug.

"Go and get off your bonnet," Mr. Archer was saying imperatively, "and let me have some tea."

But, before she turned slowly to obey him, he put out a hand and drew his wife close to him and kissed her.

The man at the window turned away quickly, with a grim smile and a curious sudden pain at his heart.

"When we part—my wife and I—we do not find it necessary to exchange caresses," he said to himself, "although we part for ever. I wish it had pleased my lady [illegible] that I might [illegible] before [illegible]; [illegible] is [illegible] the [illegible] Heaven [illegible] for [illegible]!"

[illegible] his thoughts wandered off to old times. He saw again the girl with the foreshadowings of the beauty now so amply fulfilled, he remembered the gray eyes, identical with those so cold and proud, which had met his so short a time ago, but widely different in their timid veiled expression, eyes which then had power to quicken his blood and to madden his brain, and to cause him to commit the one great act of folly which had come near to ruin his life. He saw her shrinking from him and his wild caresses, he saw her nervously obedient, humbly subservient to her mother and to him—he saw her white and deathlike face, the appealing terror in her eyes as she sank at his feet by the altar steps—saw it as he had seen full many a time since then in his dreams—and then again there came to him a vision, but recently beheld, but henceforth never to be effaced from his memory, of a beautiful woman who, lying back in her chair, sang very softly to the children in her arms.

CHAPTER III.

During the mists and fogs of that damp November, Mr. Archer caught a cold which settled on his lungs, and from the effects of which he seemed unable to rid himself. In spite of the anxiety of his wife and household, he would not be prevailed on to take proper care of himself, but would go out in all weathers to visit the sick or sorrowful, and would persist in attending certain evening classes just established, and at that time very near his heart. So from relapse to relapse he fell, till his wife grew frantic with terror, and lost heart through her own impotence to control the man. At last Sir Robert Hick, whose word at Eastwick, at least, was law, came to her aid, and declared that for a month or so the Rector should be compelled to rest. To this effect it was necessary to remove him from the scene of his labors; and to this end he was compelled to accept the loan of a house at Bournemouth belonging to Sir Robert, and to which he and his family occasionally resorted, where it was hoped the enforced idleness and the milder climate might work a beneficial effect. The Rectory was shut up, the children and servants going with the Archers, and Lady Hicks, who had planned everything which Sir Robert had proposed, finally carried off Mrs. King to pass with the family at Eastwick Park the period of the Archers' absence.

Miriam had stood out stoutly against this kindly proposition for some time; she would fain have kept the Hickses at a distance, if that could have been possible, but was obliged to yield at last. For one thing, unless she accompanied the Archers—about whom she had a feeling that, at such a time, drawn closer than ever to each other by the fear of a possible separation, they would be happier left to each other—she had nowhere to go. She knew—for she had cause to know—the difficulties and unpleasantnesses attending a young and handsome woman who goes unprotected and unattended to a fresh neighborhood. She had little desire to renew that old experience. Mr. Archer advised, his wife implored, Lady Hicks persisted; Mr. Keene was on his lonely way to Jamaica. It was, after all, the easiest course open to her; and she desperately wanted to do easy things for the rest of her life—she was so weary of fighting and struggling alone. And so it came to pass that she went, and in a few days had made an easy conquest of the household. Sir Robert, used to dumpy and insignificant-looking women around him, was never tired of airing his pompous politeness before this beautiful woman, who accepted it with such queenly ease. Lady Hicks was proud of the new attraction her house boasted, and was anxious to gather her friends around her to display the quite uncommon treasure she had discovered. Ella, the only daughter, a somewhat gushing but generous and unselfish girl, raved about her new friend, hung on Miriam's words, and even round her neck sometimes, copied quite frankly her dress and the manner in which her hair was worn, and delightedly took lessons from her in singing. Miriam found the adulation wearisome at times; but she was so unused to feel herself of much importance that, as a rule, the new sensation pleased her.

She found the abundant interest which kindly Lady Hicks had at her command now pretty evenly divided between the reports from Bournemouth of Mr. Archer's progress, and so much as was known to her of the movements of her only brother. Miriam was joint recipient with Ella of the manifold conjectures and surmises arising from inefficient knowledge in the case of the latter.

"It is so vexing to me," Lady Hicks said, "to think that all this time he has been wasting over his tiresome business in London he ought to have spent with us. When he took leave in that hurried way I thought he sailed at once, but a month is gone and he is still here. Sir Robert however tells me that the vessel in which he is really to sail starts to-morrow. It does seem heartless, don't you think, that we should be having all those people to-morrow, and should be so happy in welcoming Bob home, and my only brother—in this wretched weather too—tossing on the wide sea.

"Why, dear mother," Ella remarked, laughing, "uncle Kingston is the very last to want us to mourn on his account. And although, for my part, I am sorry he should go away, still one can't forget that if he had wished he could have stayed, could he not now, mother? He meant to stay for months when he came, and he got tired of us in about three days."

"My dear," her mother answered, "you know nothing about my brother Kingston; he has known [illegible] and disappointment [illegible] not be judged as may [illegible] men."

[illegible] turned to Miriam.

"You know," she said, with solemn lowered voice, "uncle Kingston is married—isn't that dreadful?"

"Dreadful!" acquiesced Miriam, with a quite natural shudder. "But then he is not singular in that misfortune. Many people are married."

"Ella is not deploring the fact of his marriage, you see," explained Lady Hicks, seriously, "but the peculiar misfortune attending it. There is no reason why you should not be told. My dear, he actually parted from his wife at the church door."

Mariam was sitting over the fire in the dark with the other ladies, waiting for tea to be brought in, when this was told her. Ella, lying on the hearth-rug at her feet, turned and laid her arms across her new friend's knees, looking up into her face to watch the effect there of this startling disclosure. She looked for signs of surprise and dismay. She could not understand the sudden light of appeal which came into the deep gray eyes she was watching.

"Ah, do not tell me!" Miriam said. "Dear Lady Hicks, I do not want to hear. I have my own trouble—do not tell me!"

Ella laid down her soft cheek consolingly on the white hands which trembled a little on Mrs. King's lap.

"It is nothing to recall your own trouble, my dear," the elder lady said. "He did not lose his wife—poor Kingston—so mercifully as—as you lost—not by death. He found that she was unworthy."

Ella lying against her felt the shiver which passed through Mrs. King's frame at the words.

"I hope uncle Kingston is sure," she said, a doubt of the infallibility of his judgment arising for the first time in her mind. "Some one might have fibbed, mother. It would be a horrid thing if he left this poor girl, and after all he had no just cause for doing so."

Miriam released one hand from under the girl's cheek, and gently smoothed Ella's hair with it.

"My dear, there was no mistake," replied the mother, with sad conviction. "Kingston, in such a vital matter, would satisfy every doubt, you may be sure. No; everything was proved up to the very hilt."

"And was the—the unworthiness all her own, or was it the unworthiness of others—of her parents, perhaps?" Miriam asked a little unsteadily.

"Her own—her own entirely," she was assured, and felt for the moment a sense of gratitude towards Mr. Keene for his reticence.

"I wonder," Ella observed, after a pause "if uncle Kingston remembers—if he thinks of her, or even regrets her, perhaps."

"You may be sure he remembers," answered Lady Hicks. "He will not speak of his misfortune even to me; but each time that I look into his eyes I know that he remembers. I believe that he deeply loved this miserable woman."

"Oh no!" Miriam cried to this with eager haste. "Oh, no!"

"You think not? He is cold and passionless now? but that is the result of self-repression; he was not always so. His conduct throughout, the rashness of this unhappy marriage, proves to me he must have madly loved this girl. There was, however, something he loved more, his honor and the stainlessness of his name. He does not enlarge to me upon his griefs; but I have not fallen into the error of ignoring them. I know too well what he must have suffered."

"She—the woman—probably suffered too," Miriam said softly. "You have not heard two sides of the questiou, Lady Hicks. Be sure she had her grievances too."

"Poor uncle Kingston!" laughed Ella. "Picture him, Mrs. King, with blighted hopes and a broken heart and lifelong regrets!—uncle Kingston with his sturdy frame and copper-colored face and hair! I do hope that heavy, heavy moustache of his is not going to turn gray too: it really is the only interesting thing about him."

"Poor boy!" sighed Lady Hicks. "My poor old playfellow and protector and friend—poor Kingston! To think that that curly hair of his should be turning gray, that he should be getting quite—quite old, that he should be alone!"

* * * * *

Great excitement prevailed at Eastwick Park when Bob—the only son—came home from college for good, to be enrolled at once as partner in the great brewing firm, henceforth to be known as that of "Hicks and Son"

He was not a bad-looking or a bad dispositioned young fellow, considering how he had been feted and spoilt industriously from his babyhood. He was a little free with his money—but what could one expect?—and there was plenty of it—a little self-conceited—which was inevitable—as little unbearable generally as is possible to only sons of rich parents. Such as he was his mother, at least, adored him, and looked up into his face now admiringly as he stood on the rug in the room which was always set apart as "Rob's Study." Not many signs of study were apparent—mostly signs of hunting, shooting proclivities. Rob, standing with his back to the fire, a big cigar between his beardless lips, was surveying with complacence the manly adornments of his walls.

"There are some people coming tonight to welcome you, dear," his mother said to him fondly.

"Old lot, I suppose?" queried Bob indifferently. "They are a slow lot of duffers, mother; I should have made myself at home without their welcome. Any [illegible] staying in the house?"

"Your cousins came [illegible], dear, and Mrs. King is with [illegible]."

"And [illegible]?"

Then [illegible] explained [illegible] him [illegible] Mrs. King [illegible] the Archers [illegible] their absence.

"Ah [illegible]" [illegible] his [illegible] pardon; and so the conversation drifted.

An hour later the ladies of the party were taking tea in the—at present—but dimly-lighted drawing-room.

"The gentlemen do not honor us," one of them said.

"Rob is entertaining his cousins in his study," Ella explained. "Boys always have such a vast amount of important things to say to each other, and they are so 'mum' when we are present. I don't know what papa can be doing, or why he does not come."

Just then papa's voice was heard outside the door.

"Agatha is here," he said. "She will be so pleased—come in."

Then the door was opened and two gentlemen appeared, duskly and dimly seen beyond the pleasant gleam of the firelight.

"Here is a surprise for you, Agatha," one of them—Sir Robert—said.

"Ah, who is it?" Lady Hicks cried, dropping her tea-cup hastily and standing up.

"It is only I, Agatha," replied a quiet voice she knew, and she sprang forward joyously.

"Kingston, how good of you—how glad I am!" she cried, and she put her two hands on his shoulder, and lifted her face for his kiss. "How good of you!" she repeated, almost crying. "I thought I had seen the last of you; and I have been so unhappy."

"Uncle Kingston!" Ella exclaimed gaily, coming forward, "how splendid of you to come in time for to-night."

Mr. Keene patted and kissed the girl's cheek.

"Why 'to-night,' little one?" he asked and turned to shake hands with two other girls who greeted him. "I can scarcely see you," he said, laughing.

"It is Milly and Blanche," their aunt explained. "And, Kingston, you know Mrs. King? She is staying with us for a time."

Mr. Keene made a step forward. and took Miriam's reluctant hand in his.

"You mentioned in your last letter that she was here," he said to his sister. "Your husband made a mistake, Agatha; there is still a week before I sail. I thought I would run down and see you all once again. And why is it, Ella, that I have been so peculiarly fortunate in hitting on to night for my arrival?"

Then Ella, with her arm in his, began eagerly to explain to him how Rob was home, and how to-night there was to be a "young" dinner-party, and a little dance after it—the very first dance of this year—in the midst of which Mrs. King, almost unobserved, left the room.

On the Nile.

At evening, when the sun has sunk in ruddy splendor behind the grey desert hills, every prospect pleases on the Nile. Then the dingy yellow river is touched by ruddy reflections of the after-glow, and the waves rippling under sombre shadows of the brown banks have a purple sheen on them. The long level stretches where crops are just beginning are a vivid green. Dark belts of palm, the feathery fronds of which are swayed slowly by the breeze, stand out clearly against the sky. Between their tall shafts one sees the ridge of a distant mountain range, above which the orange light is barred and blurred by dusky belts, where dust rises from the desert. The warm golden tints fade to pale chrome, and then flush through many gradations into roseate hues and die away into the deep blue studded with stars overhead. Every now and then the darker tints are brightened by faint throbs of ruddy bright until the after glow disappears and in its place the crescent moon, sinking low towards the western hills, throws a flood of light across the broad Nile Valley. To a lover of animate nature there is something of interest at every bend of the river, and the varieties of birds especially seems to increase rapidly as we go on. Buff-backed herons are not so plentiful as in the lagoons of the inundated Delta, but the black-headed plovers are, and the spur-winged plover may be seen flitting under the hollow bank. Kingfishers, black and white, and green and blue, dart across the water. Hoophoes hover about tamarisk and mimosa, myriads of blue rock circle in clouds above every village. Kestrals innumerable pose themselves on apparently motionless wings high above the maize; vultures gorged by gluttony and hopping heavily about with wings outstretched, cranes, and the great Dalmatian pelican may be seen on distant sandbanks. Here and there a great Dom Palm, with its crown of aloe-like spikes, reminds us that we are within the region formerly frequented by crocodiles, but we fail to see any sign of them yet. Probably the incursion of many steamboats has driven them away to more secluded quarters.

Old Judge Saunders is a great brag and has told about a dozen different stories in regard to the weight of a certain big catfish that he caught. A friend, trying to entrap him, asked: "Judge, what was the precise weight of that big fish you caught?" Judge Saunders (to colored waiter): "I say, Bob, what did I say yesterday that catfish weighed?" "What time yesterday, boss—in de mawning, at dinner-time, or after supper?"

A Good Telephone Story.

They tell a capital telephone story [illegible] Antwerp. A merchant had an instrument fitted between his house and his office, and shortly after this was finished, [illegible] or [illegible] day [illegible] with a slight indisposition, a friend called on a matter of business. To [illegible] the merchant had the telephone and in the course of the talk [illegible] now, on [illegible] the visitor detected a strong smell of beef and onions issuing from the kitchen, and on his way down the Bourse he planned a wicked little scheme, which he communicated to half a dozen congenial spirits upon 'Change. Within the next half-hour the merchant was summoned six time to the telephone to speak to six different people in his office, and every one of them ended his message with a wish that the beef and onions might be satisfactory. The following week when, fully recovered, the merchant was among his friends again, he told all of them a story of the wonders of his new instrument, the telephone. "Not only can we hear each other's voices," said he, "but last Friday every body who spoke to me at my house could smell the beefsteak and onions that were preparing for my dejeuner!"

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia

Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this climate. It is not confined to a particular season, for whilst most general in the winter seasons, yet many suffer excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years this form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well as in efficacy. Among the most powerful and penetrating combinations, placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to, or more certain than Polson's Nerviline. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia or any other painful complaints. Nerviline is sold by all druggists at 25 cents a bottle, also trial bottles at 10 cents.

Poets are inspired. When they shake hands with an icicle they feel like writing a farewell to Summer.

Some tobaccos spurt up in the pipe when smoking, with little crackling explosions. This is caused by the addition of foreign matter to assist the combustion. When the purity of the tobacco is not tampered with, and it has been properly taken care of, the combustible foreign matter is wholly unnecessary. For in that case it burns at a lower temperature than almost anything. Nothing of this kind is seen in smoking the "Myrtle Navy." It burns with steady combustion throughout.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot. 600 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

Woman is a luxury. Unless a man's circumstances permit of luxuries he had better be content with sewing on his own collar studs.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star.

A Murderer's [illegible]

The story of Baron Trenck, [illegible] by almost incredible [illegible] whiling away the hours of [illegible] imprisonment with compan[ionship] are more than paralleled by [the] ingenuity and curious [illegible] of Dr. Albert G. Prior to his trial Goersen [illegible] dissipated habits, and on th[is] [illegible] of the strongest pleas of the [defence was that] the murderer was irrespon[sible]. [Since] his incarceration, however, [under] the abstemious diet and [illegible] prison life, he has again [illegible] peculiar religious fervor he [illegible] ed, and is now warmly inte[rested in the] future fate of his fellow-pris[oners]. [With] this thought in view, Goersen [asked] permission to read the Bib[le to the in]mates of the prison. The r[equest, natur]ally, was refused. Goersen was determined to impart t[o his compan]ions in durance his knowle[dge and pro]fessed belief in the scriptu[res], and resorted to a scheme wh[ich in pro]bability has no simile in cr[iminal annals] the world over.

Black roaches were the m[edium en]listed by Dr. Goersen to co[nvey] instruction to the benighted [inmates of] Moyamensing.

The county prison is over[run with] English beetles. These ins[ects are] an inch and a quarter to [illegible] more in length, and infest [every part of] the prison. Goersen, who i[s of an inven]tive turn of mind, and at th[e same time a] remarkable penman, saw i[n the roaches] a medium through which it [might be possible] to attain the desired object, [and the training of] the roaches became his hobb[y].

Filled with this idea, h[e caught a] herculean beetle, and, parti[ally] salivated a tiny strip of tiss[ue paper], stuck it, by the aid of a past[e] made from scraps of bread, [on its] back. On the paper, writt[en in minute] characters, and with the s[kill for which] Goersen was so much not[ed, were the] words, small but legible:

"Although thy sins be as scarlet, [they shall be as] white as snow."

The insect was then relea[sed and hur]ried through a crack in the [wall. The] following day the doctor ca[ught a score] or twenty of the largest r[oaches of] the insectorial battalion tha[t infested his] cell and concealed them in a [specially] made box. Hiding the b[ox under his] bed, he prepared a dozen sli[ps like] the first, and, inscribing on e[ach a micro]scopic selection from the Sc[riptures, at]tached them to the backs o[f the] roaches.

After keeping the insects [long] enough to see that the pape[rs would] stick the roaches were [illegible] they, like their predecess[or], escaped through the cracks in the floor and walls of th[e cell. The] result of his experiment Goe[rsen awaited] with feverish anxiety.

The lid of a pan filled wit[h illegible] placed on the floor as a bait. [illegible] later Goersen found nearly [illegible] roaches in the lid.

Carefully he picked them [up one by] one, and examined them.

Speaking of his feelings t[o a friend] afterward he said his excite[ment was in]tense.

"My heart stood still," he [said, and the] tears stood in my eyes, and I [thought the] disappointment would kill m[e. I exam]ined over a dozen roaches a[nd did not] discover a single one with a[ny character]istic that would make me b[elieve I had] seen it before. Suddenly [I saw in] the mass something white [clinging to] the back of one of the bugs. [My heart] came fast, and for a mome[nt I hardly] dared to look. Then, pluck[ing up cour]age, I took the white-b[acked insect] between my fingers and [illegible] wings.

"I trembled as though s[haking with] the ague, and could hardly s[tand for a mo]ment. I examined the strug[gling insect. I] knew it—I had seen it before[. It was held] fast and tight, was still fast[ened the mes]sage I had sent to my unenl[ightened fel]low-prisoners."

On the back of the ro[ach was in]scribed on the strip of pape[r the following] words:

"Be not deceived; evil commun[ications corrupt] good manners."

But this was not all. W[ritten trans]versely across the paper in [a cramped] and almost illegible hand [were the] words:

"I no yure rite.—Sined, 62."

Goersen was delighted, [and the phe]nomenal success of his rus[e made him] long for greater achievemen[ts. He sighed] for new worlds to conquer.

After the return of the fir[st messenger] Goersen devoted his attenti[on to training] the largest dimensions alo[ne.] After several ineffectual [attempts he ach]ieved the remarkable feat [of writing in] infinitesimal characters, on th[e space of a] two-inch, a clear and distinc[t copy of] the "Ten commandments."

Yesterday, while one of th[e keepers of] the prison was walking thro[ugh the corri]dors, his attention was att[racted by a pe]culiar-looking insect. It [seemed to ha]ve a "spasm," and was e[ndeavoring] to relieve itself of the [illegible] strip of paper that trail[ed from its] back.

The insect was capture[d with trou]ble, and then the astoni[shed keeper was] confounded with amazem[ent to read on] the paper the following [illegible] distinctly written: "Lo[ok not upon the] wine when it is red, for a[t the last it biteth] like a serpent and sting[eth like an] adder."

MISSIONARY ROACHES.

A Murderer's Curious [illegible] Cell Pets.

The story of Baron Trenck, who succeed, by almost incredible ingenuity, in whiling away the hours of a lifetime of imprisonment with comparative content, are more than paralleled by the remarkable ingenuity and curious [illegible] ... ns of Dr. Albert G. F. Goersen, the wife-poisoner and murderer, now in solitary confinement at Moyamensing, awaiting the fulfilment of the law. The story is almost beyond belief, and certainly nothing so remarkable has ever been known in the unwritten history of prison life in America.

Prior to his trial Goersen was a man of dissipated habits, and on that rested one of the strongest pleas of the defense, that the murderer was irresponsible. Since his incarceration, however, and under the abstemious diet and regulations of prison life, he has again developed the peculiar religious fervor he once possessed, and is now warmly interested in the future fate of his fellow-prisoners. With this thought in view, Goersen applied for permission to read the Bible to the inmates of the prison. The request, naturally, was refused. Goersen, however, was determined to impart to his companions in durance his knowledge and professed belief in the scriptural writings, and resorted to a scheme which in all pro bability has no simile in criminal annals
the world over.

Black roaches were the messengers enlisted by Dr. Goersen to convey spiritual instruction to the benighted prisoners of Moyamensing.

The county prison is overrun with big English beetles. These insects are from an inch and a quarter to two inches or more in length, and infest every cell in the prison. Goersen, who is of an inventive turn of mind, and at the same time a remarkable penman, saw in the roaches a medium through which it was possible to attain the desired object. To utilize the roaches became his hobby.

Filled with this idea, he captured a herculean beetle, and, parting the wings, salivated a tiny strip of tissue-paper and stuck it, by the aid of a paste ingeniously made from scraps of bread, on the insect's back. On the paper, written in minute characters, and with the skill for which Goersen was so much noted, were the words, small but legible:

"Although thy sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

The insect was then released and scur-ried through a crack in the floor. The following day the doctor captured fifteen or twenty of the largest roaches out of the insectorial battalion that entered his cell and concealed them in an ingeniously made box. Hiding the box under his bed, he prepared a dozen slips similar to the first, and, inscribing on each a microscopic selection from the Scriptures, attached them to the backs of the captive roaches.

After keeping the insects confined long enough to see that the paper slips would stick the roaches were released, and they, like their predecessors, quickly escaped through the cracks and crevices in the floor and walls of the cell. The result of his experiment Goersen awaited with feverish anxiety.

The lid of a pan filled with scraps was placed on the floor as a bait. Three days later Goersen found nearly a score of roaches in the lid.

Carefully he picked them up, one by one, and examined them.

Speaking of his feelings to his keeper afterward he said his excitement was intense.

"My heart stood still," he said; "the tears stood in my eyes, and I thought the disappointment would kill me. I examined over a dozen roaches and could not discover a single one with any characteristic that would make me believe I had seen it before. Suddenly I saw among the mass something white gleaming on the back of one of the bugs. My breath came fast, and for a moment I hardly dared to look. Then, plucking up courage, I took the white-backed roach between my fingers and parted the wings.

"I trembled as though stricken with the ague, and could hardly see for excitement. I examined the struggling bug—I knew it—I had seen it before—on its back, fast and tight, was still fastened a message I had sent to my unenlightened fellow-prisoners."

On the back of the roach, and inscribed on the strip of paper, were the words:

"Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners."

But this was not all. Written transversely across the paper in a scrawling and almost illegible hand, were the words:

"I no yure rite.—Sined, 62."

Goersen was delighted, and the phenomenal success of his ruse made him long for greater achievements and look for new worlds to conquer.

After the return of the first messenger
Goersen devoted his attention to insects of the largest dimensions alone.

After several ineffectual attempts he achieved the remarkable feat of writing in infinitesimal characters, on the back of a two-inch, a clear and distinct transcript of the "Ten commandments."

Yesterday, while one of the officials of the prison was walking through the corridors, his attention was attracted by a peculiar-looking insect. It appeared to have a "spasm," and was evidently trying to relieve itself of the incubus of a strip of paper that trailed from its back.

The insect was captured without trouble, and then the astonished official was confounded with amazement to find on the paper the following text, clearly and distinctly written: "Look not upon the wine when it is red, for at last it bit-eth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

It had been written by Goersen. The darkness that had shadowed his own life through his weakness and dissipation had suggested a text that in the execution of his peculiar mania found expression as a message to his equally unfortunate and equally shadowed fellow-beings.

sufficiently effective.

For hygienic reasons wall paper should not be made either air or water tight.
The paper on the walls is like clothes on prolonged, injuring health and producing other evils.

which are lobed and hairy, and next three pairs of foot-jaws. The horse-shoe crab has no special jaws, the thighs answering the purpose.

Professor R. S. Ball, astronomor royal of Ireland, declares it to be his belief that the masses of stone and iron which fall to the earth as meteorites were originally thrown out by terrestrial volcanoes at a remote period in our planet's geological history. If so, the fragments must have been projected beyond the influence of the earth's attraction by explosions giving them the tremendous initial velocity of six miles a second.

The whale feeds by putting its gigantic through the shoals of minute molluscs, crustaceans and fishes which are constant-to fill the oval cavity, the whale shuts its lower jaw upon its horny plates, and straining out the water through them, swallows the prey stranded upon its vast tongue.

The Prince Consort's Mausoleum

The mausoleum from the outside, though imposing, gives no indication that the large sum of £200,000 was spent by the Queen in its construction. The visitor, however, from the moment he passes beyond the monolithic columns of the porch, with its ceiling of Venetian mosiac by Salviati, can understand how superlative is the artwork comprised within the limits of the interior. The ground plan is in form of a Green cross.
The dome, lighted by eight stained-glass windows in the clerstory, is colored blue, with gold stars. Lines of angels between each window converge towards the centre. From this height of seventy feet to the exquisite floor of inlaid marble there is not an inch of space without the adornment of the best decorative art. The marble paneling of the walls, the basreliefs, the urns and statues, the fresco paintings of saints and incidents of scripture history—the painting in the ceiling of the eastern transept, "The Glorification of the Saints," was from a sketch by the princess royal of England—are one and all worthy of the most careful study.

EL MAHDI AT HOME.

A Correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph on the False Prophet.

A few days ago there arrived in El Ordeh, from Obeid, an elderly man named Mahmoud el Meligy, whom ill-usage has made almost blind. His antecedents are known to many merchants here, and it is stated he once was a rich, prosperous, and honorable resident of Obeid, but he is now destitute. Mahmoud attributes all his misfortunes to the mahdi, and apparently justly so. The merchant at first believed in the divine mission of the black prophet. He was blessed with a young and lovely wife, whom Mohammed Achmed admired and took. This conduct Mahmoud might have forgiven because he was very rich, and could have purchased another spouse from some of the Arab sheiks, but the prophet also cast eyes on his wealth, and required him to turn it all into the rebel treasury. Meligy expressed a willingness to contribute a portion, and tendered a sum, at the same time secreting the bulk of his money.
Then it was the mahdi's myrmidons seized him, and beat him with sticks, and threatened him with death if he refused longer to disclose the hiding place where his treasure lay. Meligy remained firm, so they fastened a rope to one of his ankles, and lowered him down head first into a very deep stone-built well. As he was let down the rope went spinning round, and his head and body were terribly bruised against the sides. The scars still remain. He then gave way and begged for mercy. On being hauled to the top he told them where he had put all his money, and when they had got it he was allowed to go. As soon as he was able he left Obeid, and, journeying to Khartoum, eventually reached here.
Mahmoud says many of the Arabs are beginning to disbelieve that Mohammed Achmed is the "mahdi," and that if it were not for a powerful band he has attached to his person, who themselves know better than to regard him as a true prophet, he would be driven out of the country. The "mahdi," he continued, is a very able cunning man in all he does.
He has had a building erected into which he retires to pray, and where he sometimes receives and speaks to his followers.
It is regarded as a sort of sanctuary, and is a large, square, hall-shaped apartment, roofed over. Here he tells his devotees he converses with the "El Hadra," or "Holy Presence," from whom he receives instructions, direction, and advice in all matters. The credulous Arabs squat around outside this building in hundreds all day long, and when the mahdi appears beg to be shown the "Presence," that they may die happy. "Oh, prophet," they cry, "show us the El Hadra." With grave face Mohammed Achmed turns to some one and answers: "Wallah! That is a very serious and difficult task you seek to impose on me." He is invariably polite, and always calls every one "Ya!
Sidi!" (Sir). If in a complaisant mood the mahdi pretends to yield to their request, and invites them into his sanctuary, which is bare of furniture except a few carpets, skins, and mats, a brass bowl, and brass tray. He then bids them search the apartment to see if there is any one or anything beyond what meets their eyes concerned therein. Their answer usually is: "What need to search, oh prophet? There is nothing here." "Then leave me for a little while I pray," replies the mahdi, "and perhaps the spirit may grant your request." Meligy said, when the "prophet" was left alone, he (the mahdi) waited a little, then, lifting the brass tray which had coffee-cups on it, he poured a vessel of water into the bowl, replacing the tray on the top, but not so as to be resting on the bowl, for the tray was held an inch or two above the bowl either by big pieces of loaf sugar or calcined lime. The water at once began to act upon whichever of these substances he employed, but, before it had time to disintegrate them, the people were readmitted into the apartment, where all appeared as they had left it a minute before. They were soon alarmed and terrified by seeing the tray move and hearing the cups and dishes rattle. Sometimes a little smoke or steam accompanied these demonstrations, but, on every occasion on which the ignorant Arabs and negroes witnessed them, they shouted,
"It is 'The Presence,'" and, falling down with their foreheads pressed to the ground, remained in pious prayer until the mahdi bade them leave him. Absurd as it may seem, such is the leading "miracle" with which the prophet works upon the crass credulity of the ignorant natives. Another plan he has for enlisting adherents is to covertly prepare a pit or hole in the ground, in which he sets matches and gunpowder. Haranguing the wholly savage tribes who flock to hear and see him, he tells them they have nothing to fear from Turk or infidel. If necessary, fire even could be sent to consume all their enemies, so that they would not need to lift their hands against them.
Then, to show his power, the mahdi drives his spear into the ground, selecting the spot prepared, and fire and smoke follow the blow. He tells them the fire will be confined so as not to then and there burn them. Afterward his confederates come to his aid and remove the traces of the prepared stage effect. The mahdi is equally, if not more, adroit in his manner of getting contributions.
From time to time he appears before his people and says he has been commanded to part with all his goods, everything he possesses, in short, must go to the public treasury, or to the "Bait el Mal"—charity box. Proffers are made on all sides to save him from stripping his household, but all these he resolutely declines, saying: "The command is for me, not you."
By and by their turn comes, when the mahdi says he has had a communication from "El Hadla" that such a one is to give all he has to the "Bait el Mal."
They have seen the prophet himself complying with these directions of the "Presence," and how dare any one else disobey? Accordingly, making a virtue of necessity, goods and slaves all find their way to the "charity-box"—otherwise the prophet's chest. It was because he scrupled to comply readily with a mandate of the same kind that poor Mahmoud el Meligy was maltreated. All disputes about goods or betrothals the mahdi quickly settles by appropriating the goods to the public treasury and the women to his harem. He courts the poor and gives them free license to plunder, and snubs the sheiks.

Carlyle's Sympathy.

The crowds of children growing up in London affected him with real pain.
These small plants, each with its head just out of the ground, with a whole life ahead, and such a training! Noticed another trait, too! Scotch thrift, showing itself in hatred of waste. If he saw a crust of bread on the roadway he would stop to pick it up and put it on a step or railing. Some poor devil might be glad of it, or at worst a dog or a sparrow. To destroy wholesome food was a sin. He was very tender about animals, especially dogs, who, like horses, if well treated, were types of loyalty and fidelity. I horrified him with a story of my Oxford days.
The hounds had met at Woodstock. They had drawn the covers without finding a fox, and not caring to have a blank day, one of the whips caught a passing sheep dog, rubbed its feet with aniseed, and set it to run. It made for Oxford in its terror, the hounds in full cry behind.
They caught the wretched creature in a field outside the town and tore it to pieces.
I never saw Carlyle more affected. He said it was like a human soul flying for salvation from a legion of fiends.—

Eating an Orange Artistically.

In Brazil the orange-eater begins by transfixing with a fork the vegetable globe in the neighborhood of the south pole.
Then, with a sharp case-knife he makes through the rind a circular cut, which may be likened to the Antarctic circle.
Next he slices off the whole of the Arctic zone. Then cutting from north to south, he slices off the rind from one polar circle to another. The rind thus having been removed, and the luscious sphere being still transfixed and held in his left hand before him, the eater, with the knife in his right, slices off the tropical region and puts the pieces in his mouth on the flat side, or pierced with the point of the cutting instrument. In this operation one-sixth of the substance of the fruit is wasted in removing the rind, and another sixth in cutting away the core; but with the best of oranges by retail at less than a cent apiece, no matter.

The Oldest Church in America.

It is alleged that the oldest church in America is situated in the village of Ta-dousac, where the Canadian river Saguenay flows inio the St. Lawrence. The church was built by the French discoverer, Jacques Cartier, for the French colony he had founded. It is only a small building, being only about twenty feet square, with a very low ceiling, and was erected in 1517, twenty-five years after the discovery of the continent. I contains a very remarkable picture of the Virgin Mary, painted more than 300 years ago by one of the Jesuit fathers at the mission. The objects of interest in the church—for, besides this picture, there are some ancient vestments and a very curiously embroidered altar-cloth—are freely exhibited to strangers. They have not yet learned the lucrative Roslin custom of charging so much per head as an entrance fee.

Skies Aglow at Midnight.

Perhaps as strange an aerial phenomenon as has ever been experienced or observed in the Northwest was that in the Missouri slope Tuesday night. At about midnight the entire heavens were brilliantly illuminated with a bright, warm light. The experience of the pedestrian was similar to that of a sudden lighting of a lamp in a darkened room. It reminded one of standing beneath an electric light tower in the evening just as the lights first throw out their brilliant rays. One solitary sword-like ray reached out from Aurora's northern lighthouse, and, as if touching some magnet set firmly in the zenith or connecting with another electric current in the very centre of the starry dome, a perfect ocean of flickering light was produced, with a small circle of dazzling brilliancy in the centre. The phenomenon lasted about twenty minutes, during which time a newspaper could be read with perfect ease out of doors or at a window in an unlighted room.

A Princess Who Needed Spanking

When John Brown first entered the service of Prince Albert, the little princesses, hearing their father address him as "Brown," used the same form in speaking to him. The queen corrected them, and they all addressed him as "Mr.
Brown," excepting the Princess Louise, who, imperious in her childhood, persisted in her right to use the name as her father did. One morning the queen heard her and informed her that if she again addressed Mr. Brown without a handle to his name she would be sent to bed. The next day when Brown appeared the future marchioness said: "Good morning, Brown," and then added: "Good night, Brown, for I am going to bed."—

Snails in a state of captivity can, Dr.

he found abnormal calcareous deposits in their monstrously developed shells.

MARKDALE JAN. 15, 1885.

RAILWAY EXTENSION.

The extension of the G. T. R. from Durham, via Markdale to Meaford or some point on the Georgian Bay, is the all important topic in this district at the present time. A largely attended meeting was held at the Markdale House on Friday evening last to discuss the question. The meeting was strongly in favor of the project, and appointed a committee, with W. J. McFarland as chairman and Wm. Brown, Esq., as Secretary, to confer with the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway and the municipalities interested. We expect shortly to be able to state the conditions upon which the extension can be had; in the meantime the great advantages of having competition from the two great Railway companies of Canada will doubtless be looked upon, not only with favor, but with enthusiasm by every ratepayer concerned.

ANNUAL MEETING OF GLENELG AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the above society was held in the Orange Hall, Markdale, on Thursday last. The attendance was good, and the proceedings harmonious. After preliminary opening, C. W. Rutledge read the auditors' report, giving explanations in regard to the various items of receipts and expenditure, the total receipts for the year just closed being $374.31, and the expenditure $338.98, leaving a balance in the treasury of $44.68, besides amount for membership for 1885 of $60.50. The directors report was also read and adopted, after which the following officers and directors were elected for the ensuing year:—President, Wm. Douglas; Vice-Pres., Thos. Elliott; Directors—Wm. Haskett, Edward Rutledge, Edward, Davis, Shepherd Boyce, Wm. Anderson, F. Burton, Jas. Nelson, James Henderson and John Boland. Auditors, Wm. McLoughry and C. W. Rutledge. After the general business of the society was closed, the question of the extension of the G. T. Railway from Durham via Markdale to the Georgian Bay was freely discussed, and the following resolution unanimously carried. Moved by Mr. T. Kells, seconded by Mr. Edward Rutledge, that a committee be formed to communicate with Mr. Hickson, manager of the G. T. R., to ascertain the terms, conditions, &c., on which they will undertake to extend their branch from Durham via Markdale to a point on the Georgian Bay, so as to intersect the Northern Railway, and that it be composed of the following: W. J. McFarland, Wm. Brown, Esq., Wm. Haskett, Thos. Kells, James Elliott, Edward Rutledge, and Alex. Mercer.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—In reading a communication from an "Outsider" in your issue of Jan. 8, one conversant with the facts of the case cannot but be struck with the thoughts that he would have been very near the truth if he had signed himself a One-sider. As some seem to think that I should not have published the minutes of the meeting, I beg leave, before replying to "Outsider," to give my reasons: 1st. The school is in the habit of having the minutes of its annual meetings published by Meaford Road correspondent, or other persons. Some errors were published last winter; so I felt justified in publishing a full report of the school meeting. I was also informed that a full report of what had transpired at the meeting had not even reached Flesherton, and as it is a matter in which the whole neighborhood is interested, I think it is my duty to give the facts of the case to all concerned. I supposed it was the treatment the members of the school received, that caused the "serious impressions." Upon reading the report, many who were there have expressed themselves in that way, especially from an "aged minister." He begins to say that he is not a great admirer of the rev. gentleman, &c., which is merely a blind hung up to conceal, if possible, his identity. He says that the spirit of the report is anything but christian forbearance. As he professes to know a good deal, and I ask who was the ruling spirit in that meeting. If the spiritual guide (by some so called) of a people manifest such a dogmatic, arbitary spirit in their dealings with an intelligent thinking society, he will learn that church dignitaries nor their bulls are not so much dreaded as they were 300 years ago. Again, "Outsider's" desertation on the union plea is misleading; because the union did not only include two Methodist bodies, but Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Baptists also, so that the Methodist union has not materially affected the school at all, nor did it necessitate that the plea put forth by Mr. McD., that the school should adopt the whole of the new constitution. But let me say that that was not what caused the disagreement between the school and Mr. McD. It was the manner in which he tried to force it upon the people in defiance to an article in the union school's constitution providing that "no change shall be made in the constitution without one month's notice having been given to all interested parties;" this is what the school asked for that night of the annual meeting. But the rev. gentleman evidently thought that delays were dangerous and pressed the immediate adoption of the new constitution with the success you see. Again, he tries to screen his actions by saying that according "to usage and law all church property belongs to the united church and held by trustees for that purpose, certainly not for union purposes." Now, it was just the same under the Canada Methodist usage and law, and that is why two clauses are in the union constitution, as the Rev. Mr. Johnston explained at the time of the union it could not be held in the church without them being in it. Then Sir "Outsider" comes out stronger still and says that "when a man or woman unites with any branch of the church their fidelity to act in all things tending to promote its interests should be expected." Is it not a great pity that "Outsider" were not a follower of that great body who take St. Peter as their foundation; would he not have made a devout one? Is it not more reasonable to a thinking person to follow men and agree with church polity so far as they follow Christ and the teachings of His Apostles? I prefer not to be such a partisan or bigot as he would have us be. His next step is still worse, for he makes a direct false statement, when he says the resolution was carefully drawn and sent to press by a Presbyterian secretary, then says that the old tried Methodists are absent on the list of officers. Why are they absent? Mr. McDowell had the nominating of the Superintendent. Perhaps some of them cared more for Methodism than for the spirit of union. For be it known that although "Outsider" states that after taking out the Methodists the other parties were so insignificant that they could not be called a party to the transaction, by actual count the families represented at the Sabbath school number 42, of those 15 families are Methodists, the insignificant remainder 27 families are not Methodists. And so "Outsider" says the union cry has no force. I have carefully enquired to find out who have caused a good deal of trouble and this agitation, and I find there is more than one "Nigger in the fence," or cats' paws as they are sometimes called; there are about three—two in the neighborhood and one about six miles from it; and then he vents his venom against those who have sacrificed comfort, time and means to advance the cause of God and for the good of the school and church, while he looks on and finds fault, and then signs himself an Outsider, and now, Sir, from the falseness of his statements it will be easy seen I was justified in making a report for he, who heard so much about the ——— did not state the truth.

OBSERVER.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The central Scott Act committee of this township, consisting of some of the active workers in the cause of Temperance who were appointed some weeks ago are vigorously pushing forward the canvas. Mr. J. W. Armstrong was elected chairman Mr. C. Treadgold Sec. of committee. The committee held a meeting in Mr Armstrong's office on the 2nd of Jan. at which there was a good attendance, and arranged for a series of Scott Act meetings in this township to be held this week. The meetings to be addressed by the Rev. Mr. Patterson, Presbyterian Minister of Meaford and others.

Our new Society, known as "The Flesherton Mutual Improvement and Library Society," held its first regular monthly business meeting in their library room, Hooper's block, on Monday evening, the 12th inst., constitution was framed; By-laws, drafted and accepted; committees appointed for the selection of reading matter and taking charge of the same and final arrangements, for the more complete furnishing of the room which is to be kept open each evening, Sundays excepted, from 6 till 10 o'clock p. m. This matter is receiving hearty support in our village from young and old and we have little doubt, from the basis on which it is started, it will prove a successful enterprise. One dollar a year is charged for membership, and when we take into consideration, for the sum of one dollar, a man can have access to almost all the daily papers, a large number of weeklies, both Canadian, American, and British, as well as magazines and books, all of which must be good wholesome literature. We think it should be a source of good and an attractive place for the young men in the evenings. Mr. J. W. Armstrong was elected first President; Mr. John Gordon, Treasurer, and James Bulmer, Sec.

The Flesherton Division Sons of Temperance take possession of their New Hall in Dr. Christoe's new block on Wednesday evening the 14th inst., A social entertainment is to be held on that evening, of which we may be able to report to you for another issue.

Adjourned Assizes.

THE Assizes for this County were resumed on Wednesday, before Hon. Justice Armour, when the following cases were disposed of:

ANDERSON vs. ALLEN.—This was a municipal squabble in Amabel, the parties to which had been abusing each other through the Wiarton Echo, and then changing the battle-ground to the Court. Anderson sued Allen for libel, and Allen retorted by a counter suit. The jury came to the conclusion that they could each pay their own costs and call it square. Kilbourn & Bishop for plaintiff. Frost & Frost for defendant.

MERCHANTS BANK vs. SUTHERLAND.—Action to recover $3000 from Mrs. Sutherland, which her husband had given her at the time of making his assignment. Settled by consent of both parties—by judgment for defendant without costs. S. Platt for plaintiff. Creasor & Morrison for defendant.

HAYES vs. INKSETTER.—Adjourned till next Assizes.

MCFARLAND vs. MCLEOD.—Action on promissory notes. Verdict for plaintiff. Jas. Masson for plaintiff. E. Meyers for defendant.

The Court is sitting.—O. S. Times.

Composition.

SUBJECT—VILLAGE INCORPORATION: PRO AND CON.

The following is a composition by one of the pupils of our public school on the now interesting subject of Incorporation which is well worthy of publication. It would be well if some of the older citizens were to take these thoughts into consideration and at once set to work, and the village would soon be basking in the sunshine of a Municipal Council:

"On the above subject much may be said, both for and against, at least in the majority of cases. Markdale, I think, would be far better incorporated. It would not be subject to the township councils. They are much to be praised for the care they exhibit in that way, and if half of what goes out of the village were spent in the village it would greatly improve it. Being remote from the centres of the municipalities adjoining, all the councils care about is the taxes. I do not think that any of the council members live in or close to Markdale. It would thrive better. The money collected in the village would be spent in the village, which needs it bad enough. The citizens would then know that their taxes would go to improve the village, and not be spent somewhere else. Why, the Reeve of Glenelg once drove through the creek near the railroad, rather than trust himself on the rotten structure which spans it. For the improvements made, we need not thank the township councils much. It was the Village Police Trustees who have done so. Better order would prevail. Markdale is near the corners of four townships, viz., Glenelg, Artemesia, Euphrasia and Holland, and all the roughs from the four corners gather themselves together, and after swallowing a goodly quantity of the ardent, practice pugilism extensively. Frequently gangs of roughs have been known to parade the streets and disgust peaceable and law-abiding citizens by their foul language and frequent brawls. One constable is insufficient for a place like this, and yet that is all we have. A good lock-up in which to place offenders when caught, a court room to try them in, and several policemen, would benefit the place greatly. Against incorporation, I know of no argument except the size of the place. But Markdale does a great deal more business than many a larger place. The population too is increasing. Why, in the last five weeks many more residents have arrived."

Artemesia Agricultural Society.

The annual meeting of the above society for the election of officers and other business, was held in the Town Hall Flesherton, on Thursday, the 8th inst. The Auditors Report was laid before the members for their consideration was as follows: Total receipts from all sources, $915.33; John McArthur and John Gordon, Auditors. James Brown, Secretary Treasurer.

It was decided to hold the fall exhibition on Tuesday, October the 6th. Disbursements, $250.20; leaving a balance on hand to the credit of the society of $65.13.

The officers elected for 1885 are Robert Oliver, President; John Brown, Vice-President. Directors—James Brodie, John Latimer, Richard Whitaker, Joseph Aussum, David Harrow, James Stewart, William Trimble, John McArthur, Alexander Stewart.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

MARRIAGES.

MARSH—BUTLEDGE—By Rev. Wesley Casson, at the Markdale House, Markdale, on Wednesday, the 14th inst., Mr. J. E. Marsh to Mrs. A. J. M. Butledge.

SHORE—MATHERS—On the 7th inst., at the bride's parents, By the Rev. Mr. McLaren, Mr. J. W. Shore of Euphrasia, to Miss S., daughter of Mr. Robt. Mathers of Euphrasia 49 couple dined with the happy couple at the residence of the bride's father on the evening of the above happy affair.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, proprietoress of the Markdale House, was married yesterday to one Mr. J. E. March. A large number of friends assembled to witness the ceremony, after which a sumptuous dinner was partaken of at one o'clock. The happy couple left on the 8:50 train for a trip.

LOOK OUT FOR HIM.—A sharper has been in this district for some weeks taking orders for mat patterns and machines for making rugs. He has about the most homely face you ever saw on a man, so you cannot be mistaken, he is a dead-beat of the first water, and should get a wide berth.

M. & W. Armstrong have their new steam saw mill, in this village about complete and will be sawing in a few days. They are now prepared to contract for the supply of any quantity of lumber, also custom sawing for cash or on shares. Will also purchase any quantity of good sound logs.

THE various councils of township municipalities will hold their first meeting at the place where the last meeting of the old council was held, commencing at eleven o'clock on the third Monday in January. County councils meet on the fourth Tuesday of January. The time of above meetings are fixed by statute.

PECULIAR ACCIDENT.—About three weeks ago while the threshing machine was working at Michael Priel's Holland, a sheep while stepping across the connecting rod between the horse-power and cylinder, was wound up by the coupling, tearing the sheep to pieces and breaking the coupling; no further damage was done.

ACCIDENT.—On Monday, 6th inst., while chopping in the bush on his farm near Berkeley, Wm. Sowerly cut his great toe almost off. A chip on the blade of the axe caused it to glance with above result. He was brought to Markdale, when Dr. Sproule dressed the wound; and there is good hopes of saving the toe.

A MEETING of the trustees of the Markdale Methodist church was held on Tuesday evening last. The architect was present, and the size and dimensions of the new church was decided on and a building committee appointed. Plans and specifications will be prepared forthwith, and tenders advertised for about the 1st February.

Selling off at Cost.—Dundas is selling his entire stock of Groceries, Crockery and Glassware at cost. You can save at least 25 to 50 per cent. by buying above lines at Dundas'. His stock is fresh and good and well bought. This is no sham sale. I purpose giving my whole attention to the Boot & Shoe business. Don't miss this opportunity.

THE annual meeting of the Ebenezer Sunday School of the Methodist church was held on Tuesday evening, the 30th of December. Meeting opened by singing and prayer. After the preliminary business was gone through with, the following officers were elected for the coming year:—James Hanson, Superintendent, Geroge Sewell, Bible Class Teacher; Robert Sewell, Intermediate 1st class, Boys; William Richardson, Infant class 2nd; Phoeby Walker, Intermediate 1st class, girls; Mary Blain, Infant 2nd class, girls; Annie Stonell, Infant 3rd class; Samuel Walker Secretary. The services of the retiring Superintendent, Mr. Richard Stonell, was kindly referred to, and a vote of thanks was presented to him for his faithfulness and zeal in connection with the Ebenezer S. School.

THE STORY OF THE "NISERO."

It is Told by One of the Survivors of the Wreck.

A story which may in some respects be compared with that of Robinson Crusoe himself is told in a little volume just published. It is entitled "The Wreck of the Nisero, and Our Captivity in Sumatra," and is written by W. Bradley, one of the survivors. Mr. Bradley, who was third engineer of the vessel, kept a diary of the sufferings and adventures of the shipwrecked crew during their detention in the island, and the tale is told from these daily records with a clearness of language, a sharpness of outline, and a fullness of detail which Defoe himself has scarcely surpassed. The Nisero was an iron screw steamer of 1,818 tons, which set out from Liverpool in June, 1882, on a voyage to Penang. She was nearly wrecked by grounding on a sand-bank near the Twelve Apostles, seven days from Suez, but was got off, and reached Penang on July 22. From Penang the steamer went to Singapore, Batavia, and some other ports, and was then chartered by a Chinese merchant for three months to trade in rice. On Nov. 7 the crew were short of coal, and put about for Acheen head. On the next evening the vessel ran aground again, and became a wreck. The crew of eight and twenty men escaped with difficulty, and found themselves at Pongah, on the Sumatran coast, a hundred miles or so south of Acheen head, to which they had been directing their course.

The wrecked crew at once realized their position. The islanders were at war with the Dutch, and they would be taken for Dutchmen. The first natives they saw were evidently bent on plunder; but the cook, who was a Chinaman, was able to make himself understood, and explained that they were Englishmen. Presently an armed party appeared with a chief, who sent them a present of bananas as a token of good will. In the morning the chief sent for them to the village, and gave them a poor hut, consisting of one small room, with a roof that let in the rain. He sent them a couple of rifles and some ammunition, but they felt that they were captives. Next day the rajah of Tenom came, and showed some suspicion that the fair-haired among them were Dutchmen. In a day or two he informed them that had they not been able to explain their nationality, not one of them would have been spared. He told them that some natives of the interior had on their knees besought him to massacre them. Under pretense of saving them he took them off to Tenom, leading them by a roundabout course, through frightful swamps, with an armed escort ahead, till they again reached the coast within sight of their starting place. The way then lay along the shore to the mouth of the Tenom river. Here they were put in another wooden house, better than that of the Pongah chief, but still incommodious and unhealthy. Tenom itself is a poor village of sixteen or eighteen huts, several of which are shops. Here they began to see the plunder of their own steamer gradually arriving and being appropriated by the natives. One day two steamers, evidently searching for something, came into sight at sea, and a few days later two peddlers appeared, one of whom slipped a couple of notes into the hands of one of the sailors, one from a Dutch captain, the other from a Dutch resident on the coast. The letters told them to be patient and discreet, as they were in the hands of a barbarian and a ruffian. On the same day letters were brought from a Dutch captain by a native of Acheen, giving the same counsel. Some stores were also sent which gave them two days of proper food. There was a letter to the rajah offering a ransom, but he was away at Pongah plundering the wreck. Next day he told the captives he would take them inland. They could do nothing but go as he bid them, though every step was further away from the chance of rescue.

The new quarters were a day's journey up the stream, or one of its affluents. They were close to the rajah's own house, and were in three huts. Here they spent Christmas, the Christmas dinner being rice and a little salt fish, with water to drink. The captain had meanwhile gone to assist in the negotiations, offering all the men as hostages for his return, but never returning. He sent them word that new demands had been made, and that he was going to Rigas in a Dutch gunboat to see what could be done. The New Year came with hopes of rescue, which soon vanished. The rajah told them he had passed his word to the government for their safety, but the Dutch had threatened to bombard Tenom, and he must take them further up the country. They heard the bombardment, as they were being hurried inland. One place of captivity was given them after another, and they spent their time in such sport as was was permitted. On the 22nd of February a letter arrived from Commander Bickford, of the Pegasus, telling them of the efforts which were being made for their release, and especially of the presence on board of Mr Maxwell, who understood the Malay language, and was a favorite with the people. Still the weeks passed on and no rescue came. Stores arrived now and then, sometimes letters and newspapers, but no deliverance. On the 23rd of March an Italian sailor died, and there was much fever and dysentery among them. In the early summer unmistakable symptoms of cholera appeared, and three more men were dead before the end of May. Altogether seven out of twenty-eight who landed died and were buried together in a little cemetery, around which their surviving comrades made an ornamental fence, with a large cross in the middle of the ground, and smaller crosses to the head of every grave. Meanwhile they never seem to have been quite out of reach of friends. From time to time stores were sent, sometimes letters, and their condition and treatment improved. The summer passed, and it was not till September that they actually set out on their way to freedom. As they went through Pongah the Nisero they had abandoned ten months before still lay on the shore, her masts standing, portions of the poop and forecastle still showing, but her midships completely under water, and the shore strewed with the wreckage. On the morning of the 10th of September, they were on board the Pegasus, Mr. Maxwell, who had been the agent of their deliverance, following later in the day. It is clear from Mr. Bradley's narrative that the delay in their rescue was due to the vacillations and greed of the Acheen chiefs. The chief were actuated by unkind to the captives, whose sufferings were due to the climate, the savage life they were compelled to share, and the privations they had to endure. The long period of endurance and suspense was lightened by many incidents of sport and curious observations and experience. In fifteen months from their first starting they had got home again, having in the meanwhile, as Mr. Bradley says in his concluding words, gained the sympathy of two nations and seen adventures enough to last a lifetime.—[London Times.

The Great Wall of China.

This stupendous wall, which extends across the northern boundary of the Chinese Empire, and forms the barrier between China and Mongolia, is deservedly ranked among the grandest labours of art, and as one of the most remarkable of human structures, and is, perhaps, the most wonderful monument of human industry ever exhibited to the world. It was built during the reign of Tsin-Shee-Hwang-Tee, the founder of the Tsin dynasty. It was commenced two hundred and fourteen years before the Christian era, and finished in about ten years, several millions of men working unremittingly in its construction. This wall is carried over the summits of high mountains, some of which are a mile in height, across deep valleys, and over wide rivers, by means of arches. In many parts it is doubled or trebled, to command important passes, and is built in the most substantial manner, especially toward its eastern extremity, where it extends by a massive levee into the sea, in which portion the workmen were required, under penalty of death, to fit the stones so exactly that even a nail could nowhere be inserted between the joints. In some parts, where less danger was apprehended, it is not equally strong, and toward the northwest consists of a wall two feet thick on each side of the structure, the lower part of which is composed of hewn stone, and the upper part of brick, the intermediate space being filled with earth, forming a very firm rampart.

The Chinese wall is fifteen hundred miles long, twenty-five feet high, and twenty feet thick at the top. Six horsemen can easily ride abreast on its summit. Towers are placed along its whole extent every one hundred yards, which was considered twice the distance an arrow could be shot, so that every part of the wall might be within reach of the archers stationed in the towers. These towers, or massive bastions, which are square, are forty-eight feet high and forty feet in width. The stone employed in the foundations, angles, and towers, is a strong, gray granite, but the upper part of the wall is made of bluish bricks and a remarkably pure and white mortar.

According to Sir George Staunton and Du Halde, this great barrier, which has been and will continue to be the wonder and admiration of ages, was constructed to protect China from the eruptions of the Tartars, 2,000 years ago.

It is estimated that the materials employed in this immense fortification would be sufficient to construct a wall six feet high and two feet thick twice around the world.

It is certain that civilization had made considerable progress among the Chinese when it was only dawning on the nations of Europe, but their early history is shrouded in fable. Their earliest existing records are the writings of Confucius, who lived five hundred and fifty years before Christ, and from that period they descend in an unbroken series to the present day. Under their earliest dynasty they obtained such prosperity that the Mongols and Tartars invaded their territory for plunder, to prevent which they built the great wall which has ever been considered as a wonder in the world.

Wealth and the Pressure of Population.

Wealth is usually the accompaniment rather of a dense population than of a scanty one. Within the past half century the population of England has doubled, but its wealth has increased fourfold. Belgium, with a population of 480 to the square mile, is better off than Spain with but 90. To take an extreme instance. According to Schoolcraft, an Indian hunter required for his sole substance seventy-eight square miles; his direct interest lay in the death of every rival who infringed on a territory which in England would support 30,000 people. The reason America can now support so many million more of population is because these millions have brought with them the civilization which has been the result of competition in the old world. It is pressure of population which has raised man from savagery. It produced the diffusion of the race, forced man into the social state, and compelled each advance by one tribe to be followed by its rivals, or they would take a diminished chance of existence. The struggle for life, in which unfit varieties are eliminated, leaving the fitter ones to transmit their superiority to their offspring, has been the guarantee of development.

English in the House of Commons.

The language used in the House of Commons, says the Pall Mall Gazette, is exceptionally English, and the small part that foreign languages play in the construction of our ordinary speech is remarkable. Owing in a great measure to its monosyllabic character the Saxon is extremely forcible and impressive. Both from his natural genius, and from his long practice, Mr. Gladstone is undoubtedly the best orator in the House of Commons. A careful analysis of the derivation of the language employed by Mr Gladstone in his speeches gives the following results: Seventy per cent of the words Saxon, 13 per cent. Latin, and 12 per cent. French, the remaining 4 per cent. being composed of words derived from different sources. One fact is particular. With all his likings for Greek and his well-known attainments in that language, his usage of words derived from that source does not equal 1 per cent. Even on topics involving an appeal to early history, such as the theological side of the discussion on the Parliamentary Oaths Bill, Mr. Gladstone's language is scarcely more classical, as the figures in the latter instance stood thus: Saxon, 72 per cent.; Latin, 15 per cent.; French, 11 per cent.; other words, 2 per cent., of which Greek again forms less than 1 per cent.

An analysis of the speeches of the leader of the Opposition shows that in his language there is a great similarity with the component parts of Mr. Gladstone's. Sir Stafford Northcote's speeches give the following results: Saxon, 70 per cent.; Latin, 16 per cent.; French, 11 per cent.; other words, 3 per cent.

Sir William Harcourt is a forcible speaker, and, when occasion requires, he is without an equal in invective and sarcasm; in general his speeches, both in style of delivery and subject matter, are much above the average of the House. They show the following results: Saxon, 77 per cent.; Latin, 15 per cent.; French, 7 per cent.; other words, 1 per cent.

Mr. Bright does not speak much now, and since his great speech on the Irish Land Act of 1881, which kept the House crowded until long past midnight, he has spoken comparatively seldom in Parliament. There is no question as to his being a great orator. As a speaker he has always been regarded as an Englishman of the English; but, strange to say, an analysis of some of his later speeches gives figures which vary but little from those of the other speakers already quoted. They stand thus: Saxon, 74 per cent.; Latin, 12 per cent.; French, 10 per cent; other words, 4 per cent.

No one could possibly refer to the prominent speakers in the House without including Lord Randolph Churchill, for lately, upon all subjects, great and small, he has had a great deal to say. A speech of his on the franchise question gives the following results: Saxon, 72 per cent; Latin, 16 per cent.; French, 6 per cent.; Greek, 2 per cent.; other words, 4 per cent.

Naturally the best speakers in the House are looked for among the occupants of the first two benches, but below them are many good speakers, like Mr. Cowan and Mr. Morley, are to be found; and, whatever may be said for the opinions and tactics of the Irish party, it must be confessed that there are some very able speakers to be found in its ranks. From these few figures two facts are deducible—first, that the language of all the speakers quoted approximates greatly to one standard; and secondly, that the greatest strength of the language is derived from the Saxon element. Taking the words derived from the French as being originally Latin, it may be said that of the language used in the House of Commons, three-fourths comes from the Saxon, and one-fourth from the Latin. Both our political and literary history of the past accounts for the number of Latin words used, but still they are only words of general acceptance, and words whose import is perfectly well understood. The utilitarian theory applies nowhere more strongly than in the case of a language, and if a word is useful it is sure to be retained.

A Little Hero.

A sad story of a French drummer boy is told at Heidelburg, in connection with the last siege of that city. The Austrians were in possession of the place, and the only means of attacking them was by crossing the old bridge over the river Neckar. But the defenders were well prepared for the attack; they placed their cannon in such a manner that it covered the bridge and its approaches. The French planted their cannon on the opposite side of the river, and kept up a terrible fire, but were utterly unable to dislodge the Austrians from their end of the bridge. The attackers were determined to take the city, but had no other means of doing so than by crossing the bridge, and that was swept by the guns of the opponents. They made repeated charges from their side, but each time they advanced they were mowed down by the Austrian artillery, or repulsed at the point of the bayonet. The French band advanced as far as the centre of the bridge, exciting the soldiery with their martial strains, but were compelled to retreat with the retreating men. Again and again the musicians advanced and retreated, with their comrades, until at last, a little drummer, disdaining flight, mounted on the parapet of the bridge, and although his fellow-bandsmen fled, with the soldiers, stood his ground manfully, beating a wild air to recall the men to the charge. On rushed the fierce Austrians with fixed bayonets, whilst the little hero, still beating his drum defiantly, was run through the body by some brutal foe. As he fell over the bridge into the rapid rushing river below, the poor boy cried out, "Oh, my mother! my mother!" The last words of the little conscript were heard, both by friend and foe, and are yet remembered in Heidelburg. On wild nights, as the peasant crosses the bridge, in fancy he still sees the form of the little drummer-boy beating the fierce alarm, and still amid the rush of the waters he imagines that he hears his dying words, "Oh, my mother! my mother!"

A Substitute for Sardines.

A Tribune correspondent at Lubec, Me., makes the announcement that the sardines imported from the Mediterranean are rapidly becoming a tradition. A substitute has been found in small herrings which are caught on the coasts of Maine and New Brunswick. In 1876 the first canning factory was established in Eastport, and since then eighteen other factories have been started there, besides eight at Lubec, three at Jonesport, two at Robinson, and one at each of half a dozen near by places. The business extends from the middle of April to the middle of December of each year. In 1877 there were packed 1,500 cases of 160 cans each, whereas in 1883 there were sent to market 200,000 cases. About five cents will cover the actual amount of converting the herrings into a lot of sardines. Says the correspondent: "To catch the fish, weirs are constructed, built of piles driven where the water is about twenty feet deep, and the spaces between interlaced with rails and brush. An opening is left in the weir, through which the fish enter at high water, and a deep seine closes this aperture when the weir is well filled. Before low water, the fisherman, with a large scoop net, take the fish out of the weir into their boats. The fish are offered for sale by the hogsheadful to about seventy-five boatmen employed by the different factories. When there has been a large 'catch,' the bidding is dull and the prices are low; but when only a few of the weirs have been replenished the competing bidders become excited, and a looker-on is reminded of a stock exchange. Early in 1877 one dollar per hogshead was thought to be a good price; but in the last year $30 has been paid. After the highest bidder has secured his stock, he starts his boat and hoists a signal flag, to notify his employers that he is on his way to their factory."

Dexterous cutters—mostly boys and girls—trim off the heads of the fish and draw the intestines with one movement of their knives. The fish finally reaches the flaking-room well-washed and drained. "The flakes," says the correspondent, "are wire trays about two feet by three in size. The flaking is performed by women. The fish are spread in a single layer on the flake to avoid contact while baking. When a flake is full it is moved to a rack in front of the oven. The oven is fitted with ten revolving frames or skeletons, which altogether hold forty flakes. The man who works the oven takes each flake from the rack and places it on a revolving frame. By the time the last frame is filled the flakes on the first one are sufficiently baked. On the removal of these to the racks they are immediately replaced by other flakes of fresh fish.

From the racks men take the baked fish to the packing tables, where women assort and pack them in tin boxes, from the smallest variety to the largest packed in an oval can and henceforth to be known as sea trout. When a tray of cans has been packed and covered with oil and the other ingredients used, it is handed to the "header," who inserts the cover, and from him it is passed to the sealing-room, where the covers are soldered. After soldering they are packed in a cooler and then placed under heavy pressure in a steam process kettle. The boxes are then each tapped at both ends, and through one hole hot oil is injected until it flows out of the other, when they are both quickly sealed, and put into a revolving cleaner and are rapidly whirled in sawdust. They are then scrutinized by the tester. If by the pressure of his hands he perceives a leak, it goes to the leak mender and is again revolved in sawdust. Nothing remains now but to label and nail up in cases, when they are ready for shipment to New York, and are thence soon distributed through all parts of the country.

How They Saved the Bank.

Many years ago, in consequence of a commercial panic, there was a severe run on a bank in South Wales, and the small farmers jostled each other in crowds to draw out their money. Things were rapidly going from bad to worse, when the bank manager, in a fit of desperation, suddenly bethought him of an expedient. By his directions, a clerk, having heated some sovereigns in a frying-pan, paid them over the counter to an anxious applicant. "Why, they're quite hot," said the latter, as he took them up. "Of course," was the reply; "what else could you xpect? They are only just out of the mold. We are coining them by hundreds as fast as we can."

"Coining them!" thought the simple agriculturist. "Then there is no fear of the money running short!" With this their confidence revived, the panic abated, and the bank was enabled to weather the storm.

Shaving by Wire.

Superfluous hair, and especially that which disfigures the faces of women and girls, is now removed by a process termed electrolysis. An ordinary galvanic battery and a fine needle, the latter attached to the negative cord, are all the instruments required. The number of cells needed depends upon the activity of the battery, the delicacy of the patient's skin, and the strength of the hairs to be removed. The needle, which is a fine flexible one, is introduced into the small sack which holds the root of the hair, and by means of the galvanic current the point from which the hair grows is effectually and completely destroyed.

What the Moon is Doing.

The tides are caused mainly by the moon, as it, in reaching hold of the water as the earth revolves around on its axis. This must cause friction on the earth as it revolves, and friction, as everyone knows, causes loss of power. Suppose a wheel, with hair around its rim like a circular brush such as is used for hair-brushing by machinery; if this brush be revolving rapidly, and we hold our hand over it lightly on the hair so that it is slightly rubbed backward as the wheel revolves, we can understand that the speed of the wheel will be gradually diminished, until at last it will be brought to a standstill, provided there is no additional power communicated to the wheel, by machinery or hand, beyond what was given to set it spinning around. Now, this is somewhat analogous to what is happening to the earth in its rotation. There is reason to suppose that the action of the tides is slowly but surely lessening the speed of the earth's rotation, and, consequently, increasing the length of the day, and that this action will continue until the earth revolves on its own axis in the same time that the moon takes to revolve around the earth.

Then the day, instead of being twenty-four hours, as now, will be about twenty-eight days, and the earth will be exposed to the full blaze of the sun for about fourteen days at a time. The change this will bring about on the earth can hardly be exaggerated. All life, both animal and vegetable, will be destroyed; all water will be evaporated; the solid rocks will be scorched and cracked; and the whole world reduced to a dreary and barren wilderness. It is supposed by some that the moon has already passed through all this, hence its shattered and bare-looking surface: that the earth, being so much larger, has more quickly acted upon the oceans which once were upon the moon's surface, and stopped almost entirely its revolution around its own axis, thus causing it to have a day equal to twenty-eight of our days, and the heat of the sun has already done to it what in future ages it will do to the earth.

Scotch Curling.

In the course of time a great many anecdotes have gathered about the game, and stories are repeated illustrating its fascination, its development of the virtues, and its superior attraction over anything else in life, except beef, greens and whiskey. It is said that the presence of the minister and gentlemen in the game restrains profanity. A player who could not entirely control his indignation at a stupid comrade, and did not like to inform him before the minister where he was going, exclaimed, "It's a guid thing ye're gaun where there'll be nae ice." An enthusiastic Kilmarnock curler, absorbed in the game from day to day during favorable weather, expressed his earnest hope that his wife, who was ill, "wadna dee till there cam' a thaw, for otherwise he wadna be able to attend her burial." A couple of farm servants saw the minister going to the curling pond. One of them criticised him, and said that instead of curling every day he ought to be making sermons and visiting the folk. But the other defended him, and thought he should take every chance he could get at hurling the stone. "If I were a minister, and there was ony man in the parish wadna tak' at least one day's guid curling every winter, I can tell you what it is, lads, I wad keep him back at the sacrament."

The Rev. Adam Wadderstone, minister in Bathgate, was an excellent man and curler, who died in 1780. Late one Saturday night one of his elders received a challange from the people of Shotts to the curlers of Bathgate to meet them early Monday morning; and after tossing about half the night at a loss how to convey the pleasing news to the minister, he determined to tell him before he entered the pulpit.

When Mr. Wadderstone came into the session house, the elder said to him in a low tone, "Sir, I've something to tell ye: there's to be a parish play with the Shotts folk the morn, at—"

"Whist, man, whist!" was the rejoinder. "Oh, fie shame, John! fie shame! Nae speaking to-day about warldly recreations."

But the ruling passion proved too strong for the worthy clergyman's scruples of conscience, for just as he was about to enter the inner door of the church he suddenly wheeled round and returned to the elder, who was now standing at the plate in the lobby, and whispered in his ear, "But whan's the hour, John? I'll be sure and be there."

Let us all sing,

That music dear to a curler's ear,
And enjoyed by him alone—
The merry clink of the curling rink
And the boom of the roaring stone.

The Mysterious Bag.

Make two bags each about a foot long and six inches wide, of some dark material, and sew them together at the edge, so that one may be inside the other. Next make a number of pockets, each with a cover to it, which may be fastened down with a button and loop. Place these about two inches apart, between the two bags, sewing one side of the pocket to one bag and the other side to the other. Make slits through both bags about an inch long, just above the pockets, so that you can put your hand in the bags; and, by inserting your thumb and finger through these slits, you may obtain entrance to the pockets and bring out of them whatever they contain. It is, of course, necessary that a variety of articles should be put in the pockets. Before commencing the trick you may turn the bag inside out any number of times, so that your audience may conclude that it is quite empty. You can then cause to appear or disappear any number of articles of a light nature, much to the amusement of your audience.

FOR THE FARMER

Potatoe Culture.

The following is a part of a prize essay from W. W. Farnsworth, of Ohio, recently published in the Rural New Yorker:—

Potatoes can be profitably raised on a variety of soils, though my experience goes to prove that a sandy loam or gravelly soil is the most favorable. Whatever the composition of the soil, it must be thoroughly drained, either naturally or artifically, and it should contain sufficient humus to prevent it from becoming harb or sodden. These conditions are usually found in soils recently cleared, and while stumps and roots make the cultivation more difficult, the humus and potash deposited in the soil by the decay of leaves for ages past, make a rich, mellow, lively soil, and the comparative freedom from weeds helps to make "new ground" desirable for potato growing. But as we cannot always have a field cleared to order when we wish to plant potatoes, we are obliged to look somewhere else for our potato ground.

I have obtained the best success with clover sod. In sandy ground, I would spread twenty to twenty-five large loads of stable manure on the sod as soon after mowing as possible; then let the rains carry its fertilizing properties into the soil in solution, so that by the time we are ready to plow, the fertilizer is intimately commingled with the soil, more so than if applied as a top-dressing immediately after plowing; and, aside from this, the manure can be drawn at leisure times between haying and Spring, (the sooner after haying the better;) whereas, the application of it after plowing, in Spring, consumes much valuable time when we can ill afford it. Wood ashes and superphospates, however, I would apply after plowing. I would harrow in 50 to 100 bushels of unleached wood ashes per acre; where these cannot be economically obtained, potash in some other form can generally be used with profit. The clover sod will supply quite a quantity op potash —an element highly essential to the successful growth of potatoes. I have never used much commercial fertilizers, having always been able to secure enough stable manure and ashes.

In case the white grubs are troublesome, it is better to grow some other crop (corn fer instance) the first year after a sod; then apply the manure as soon as the corn can be removed, and plow the next Spring. Were I attempting to grow potatoes on a clay soil, I would plow the ground late in the Fall, and apply the manure, if fine, immediately after plowing, and, if coarse, as long before as possible.

Where a clover sod is not obtainable, I endeavor to plow under a green crop of some kind; rye can be sown the previous fall and will make a good growth before [illegible] pre[illegible] turing at midsummer, Hungarian Grass or Indian Corn can be sown and plowed under.

I prefer planting in drills, especially for the later crop, as when hilled up, a continuous ridge does not dry out as quickly as detached hills, and, besides, it is quite certain that a larger yield per acre can be obtained from drills. The distance apart to plant, should be governed somewhat by the variety planted, strong-growing kinds requiring more room than others. I think a good general rule is to make the rows three feet apart, and put the pieces from 12 to 18 inches apart, with two eyes on a piece. Should the soil be in a very high state of fertility, perhaps even less seed would be better.

I generally select smooth, even-sized seed, and use the entire potatoe; begin at the stem end, and cut from outside to the centre, following around the potato towards the seed end.

As to flat or hill culture, so much depends on the soil, season and variety, that it is very difficult to determine which is preferable. I usually hill mine moderately, with a winged shovel plow, which makes broad, flat hills; but in dry, sandy soils, where the seed can be planted deep, and especially in dry seasons, it is not advisable to make much, if any, hill; and if hilled at all, the hills should be broad and flat.

Lime as a Fertilizer.

Henry Stewart remarks, in the agricultural columns of the Times, tha the best time to apply lime is in the Fall, for the reason that it is more easily dissolved in cold water and is then the more actively effective. It is also a more convenient season for the work than any other. The manner of using it is to draw the lime as fresh as possible from the kiln and drop it in the field, in heaps of one or more bushels, a certain number of feet apart, this depending upon the quantity to be used per acre. Thus for spreading the following quantities the sizes of the heaps, and the distances apart will be as follows:

40 bushels per acre is a bushel 33 feet apart.
50 bushels per acre is a bushel 30 feet apart.
60 bushels per acre is a bushel 27 feet apart.
80 bushels per acre is 2 bushels 33 feet apart.
120 bushels per acre is 2 bushels 30 feet apart.
160 bushels per acre is 2 bushels 27 feet apart.

The table may be easily carried on up to 300 or more bushels by a simple process of addition to the size of the heap. This method is chosen because at 33 feet apart the heaps are easily and accurately spread by casting the lime with a long handled shovel 16½ feet, or one rod, in every direction, and 16½ feet is an easy cast with such a shovel. The lime having been drawn and dropped in the field, is left until it has absorbed from the air or has received from thn rain enough water to reduce it to a fine powder. It is then air-slaked, and should be evenly scattered without loss of time, because more water would make it pasty, and it could not be evenly spread in that condition. The best way to apply it in the Spring is on the plowed ground or upon meadows during the present or next month. It should never be plowed under, as it works downward very rapidly, and would soon pass below the reach of the roots. It should be harrowed in the soil along with the seed, and it will do no harm if the manure is covered in at the same time, for reasons to be explained presently. It may be spread directly from the wagon, the heap having been made upon the headlands or in an adjoining field in quantities of 100 or more bushels.

The action of lime upon vegetable matter, as has been already stated, it is to liberate ammonia from it and to produce nitric acid by hastening its oxidation or decomposition. If mixed with decomposed manure, it rapidly drives off the ammonia in vapor or gas, and it rapidly changes the nitrogen of raw manure into very soluble compounds. Thus, if mixed with manure, either old or fresh, without precautions, it wiss soon deprive it of its most valuable properties. This is so well understood that there exists among well-informed farmera a prejudice against the use of the lime, under the impression that it "eats up manure," "impoverishes the ground," and generally acts in a wasteful and prodigal manner. It is well that this impression exists, because lime is a substance to be used with knowledge and judgment. It should never be mixed with old manure in a heap at all, or with fresh manure unless it is in the compost heap, where a large proportion of earth, soda, or plaster is used; and these will act as absorbents of any ammonia liberated, or nitric acid formed by the action of the lime. But in properly constructed compost heaps lime acts as an active agent to produce a rapid decomposition of the mass, and quickly prepare it for use in the field. Also, when lime is spread upon newly manured soil, its action is not wasteful, because the soil at once absorbs the ammonia that is liberated and holds it until it is finally prepared for the use of the crop.

Lime is a food, and an active provider of food at the same time. It thus gives the plant what it has in itself, and all that it can draw from the soil as well. In this lies at once its usefulness and the danger of using it. If a farmer uses it to drag from his field all the fertility contained in it, as he would drag a fish pond with a net, or spend from his pocket without returning to it, then he injures himself by exhausting his land; but if he gives manure, plows under clover, feeds more stock with his enlarged crops, and returns to the soil the food supplies he has drawn from it, then he uses this valuable fertilizer in a profitable manner, and will find it the most remunerative manure he can use for the money spent in it. The usual price of lime at the kiln is from 10 to 12 cents a bushel of 80 pounds when fresh burned, or half that price for slaked or waste lime. The former is the cheaper. —[Rural New Yorker.

Raw Cotton.

A query concerning cotton, addressed to the New York Times, elicited the following reply:

The earliest use of cotton is involved in obscurity. It was manufactured in India at a period anterior to the dawn of authentic history. It is mentioned in the sacred writings of the Hindoos, written more than three thousand years ago. Its use by the Chinese in the manufacture of paper extends back to a date unknown to us. Herodotus, who wrote in the fifth century before Christ, mentions it, calling it "tree wool," saying, "the trees of India bear fleeces as their fruit, surpassing those of sheep in beauty," and "the Indians wear clothes made from those trees." Ctesias, a contemporary of Herodotus, residing at the Persian court, also mentions the Indian "wool of trees." In a Syriac version of the Old Testament, referred to by Parkhurst, in his Hebrew lexicon, the word in the original, karpae, is rendered "thorn-wool." Its cultivation and manufacture in Egypt are referred to by Pliny, and in Persia by Strabo, the celebrated geographer, from whose writings it appears that cotton fabrics were used in Persia at least a century before Herodotus. The mummy swathing-cloth of a child was found to be of cotton. Rosseline found cotton seeds in a vessel in the tombs of Egypt, indicating that cotton was cultivated in that country. Wilkinson says that cotton cloth was manufactured in Egypt, and cotton clothing worn by all classes. Pliny says that the Egyptian priests, though they used linen, were partial to cotton robes. On the Rosetta stone mention is made of cotton garments supplied by the government for the use of the temple. Bonomi says: "the cotton manufactures were celebrated and are mentioned by Pliny as the invention of Semiramis, who is said by some writers of antiquity to have founded large weaving establishments along the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates." The textile fabrics of Assyria were celebrated throughout the civilized world. No doubt exists in the mind of the writer of this that cotton goods contributed to swell the vast tide of commerce which flowed from India and Assyria to Palestine and Egypt, not only during but long anterior to the days of Solomon.

There is every reason to believe that the garments worn by the people of Palestine thousands of years ago consisted largely of cotton goods; and yet there is no mention of the use of cotton in sacred history. A careful investigation of the subject has, however, shown that the omission is occasioned by mistranslations. The original word is karpas, which Gesnius says should be rendered "cotton" in Exodus xxv., 4; xxxv., 6, 23, 25, 35; xxxvi., 8, 35, 37; also in Genesis xli., 42, when Pharoah arrayed Joseph in vestures of fine linen, it should read "cotton."

Some Instances of Eastern Trading.

The inevitable necessity that a Levantine or Asiatic feels to ask more than double the actual value of his goods, and allow himself afterwards to be beaten down to something less than half what he originally asked, is a cause of bewilderment to the untravelled Briton, and a continual sore rankling in the bosom of the unwary tourist who has fallen a victim. It is not only the unlicensed hawker who takes his wares on board ships as they put in to the various ports along their route, and whose prices are merely a speculation as to how great an extent his customer may be imposed upon; but in the regular shops and markets, this system of haggling is perfectly recognised; and a trader who fixed a fair price on his goods, and kept to the one price, would run considerable risk of losing his entire custom, as the satisfaction of having beaten down a tradesman, and forced him to strike off something from his original price, gives an appreciable flavor to the transaction. As an instance of how ingrained is this idea of trading, I remember a story a friend of mine in the navy told me of a Greek messman on board his ship, who was paying his visit to England. The first time he went on shore to buy provisions, he was in a butcher's shop and inquired the price of some prime beef he saw them hanging up. "Fourteenpence a pound," was the reply. "I will give you eightpence," said he, in perfect good faith, and without a minute's hesitation. This somewhat startled the butcher; and it was only after a considerable amount of difficulty that the Greek was made to understand that this system of trading was not in accordance with English ideas. For long afterwards, he spoke of English shopkeepers as "wonderful people—they have but one price."

But the ships's hawker or the small shopkeeper in the East is different. For a good thorough-paced scoundrel in trade, he carries off the palm. He looks at his customer, making up his mind how much he may ask him, which is usually about three times as much as he thinks he may get, that being about three hundred per cent. beyond the actual value of the article. The year before last, when I was quartered in Alexandria, I went into a small boutique to buy a trifle I saw in the window. I asked the price. "Ten francs." "Nonsense!" I said. "Five, sir" — "Two" — "One franc only." Eventually, I bought it for two large piastres (fourpence-halfpenny.) Not a bad instance that of a sudden fall in the prices.

But it is the passengers by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamers who are the most readily recognised objects for fleecing purposes; so much so, that a special expression has been strung together to denote one of this highly favored victim band. A few days after I was sent out to Aden, I had the imprudence to go out shopping on the day that the Peninsular and Oriental boat called into that port. I inquired the price of few ostrich feathers. "Seventy rupees," the man said. "Do you take me for a Peninsular and Oriental passenger fool?" I asked, having been instructed by old hands as to the little ways of these innocent Arab dealers, and the proper responses with which to meet them. "I beg your pardon, sir," he replied, and offered them to me for twenty-five rupees. I got them eventually for five.

But of all the stories of imposture of this description, none excels the following, which was told me by my naval friend mentioned above. Being on his way home from China, the ship put in at one of the Ceylon ports, and the usual crowd of hucksters invaded the ship. My friend had gone on shore, and only returned on board about half an hour before the time fixed for sailing. Coming out on deck, he was accosted by a be-turbaned, venerable old gentleman, who said he had some valuable stones for sale, if my friend would only look at them. He opened his case, and presented for inspection a small number of rubies and emeralds of various sizes, a fine collection of stones unset—the usual condition in which they are offered for sale in Ceylon—and said that the price was thirty pounds, apparently about their actual value out there. This was a large sum to my friend; so, after admiring the stones for some time, he said he was afraid he could not spend so much money. After considerable hesitation, and declaring that he should not make a penny by the transaction, the dealer lowered his price to twenty-nine pounds. My friend still considered, and was on the point of offering twenty-five pounds, as the stones would then have been a really good bargain, when the trader went down to twenty-eight pounds. My friend waited, and eventually twenty pounds was reached. A slight suspicion dawned over my friend's mind, and on the chance, he looked straight into the man's face and said: "I will give you a shilling." "Very good, sir," said the man, pocketing his shilling, handed in his "precious stones," and was over the side just in time before the ship got under weigh. The precious stones were mere glass.

Career of a Reprobate Son.

In Bardstown, Ky., Tom Thurman distinguished himself several months ago by nearly braining a negro on the streets with a club, for which he was jailed. While in jail he nearly killed a negro prisoner with a bit of window sash. The lower courts refused bail, but the upper courts let him out. On Saturday, he filled up with whiskey and started out to find a victim. He succeeded in picking a quarrel with George Purdy, a negro, whom he shot three times. Purdy lies at the point of death and Thurman is again a prisoner. He is the reprobate son of the Rev. R. L. Thurman, who is widely known and greatly esteemed.

Tape Worm or worms are well-known, but the remedy is not always so well understood. Worm Powder will destroy them.

NO HARM IN IT.

No harm can come from using Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam; as a remedy for throat, bronchial and lung complaints it is always reliable and positively safe.

There are 847 female blacksmiths in England, all of whom actually swing heavy hammers and do man's work.

Worms often cause serious illness. The cure is Dr. Low's Worm Syrup. It destroys and expels Worms effectually.

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm Allan, of Acton, declares the Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds, and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

Boston has thirty-seven residents assessed at over $1,000,000 each.

THE BEST YET.

The best blood cleanser known to medical science is Burdock Blood Bitters. It purifies the blood of all fowl humors and gives strength to the weak.

Lumbermen in the Ottawa shanties are greatly impeded by the mild winter.

THE FORCES STRENGTHENED.

The vital forces are strengthened and the entire system renovated and built up by Burdock Blood Bitters. It acts on the bowels, liver, kidneys and blood.

Hickling Grange.

Dec. 30th, 1884.

Hickling Grange No. 361 opened in due form in 4th degree. Full meeting. Minutes of former meeting read and approved. The members then paid in their subscription to the People's Salt Co. Several discussions took place on the working of the Grange, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing term:—Bros. Jonathan Hickling, Master (re-elected 9th time); W. S. Inkster, Overseer; H. Wright, Chap.; F. Whewill, Sec.; W. C. Hopper, Treas.; J. G. Carson, Lecturer; L. Williamson, Steward; W. Moffat, Asst. Steward; J. Inkster, Gate-keeper; Miss A. Inkster, Ceres; Mrs. H. Wright, Pomona; Mrs. Hopper, Flora; Miss E. A. Hickling, Lady Assistant; F. Whewill, Delegate; J. Inkster and H. Wright, Executive Committee; W. C. Hopper and J. Whewill, Auditors.

It is certinally one of the mysteries of life how some girls get married, while others are altogether left out in the cold. Some of the latter are just as nice as anyone could wish, and yet they seem never to get even a chance, while many of their more fortunate sisters have really nothing to recommend them, at least nothing that an unprejudiced on-looker can see. They are not pretty. They are not useful. They are not particularly good housekepers. They are not intellectual., indeed they have not two ideas in their silly heads to keep one another company. They may be idle, frivolous, vain, foolish, empty-headed, or even vicious girls, and yet they win the goal of every woman's desire—a house of their own and a husband, while other women with ten times more beauty, a hundred times more wit and intelligence, and a thousand times more genuine goodness and loveliness of character, are neglected. —Truth.

GOOD FOR ALL.

For all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and bowels take Burdock Blood Bitters. It is purely vegetable, can do no harm, and is always beneficial.

A young man blackened his moustache with a lead comb, and then took his girl out for a moonlight stroll. When the fair one appeared in the bright light of the family circle, a couple of hours later her face looked like a railroad map.

SALT RHEUM.

Salt Rheum, Pimples or Blotches can be thoroughly removed by a proper application of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate to the part, and a few doses of McGregor's Speedy Cure for impure blood. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared by McGregor & Parke. Sold at 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 5

Poetry.

To Manitoba and Return.

(By Special Request.)

Let all who read this rhyme of ours
Remember, if they can,
That the composers of the same
Were once but common men.

Not satisfied with what we read,
We did, for knowledge, go;
We took our tickets for the West
And left Ontario.

We landed in the great North-West,
And lo! what struck our view,
No other such a place as this
Beneath the arch of blue.

You may stand upon a car-top,
If you chose to use your glass;
For miles on miles you nothing see
Except the prarie grass.

Brandon, of which you all have read,
Is a very pretty town;
It is situated on a hill,
With hundreds camped around.

You may ride along the railway
And here and there you see Little cities starting up
All in their infancy.

From Brandon to the Portage
The C. P. R. we took;
To tell you all about this place
Would almost fill a book.

This town is partly built of brick,
But principally of frame;
There's lots of towns of thrice the age
That it would put to shame.

From thence we came to Winnipeg,
Chief city in the West,
For in the whole Dominion
She is reconed the third best.

The population of this place
Is forty thousand strong,
And the main street of this city
Is fully four miles long.

The streets are wide, the sewers deep,
The sidewalks good and strong,
The place is always crowded so
'Tis hard to get along.

From Winnipeg to Duluth we came Without an angry word,
And when we landed in this town
We went to hunt our board.

We stepped into Bay City House,
The nobbiest house in town,
And when they shewed us to our room
We laid our satchels down.

For two we ordered breakfast then,
And for it we did go;
If you had seen the beefsteak fly
And bread and butter too.

The waiter was an Irish girl,
And pretty green at that,
She scarce could walk across the room
Because she was so fat.

For twenty minutes we did eat
And never said a word,
And when we thought we had enough
We asked the price of board.

Our stomachs full, our minds at ease
New sights we struck for then;
We climbed the highest rock we found
And viewed the regent maine.

Duluth is built upon a hill
Which slopes down to the bay,
And you can stand upon that rock
And the whole town survey.

Down from the rock we did descend
To learn the boat's delay;
The agent told us it would land
About the break of day.

And now we're landed on the boat,
Our names are taken down;
This gallant vessel bears the name,
The City of Owen Sound.

A thousand miles there lies before
Of water cold and clear;
With Captain McNabb upon her
The crew has naught to fear.

A pleasant voyage we have had
O'er all those waters deep,
Although sometimes it tossed us so
We did not care to sleep.

The officers of this boat
Are genial, kind and true;
To make it pleasant for the folk
They did all they could do.

At Collingwood we left the boat
And railed it to Duntroon,
And then in Peter Munshaw's bus
We soon arrived at home.

—Vandeleur.

Adjourned Assizes.

From the Times.

The following is the conclusion of the business transacted at the adjourned Assizes last week:—

BANK OF COMMERCE vs. BELL.—This was an action on two promissory notes, purporting to be made by the defendant and discounted at the bank, but which he denied signing. The jury found a verdict for plaintiff on one of the notes, but for defendant on the other. J. Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff. H. P. O'Connor for defendant.

QUINN vs. MIDDLETON.—The plaintiff, a farmer in Holland, sued the defendant, a mill owner, for flooding part of his property by backing the water on it. The defendant denied the flooding, and claimed that the place was in the same state as it had been in for 20 years. Verdict for defendant. Jno. Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff. Jas. Masson for defendant.

SMITH vs. BROWN.—Action for railway ties—undefended. Verdict for $681.60. Wm. Barrett for plaintiff.

SMITH vs. FOSTER.—Defendant last year purchased the schooner Regina from plaintiff, paying half the price. She was lost in the fall, and Foster declined to pay the balance of purchase money ($600) on the ground that when he agreed to buy the vessel it was represented as rating B 1, but afterward turned out to have no rating at all. Plaintiff claimed that previous to the completion of the sale, he told Foster that she was not rated B 1, and he purchased knowing that. The present suit was brought to recover the $600 and interest. Judgment for plaintiff. Wm. Barrett for plaintiff. Jas. Masson for defendant.

JENKINS vs. TOWNSEND.—This was the celebrated case between the Durham editors, and was decidedly the spiciest case disposed of by the Court. They had been engaged in "journalistic pleasantries" for a couple of years past, till last spring the Review came our with an "open letter," addressed to Arthur Henry Norton Jenkins, editor of the Chronicle, which almost exhausted the vocabulary in abusing him; whereupon Jenkins sued Townsend of the Review for libel. When the case came on, the defendant did not attempt to justify his article, but put in a counter claim against Jenkins for libelling him in the Chronicle. No witness were called, but choice extracts were read by the opposing council from the two papers, to the "edification" of the Court, and the jury were asked to decide which had blackguarded the other most. Jenkins came out triumphant from the ordeal, for the jury gave a verdict of $50 in his favor, while it dismissed the counter claim against him. Jas. Masson for plaintiff. H. P. O'Connor for defendant.

DOUGLASS vs. FARLEY.—Action of ejectment—undefended. Verdict for plaintiff. S. Platt for plaintiff.

TUCKER vs. BAKER.—This was an action in which Mr. Tucker claimed compensation for damage to the wall of his building on Poulett Street by water thrown on it by defendant's building. The defendant claimed that plaintiff's wall was a few inches on his property, and put in a counter claim for underminding his foundation when plaintiff built. Judgment reserved. Jno. Creasor, Q. C., and S. Platt for plaintiff. Frost & Frost for defendant.

Miscellaneous Rules of Etiquette.

Scolding and snarling are exceedingly ill-bred.

Be prompt and punctual in all your engagements.

Never read the letters of other people unless invited to do so.

Never turn the misfortunes of others into ridicule.

Never leave home with unkind words on your lips.

Never write your own remarks in a borrowed book.

Never lend a borrowed book, unless special permission has been given.

A lady should never speak of a gentleman by his surname without a prefix.

Beware of answering "Personals." What seems sport may turn out very disastrously.

It is impolite to speak of persons, with whom you are but slightly acquainted, by their first name.

Never look over the shoulder of another person who is reading or writing.

When in company, do not try to attract the attention of some one by signals, a cough, a poke, or a nudge.

Do not examine the cards in a card-receiver, where you are calling.

Spitting, when in company, is as vulgar as it is disgusting.

Loud talking and laughing, by ladies, is at all times unbecoming.

It is impolite to assume a longing attitude in company

Gentlemen should never allude to conquest over the other sex.

The man who will insult a social inferior is nothing better than a boor.

Keep your own performances, or achievements, in the background.

To answer a civil question rudely is a gross breach of etiquette.

Gentlemen should never stand on the hearth-rug, with their backs to the fire at home or abroad.

The man who makes remarks in disparagement of a woman is deserving a rebuke.

Too great familiarity towards a new acquaintance is in bad taste.

To swing the foot, or tap monotonously with the feet, or to drum with the fingers on the table or a window, are all breaches of decorum.

It is extremely rude, and a most dangerous experiment, to recommend remedies to a peoson who is under the care of a physician.

An invalid, an elderly person, or a lady, must be given the most comfortable chair in the room, and must be allowed to select the light and temperature.

It is a breach of good manners, and a violation of common sense, to laugh at your own wit.

Gentlemen and ladies will never be guilty of personalities in conversation.

No gentleman will assume to dictate to a lady, as to the gentlemen who are permitted to attend her.

Gentlemen and ladies of true culture will be careful of their deportment in all places, and at all times.

Their urbanity will appear at home, as uniformly as among strangers.

Quiet, unassuming behaviour is indicative of cultivation.

A loud, boisterous manner belongs to the rustic boor.

There is no surer sign of ill-breeding than rudeness towards dependents.

It is not an essential principle of democracy to be rude and dirty.

In this country, the means of education and culture are open to all. Hence, Canadians should be exceptionally intelligent and polite.

The aristocracy of older countries have no monopoly of culture.

Well-bred persons avoid being conspicuous, either in dress or behaviour.

The use of slang words and phrases should never be indulged, either to public or private.

Fussy people are social nuisances.

The essence of true politeness consists in the habitual observance of the golden rule. Do to others, as you would have them do to you.

Seek to make others comfortable and happy, and you will rarely be deemed impolite.

WORMS often cause serious illness. The cure is Dr. Low's Worm Syrup. It destroys and expels Worms effectually.

MIRIAM.

An hour later, very beautiful in her black lace dress, against which her arms and neck showed with dazzling fairness, Miriam again entered the drawing-room, fully illuminated now. She paused a moment involuntarily by the door when she found that the room had already an occupant. Mr. Keene stood on the hearth-rug, his back to the fire. He looked towards her eagerly as she hesitated. It was but for a moment; then she came slowly but steadily forward—a tall and graceful figure in her sombre trailing draperies.

"I thought that you would be the first dressed," he said abruptly, "as you were the first to leave. I wished to say a word to you; I want to tell you that you need not be alarmed to see me here. I shall not, I hope, disturb you in any way, and I shall be leaving for ever in a day or two."

"I am glad," she replied, and drew a long breath of relief. "It is certain that either you or I must leave, and just now, as the Archers are away, I really have no place to which I could go."

"Believe me," he said, "it will not be necessary."

There was a pause then. Miriam was looking less self-possessed than he remembered her to have done before, her eyes wandering to the door, longing for some one to come in, or meditating flight. He pulled a low chair forward for her, and, after a scarcely perceptible hesitation, she accepted it, and sat down. Encouraged by this complacency, he reached a hand-screen from the mantelpiece, and, putting it into her hand, stood silently contemplating his wife in her beauty and her new shyness.

"I was glad," he said presently—"more glad than I can say, to learn that you were here; I could wish you no better friend than my sister. It is a—a consolation to me to know that you are in safe hands."

"I do not stay with you long," she answered hurriedly. "She is kindness itself to me; but I feel all the more that I have no right—that we are—you and I—deceiving her."

"Then let me tell her?" he cried, eagerly turning upon her.

"Not for a thousand worlds! If there were no other reason against it, I could not bear from her the suspicion, the distrust of me, which such a revelation must cause."

"Why need she distrust you?"

"Why should she in one moment unbelieve all that she has been taught? Besides, the same objection which induced her to call your wife 'unworthy' still remains."

"I could make her see things in any light in which I choose to put them," he said; "but I will do nothing you do not wish. I—I am afraid my coming annoys you; but the temptation just to run down and see you all together for once was too strong for me, and I came."

There was silence again, Miriam looking steadily over the top of her feather-screen into the fire; Mr Keene looked down intently at her. The gloves she had not yet put on lay in her lap; he glanced at the long slim hand adorned with its significant plain gold ring. That ring had more power to stir his blood than any other talisman the world held. Something compelled him, almost against his will, to speak of it now, and in spite of himself there was a tremor in his voice as he said—

"You wear my ring?"

"My wedding ring?"—looking down at it calmly. "I wear it of course; one can't go forth to the world as a married woman without a wedding-ring."

"I remember," he went on, half timidly, "that it was loose for your finger then. We fitted it on the evening before—before the day it slipped off your finger; have you forgotten? It seems to fit you now."

Miriam laid down the screen, and calmly commenced to pull a long glove over that white left hand—over that obnoxious ring.

"It is not loose now," she returned indifferently; "I have grown to that ring—grown in every way. I was a child, with a child's hand, and a child's heart. I am a woman now."

With this she rose from her chair, and he watched her graceful figure cross the long drawing room, and disappear through the door.

Later in the evening, standing under a group of palms in the dancing-room, his sister by his side, Kingston said a word or two which, in fact, he had come to Eastwick to say. They came in easily enough for Lady Hicks was calling attention to the beauty and grace of her new protege, at this moment floating round the room in the arms of the only son of the house, to the slow and languorous movement of a waltz.

"She is beautiful," he acquiesced, "and young to be so unprotected. It is good of you, Agatha, to look after her. Your friend Mrs. Archer seems a pleasant little thing, but a more experienced woman—a woman of your age and position is a better guardian for such a girl as that."

"I dare say it's an advantage for her to be here." Lady Hicks answered lightly; "but it is only a temporary arrangement of course, Kingston, until the Archer's return."

He shook his head, looking kindly at his sister.

"I know you so well," he said; "you are not the woman to turn away from one whom you have once befriended. A friend for once with you, is a friend for always, Agatha; it should be so with all noble true-minded women. I shall feel sure that your—your beautiful visitor has a champion and a protector now for life."

Lady Hicks smiled up at her brother, well-pleased, accepting with much complacency her place among the women, noble and true, of whom he spoke, and saying to herself, with a tender warmth at her heart, that she had always meant to cleave to Mrs. King for the rest of her natural life.

CHAPTER IV.

The weekly evening which Lady Hicks devoted to her "young men's coffee and reading room" fell on that Immediately following the dance. With this nothing was allowed to interfere.

"We will leave early," she had promised, when the young people pleaded fatigue and disinclination: "but we must not disappoint my young men. They know that Rob is home and will be so looking forward to hearing him sing; he does comic songs so well,' she explained turning to her brother.

Lady Hicks was an autocrat in her gentle way, and all around her, with more or less graciousness, succumbed, as was inevitable, to her decree. It was not until the last minute, until the gentlemen of the party had departed on foot, until the carriage to convey the ladies had drawn up at the door, that Mrs. King quietly announced her intention of staying behind. Her head was bad—and looking at her it was seen how pale and wearied was her aspect—she longed for quiet, dreaded the heated atmosphere of the schoolroom, the smell of the lamps, the songs even! No, Ella should not stay at home with her, even to her she could not talk; she would rest and try to sleep off her stupid headache. And so in a few minutes, Miriam, coming back to the empty drawing-room, sighed a long sigh of relief at finding herself once more alone!

Her head really ached; she had exaggerated nothing—she was over-tired, over excited. She sank back on the wide luxurious couch which had been drawn up to the fire that afternoon for the benefit of Ella's tired little frame, and, resting her head on the soft, cool cushions, clasped her hands before her eyes to shut out the light of the lamps. Lying so in the grateful silence and stillness, she discoursed to her own heart of the trouble which afflicted her. How weary and sick at heart she felt to-night, disgusted with her life, with her fate, with herself! Oh, to be out of it all, to have done with everything—to be at rest! Why did not the Archers come, that she might get away—away from people who trusted her, and whom she was deceiving, away from haunting, haggard eyes that followed her every movement with a yearning and a hopelessness in their expression that shook her heart and chilled her blood? Oh, for an escape from them—from this house—anywhere, anywhere—to the Archers or to her grave! Yes, best to have an ending to such a life as hers—a life all broken, unblessed unfinished, however long dragged out. She drew a wretched picture of her early death—herself unmourned, unmissed; she wanted to cry at her dismal thoughts—she thought that she would feel better if she could find relief in tears; but her heart was too restless, and her eyes burnt unrefreshed in her heavy aching head. She groaned wearily, tossing her head on the soft cushions, seeking vainly for the peace and rest which even in solitude would not come. It would be better when he was gone, she told herself presently; only two days more and he would be gone. If only she could be ill, or could feign to be ill for the rest of that time, it might help her—help him; and, while she shuddered at this last thought, the door opened, and he—her husband—was in the room.

She started at sight of him into a sitting posture, mechanically putting her hands to her head to smooth down her dishevelled hair.

"You have come back," she said in a voice expressive of embarrassment, of dismay, of anything but pleasure.

"Yes I have come back." His tone was calmly defiant.

He went and stood on the hearth-rug looking down at her in silence for a while. He looked at her pale face at her heavy lidded eyes, all the soft plentiful hair, disarranged from its usual neatness, curling waywardly about brow and neck, at the knot of bruised red geraniums, which at dinner he had noticed fresh and vivid in the bosom of her black dress. He looked at all this steadily for a minute without speaking, and then he sat down and turned his gaze from her.

"Is your head better?" he asked presently, his face turned to the fire, his hands clasped tightly about his knee.

"It is no better," she answered, in a tone so depressed and hopeless that involuntarily he turned and looked quickly at her.

"You are over-tired," he said. "Last evening was too much for you; you must not attempt that kind of thing again."

"That dance or two?"—indifferently. "That would not tire me in an ordinary way; I am quite—quite strong."

"Nevertheless, I want you to promise me to avoid that species of excitement for the future. Will you do this?"

"How do you mean? That I am not to dance any more or what?"

"Yes," he answered quietly; "that is what I should like you to promise me."

She gave a little bitter laugh.

"As far as my pleasure in the dancing goes I would give it up gladly. It is nothing to me; I dance because it saves remark, because it is less trouble to accept than to decline; but why you should demand or should expect me to make such a promise to you, I do not divine. It is too ludicrous."

"You say that it would not be a great sacrifice—it is to me only one I ask of you—a small thing surely for a woman to do for the man who is her husband!"

"Now spare me that," Miriam cried brusquely, putting out her hands as if to ward off the words—"spare me any cant about that—that fiction! There are things that I suppose I should do for you for humanity's sake—I would warn you of danger, I would shield you from pain or death, I would perform towards you any common act of charity, because after all, you are a man like other men, and it would be my duty. But not one of those deeds of mercy would I do for you, not a finger would I lift to save you, because of your being able to mock me with the name of 'husband.' They would be for humanity's sake alone."

"Then," he said humbly, "for humanity's sake, grant me this that I have asked."

"I do not understand you. What is it that you mean?"

"I mean that if you are forbidden to me, if I am never to be near you, no other man shall touch you—shall put his arms about you as I saw them do last night. I will not bear it, I will not allow it—do you understand? I forbid it. If you do not give me your word that this shall not occur again I shall refuse to leave Eastwick and you. I do not much care—my life is equally worthless to me wherever I am; I will stay—where is my proper place—with you."

"That would be a useless determination for you to come to," she replied, her face grown very white, but her voice quite steady. "If you were with me every moment of the day you could not control my actions."

"You have said so before, but that remains to be seen. I think you will find that the law gives to a husband some control over the actions of his wife."

"Not to such a husband as you," she said quickly, "not when I had told my tale as I should tell it for all the world to hear. But all this has been discussed between us before—what profit is there to go over the old ground again?"

"And you refuse to promise me this small thing that I ask of you?"

"I shall give you no promise, of course," she answered deliberately. "I do not recognize your right to ask me for one; but I shall not dance again—you may know that much, if it be of any interest to you. Women with light hearts and happy histories may dance—you do not find me more unfit for such a pastime than I find myself." Then she rose from the sofa. "If you will excuse me, I will go now to my room," she said. "I shall be glad to be alone."

He too left his chair and stood before her on the rug.

"You know that I go to-morrow?" he said. "I might stay a few days longer; but I suppose that you want me gone?"

"One of us," she replied quietly, and without looking at him. "I do not wish to drive you from your sister's house; but one of us must go. Do you stay—let it be me."

"I am going. Wait—listen to me for one moment—just one moment. You are, I suppose, so resolved on the course you pursue, you are so strengthened and built up in your determined animosity to me, that nothing I could say might have any effect on you. You could not be brought to reconsider the answer that you gave me when I asked you to forgive and forget and to come to me and be my wife?"

"No," she said, slowly and softly, avoiding his eyes. "You know quite well that it is impossible."

"The knowledge that I love you—madly, desperately—that I suffer horridly would not move you?"

She lifted her eyes with a startled, almost horrified look to his face, and then turned abruptly as if to leave him; but he caught her by the hand—that left hand of hers that bore his ring. It struggled for a moment in his grasp and then lay still.

"Are you so hard that that makes no difference to you?" he asked, bending over her, his voice grown low and tender.

She struggled hard for composure.

"It is nothing to me—nothing!" she answered. You chose to say that you loved me before, I remember. Heaven keep me from such love, I say."

"And I did love you—did I not love you—the beautiful child I meant to train into a perfect wife; but I loved a thousand times more the beautiful woman who is my wife. Miriam"—trying to draw her to him—"have pity on me. I love you—I love you—do not in mercy send me away! It is worse than death to me to leave you. Have pity."

"Had you pity?" she asked bitterly.

"But you are better than I. I was a headstrong, passionate, jealous fool. You are a woman, tender and loving to all else but me. Does not your religion teach you to forgive? Miriam, say I sinned, say I deserve every torture you have made me suffer, that every pang man or fiend can devise is only my due punishment; but do you—you, in your goodness and purity, and sweetness, forgive me, for the sake of Heaven?"

He was holding her hand in a grip that hurt her, his voice was thick with passionate emotion, his eyes burning into hers glowed with the light of despairing love. Miriam was silent for a moment; but when she spoke her voice was as cold and calm as ever."

"I will try," she said; "I ought to forgive you, of course. There is no wrong so great that it should not find forgiveness. I will do my best. I did not deem it possible that I could forgive you, but I will try."

"And then—when I am forgiven I may come to you? Let me look forward to that at some time however distant. You will try to forgive me, and you will let me teach you to love me."

"Never!" she said proudly, and here she lifted her head and looked him unflinchingly in the face. "Never! You taught me so thoroughly well to hate you, I can never unlearn the lesson. Can you not understand that you are an embodiment to me of all that is cowardly and unworthy? I should despise myself if I thought it possible I should cease to despise you. You believe this? I have said it this once for ever. Now—you are hurting my hand. Will you please to loose it and to let me go?"

He slackened his grasp, looking down in silence at the shapely hand he still held, its whiteness marred with marks of red where his fingers had bruised it in their clutch. He seemed to consider it gravely for a moment, passing his thumb over the disfiguring marks, till with a swift and unexpected motion he bent his head and kissed it fiercely. Miriam wrenched her hand away.

"How dare you!" she cried, trembling, and in hot anger. "It is like you—it is like you;" and again she turned, with angrily heaving heart to leave him.

Before she could cross the room he was at her side.

"Wait," he cried hoarsely. "Just one moment more. I go to-morrow. That is, probably, the last word that I say to you alone, or ever. You will at least bid me good-bye?"

"Good-bye," she said, in a carefully emotionless tone, her head erect.

He put himself in front of her, effectually barring her exit.

"That man of whom you told me," he said, "I have thought a good deal about him lately. You—you cared for him?"

"You have no possible right to ask me," she returned proudly, "and I decline to answer."

"At least I know that he loved you. When he parted from you, I suppose, he would put his arm about you and kiss you?"

"Never, never!" she cried indignantly. "To whom do you think you are speaking; how dare you say such a thing to me?"

"Neither he nor any other man since the day you married me? I will believe you if you will say it."

"Your question is an insult," she answered hotly. "For whom do you take me? Am I a woman, do you think, such as that?"

He stood a moment looking down into the angry gray eyes that met his unflinchingly, in the next he had thrown his arms about her, drawn her to his heart and rained down passionate kisses on her pale and startled face. Then "Good-bye," he whispered breathlessly straining her to him—"good-bye, my love—my life!"

"Oh, you are cruel—let me go!" she cried, struggling desperately to release herself.

"Swear to me that I am the only man who has dared to hold you so."

"Yes—yes—oh, yes!"

"Whoever shall dare?"

"I swear. Let me go."

She was turning faint in his clasp. Her head, thrown well back from him, showed the gray eyes no longer proud and defiant; black lashes swept the white cold cheeks, a look of exhaustion was on the beautiful face.

"Good-bye," once again he whispered hoarsely, and, stooping, kissed again each white drooping lid, then slowly opened his arms, and she, escaping, unsteadily fled from the room.

A FAMOUS NATURALIST.

The Versatility of Mr. Seth Green and His Wonderful Garden.

The fame of Seth Green as a master of the rod and gun, and as an enthusiastic, practical pisciculturist, is world-wide. He is a keen observer of nature in all her moods, but is especially noted for his intimate acquaintance with fishes and birds, and their habits, and the profound knowledge he possesses of the vegetable and animal life upon which they feed. Mr. Green is gifted with remarkable conversational powers, is clear and luminous in statement, and no one can listen to him without rare entertainment and instruction. He is untiring in his researches after knowledge, and has a marvelous aptitude for combining and controlling the minor and insignificant forces of nature, so that they will work together for the advantage of man. His labors extend far beyond the mere cultivation of fish. Among his melon vines Mr. Green has laid boards. Lifting up these boards multitudes of toads were found concealed there by day. At night they come out and feed upon the insects that infest the melon vines. It was a simple device, and one that succeeded admirably. The toads were harnessed to his scheme of gardening, and worked faithfully and well. There is a hint in this to other growers of melons. Mr. Green is a born experimenter, and is not slow to get at the bottom facts in the matters that attract his attention. He is not disposed to adopt the speculations or conclusions of others, except so far as they are based upon proven conditions. He has reduced to practical use and given to the world the results of long years of study and observation, and the world is better thereby. He is in the full vigor of industrious life, and will yet accomplish much more in the field of his special pursuits.—[American Agriculturist.

Dutch Milk for London.

The farmers of Holland are now maturing a plan for supplying London with milk. Four steamers are to be built, each of 720 tons, for the purpose of carrying daily 100,000 litres of free' Dutch milk from Amsterdam to Harwich, whence it will be transported in refrigerator cars to its destination. The enterprise will be incorporated as the "Society Anonyme," with a capital of 1,700,000 guilders. Its promoters urge that if only 1,000,000 litres of milk shall be sold each day in London at 2½ pence per litre, there would be a revenue of 412,500 guilders per annum, or 24 per cent upon the capital. It is solemnly declared that the milk would always be dispatched from Holland without mixture of water, and that if it should be diluted afterwards the blame would rest solely upon the London dealers.

The Fighting Ships of the Future.

The London Post protests strongly against building any more iron-clads. It enumerates the disadvantages entailed on the British navy by the application of armor-plates to the sides or batteries of line-of-battle (or fighting) ships as follows: 1. The expense of iron or steel armor adequate to resist the ever-increasing power of artillery is simply monstrous. 2. All fire from shipboard is known to be more or less inaccurate, and the chances of a ship being struck in a vital part are very small indeed. 3. But if the armor-plating of a ship's battery or turret be struck, and if it be not wholly impervious to the shell striking it, the effect of the blow is enhanced, and the shield actually becomes an instrument for rendering the blow more deadly to the gunners behind it. 4. A ship has a certain tonnage displacement, according to which her weights have to be arranged. Hence, every ounce of armor weight decreases the gun weight or coal weight that she can carry. 5. Iron-clad fighting ships are necessarily of such a prodigious size that to possess a numerous navy and to conduct a great naval war on the principles that must be followed if we are to maintain a dominant position on the seas—that is, as a war of aggression—is a financial impossibility. 6. It is almost certain that the bulk of the educated naval opinion of the present day favors the view that the skillful use of the ram will be the guiding object in future naval engagements. Now, a modern iron-clad is about as handy an instrument for use in ramming manoeuvres as—well, let us say an old cow at a pump. 7. Next to the ram the torpedo, or torpedo vessel, is probably the most efficient naval-fighting weapon. But an enormous iron-clad is singularly open to attacks from torpedoes, and its size gives it no particular advantage in directing such attacks. 8. The great size, draught, and cost of iron-clads inevitably tend to reduce the feeling which should be uppermost in any captain's mind, that he "can go anywhere and do anything" with his ship. In fact, it renders them cautious—a deadly quality for naval minds. What, then, should we substitute for these gigantic armored floating machines? To us it appears that the type of first class fighting ship which most nearly meets the requirements of the day is as follows. An unarmored corvette without sails, of two thousand to four thousand tons displacement, possessing good sea qualities, an armament of maximum weight and power, an underwater steel protecting deck, great capacity of coal stowage, handiness, facilities for ramming and torpedoing, and as much speed as can be given her. Such vessels would cost comparatively small sums, and we could maintain many squadrons of them.

How Women Differ from Men.

At least three men on the average jury are bound to disagree with the rest just to show that they've got minds of their own; but their is no disagreement among the women as to the merits of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." They are all unanimous in pronouncing the best remedy in the world for all those chronic diseases, weaknesses and complaints peculiar to their sex. It transforms the pale, haggard, dispirited woman into one of sparkling health, and the ringing laugh again "reigns supreme" in the happy household.

Bulwer was right; there's no such word as fail. It is mollified into assignment.

Human Calves.

An exchange says:—"Nine-tenths of the unhappy marriages result from human calves being allowed to run at large in society pastures." Nine-tenths of the chronic or lingering diseases of to-day originate in impure blood, liver complaint or biliousness, resulting in scrofula consumption (which is but scrofula of the lungs), sores ulcers, skin diseases and kindred affections. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all these. Of Druggists.

By looking at the quotations of the Virginia tobacco markets it will be found that the highest price paid for 'fillers'—which is the tobacco which forms the body of the plug—very closely corresponds with the invoiced price of tobacco leaf imported into Ontario. As over four-fifths of all the leaf imported into the Province is for "Myrtle Navy" stock, this fact is official proof of the claim that the "Myrtle Navy" is made of the finest Virginia leaf.

HORSES;

Their Feed and Their Feet.

BY CHAS. E. PAGE.

In undertaking the congenial task of writing a short treatise on the horse, I have not in mind the consideration of all of his various ailments—the means, whether by drugging or what not, of "curing" him of his "diseases"—but rather having him, as we do at the start, in health, I would endeavor to show how we may prevent disease. In a long experience, dating from early boyhood when I thought, as most persons think to day, that the principal, if not the only, thing is to feed high and often, I find that with horses as with men, more of them decline, become "seedy," emaciated, and sorry sights to behold, from overfeeding, or, what is nearly the same thing, underworking, or from a combination of the two causes, than from any lack of feed or care, as the term "care" is commonly interpreted.

Most persons love a horse, and I have very seldom found an owner who would not go hungry rather than have his horse go without food. He will say, "I will feed my horse before I will myself," and, in practice, too, will do it. To be sure, there is seldom any conflict between the two needs: we are all able to eat too much and too often, and incline to serve animals in the same manner. These things we do, whatever else is sacrificed or neglected. Even "hard cases," men who have not the means to purchase a good animal—that is, a valuable one—and who consequently are seen driving rawny-boned, consumptive creatures, and win the name of starving them—even these, as I have found upon diligent inquiry, often take scrupulous care to feed three times a day, and to give their poor dyspeptic horses more food than they can possibly digest. They do this, all the more because appearances are against them, and if it does not come to their ears, they feel sure that their neighbors and all who pass or meet them on the road, are saying something about "post-meat."

If some gentlemen's driving horses had more of this sort of diet—outdoor air and freedom from surfeit—they would not so soon fall into the hands of "five dollar jockeys." How often our eyes are pained at the sight of what was once a horse to be proud of, and whose owner really delighted in him, dragging himself along, and looking as if it would be a mercy to end his life. His old owner speaks of the case sorrowfully, and says, "When I owned 'Jim' he never looked like that; he got all he could eat, and I never overworked him." He doesn't add the further fact that under his treatment the horse began to decline, and at an age, too, when he should have been in his prime, and that he put him away in consequence! Although the horse has many advantages over his owner, so far as he has less exciting causes of disease—still, as we all know, his disorders are of about the same nature, so far as they go. He has fewer diseases in number and frequency than we find in the human family; and this comparative exemption from disease bears a pretty close relation to the plainness of his diet.

In my recent work entitled "Natural Cure of Consumption," in which I discuss the advantages of wheat meal, unbolted and unsifted, over fine flour or any other modification of it, in the treatment or prevention of dyspepsia—a disorder which is at the root of almost all the internal diseases of man and beast—I make use of the following language: "That most noble of all animals next to man,—and in some aspects far superior to him,—the horse, in his finest and most delicate state, finds a perfect food in the whole grain, chewing it himself. I may, in the minds of some, be weakening my argument by comparing the digestive apparatus of man with that of the horse, but I am desirous of impressing upon the minds of my readers the well known but imperfectly considered fact, that our horse fanciers,—who dote on their ten-thousand-dollar animals, and would feed them on the finest of flour, would place before them the most costily and complicated cooked dishes if it were desirable, or even not pernicious in a healthy point of view,—really keep their dearest pets on bread and water: and that, because of this, and the absence of all the hot, stimulating articles, solid or fluid, indulged in by their owners, then regular and moderate diet of uncooked food, and their superior hygiene in certain essential matters, our horses are saved, in great measure, from becoming fat, sick, mean, wheezy, or dyspeptic, like their masters and mistresses—men, women, and children."

And yet horses do, after all, fall prey to all these degraded conditions. In spite of the naturalness and wholesomeness of their diet, as to variety and quailty, and in face of the most solicitous and painstaking care, we too often see them the subject of tedious and painful disorders, and of course there is a reason for it.

NON-VENTILATION.

One of the principal causes of disease among horses as among human beings is foul air. In large stables this cause operates effectually, for seldom is there any good arrangement for ventilating, least of all, any efficient means for maintaining even an approximately pure atmosphere. On the contrary, every precaution is taken, in most stables, to prevent the entrance of fresh air, without which the viciated air must remain unchanged, loaded, as it is, with the foul emanations from the urine soaked floors and from the lungs and bodies of the animals imprisoned therein. Here, as nowhere else, is illustrated that most stupid of all economies, viz.: the "saving of foul air for the sake of its warmth." This is largely due to the overestimate of the necessity of keeping the temperature of the stable at a high point. Unquestionably horses would eat more, would need more food, if the stable were kept supplied with fresh air, if, in consequence, the temperature should average several degrees colder; but he is a mean man who would cheat his horses out of the "breath of life" for the sake of a little saving in hay and grain. Living themselves in air-tight apartments, and, often enough, innocent of all knowledge of the necessity for a constant changing of the air in their own homes, stable keepers are, of course, guiltless of all blame in the matter referred to. They know that the warmer the animals are kept, by means of close stables and blankets, the less food they require, and, unaware of the pernicious influence exerted upon the general health of the animals, this settles the question. With good ventilation, however much the temperature of the air might be lowered, the horses would more than compensate for the extra feed, in improved digestion, vigor, and general health.

Horse Bobbing.

Henry Bergh, of New York, president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has published a letter strongly condemning the cruel fashion of bobbing horses' tails. He writes:

The cruel fashion of "bobbing" horses' tails is being revived. It was a fashionable craze about a generation ago, and was not entirely stopped until our society succeeded in getting stringent laws enacted against cruelty to animals.

The "bobbing" is mainly done by the wealthy people of course. They think that it makes their horses look more stylish, and to satisfy this caprice, God's noblest animal is made to suffer the most barbarous cruelty that devilish ingenuity can devise. Of late the officers of this society have noticed a great many horses with "bobbed" tails, and they were nearly all of them in fashionable turnouts.

The men who perform these cruel acts are blacksmiths or horse doctors. The animal is taken into a blacksmith shop or out of the way place late at night or early in the morning. While one or two men stand guard outside, the doors are barred and the horse is securely tied by the legs so as to prevent kicking. Its tail is then tied to the loft or ceeling and a space of about an inch is shaved at a distance of about seven inches from the horse's body. A knife is placed on this spot by the so-called veterinary surgeon, and another man strikes the knife two or three blows with a mallet, driving it through the flesh and the bone until the tail is severed.

The suffering of the horse is excruciating, its groans almost suggesting human agony. An iron, heated to white heat, is passed over the severed end so as to stop the future flow of blood, and an iron ring, red hot, is used to cauterize the flesh to the extent of half an inch from the extremity of the horse's tail. This is done to prevent the flesh from growing over the end of the tail, for the cauterized bone is crisp and hard and might disease the flesh.

Disease and death often follow this cruel treatment, because the men who perpetrate it are quack veterinary surgeons and blacksmiths, who are as ignorant of the anatomy of a horse as they are cruel. These men work very secretly, and, though we have broken up several places where they practised their cruelty, we were unable to catch the fiends at work.

Superfluous Girls.

Notice was given a few weeks ago of twenty vacancies in the London post-office, says "The London Globe," that were to be filled with women, and women desiring the places were summoned to undergo a competitive examination in arithmetic, handwriting, and dictation. The result was that as many as fourteen hundred women presented themselves for the ordeal. A few months earlier five hundred girls, of ages ranging from 18 to 20, underwent a similar examination for a similar number of vacancies.

Here we have a total of nineteen hundred women on one hand, and not above forty places on the other. That is to say, 1,860 of these applicants were superfluous. The matter becomes more complicated the further it is examined, since the girls already employed as clerks necessarily displace an almost equal number of young men.

Now, what is to be done about it? It is one of the social problems that are destined to baffle mankind for all time. Is the superfluous girl, like the poor, to be always with us? To answer in the affirmative is to take issue with one of the greatest philosophers, for he has written that "Nature makes no mistakes." And yet everything that is necessarily superfluous is a bad mistake.

But it is by no means certain that each one of these 1,860 girls who failed to secure positions in the London postoffice were so many superfluities. They were not needed in that particular field of effort. But, were they not needed somewhere?

The chances are that, as the 1,860 disappointed ones walked out of the post-office, tearing their hair and gnashing their teeth, 1,860 citizens of London were engaged in similar painful exercises because of their inability to obtain cooks equal to making bread, or parlor maids equal to dusting without breaking the china that came over with the conqueror, or governesses that understand the fine art of bending the twig without deforming it.

The Largest Room in the World.

The largest room in the world under one roof and unbroken by pillars is at St. Petersburg. It is 620 feet long by 150 in breadth. By daylight it is used for military displays, and a battalion can completely maneuver in it. Twenty thousand wax tapers are required to light it. The roof of the structure is a single arch of iron, and it exhibits remarkable engineering skill in the architect.

Alhama de Granada, recently destroyed by an earthquake, possessed the most romantic situation and the most romantic history of any town in Spain. It stood high upon the verge of a gigantic cleft in the mountains, the result of volcanic action. From its position it was justly regarded by the Moors as the key of their kingdom of Granada, and when captured in 1482 by the forces of Ferdinand and Isabella, the Alhambra was felt to be foredoomed. It was that event which gave origin to the mournful ballad, "Muy Doloroso," translated by Lord Byron, with the sad refrain at the close of each stanza, "Woe is me, Alhama!"

According to an old law of Pennsylvania a hanging cannot be witnessed by more than thirty-seven persons. These include a jury of twelve appointed by the judge of the circuit court, two spiritual advisers, the sheriff, twelve special deputies, three members of the condemned man's family, and seven representatives of the press.

When the ancient tower of Kuk-tatt Abbey fell, in 1779, Whitaker, a few days afterwards, discovered, embedded in the mortar of the fallen fragments, several little smoking pipes, such as were used in the reign of James I. for tobacco, a proof of the fact, which has not been generally recorded, that long prior to the introduction of that plant from America, the practice of inhaling the smoke of some indigenous vegetable prevailed in England.

When both parents have eyes of the same color, eighty-eight per cent. of the children follow their parents in this feature, and of the twelve per cent. born with eyes other than the parental color a part must be attributed to intermittent heredity. More females than males have black or brown eyes in the proportion of forty-nine to to forty-five. With different colored eyes in the two parents fifty-three per cent. of the children follow the fathers in being dark eyed, and sixty per cent. follow their mother in being dark eyed.

In Biblical days the foolish virgins neglected to put oil in their lamps. In our times the foolish virgins put oil on the fire.

Yes, son, we call that kind of a hat a stove-pipe, because it soots our clothes and makes such a draft—on our pockets.—Mercury.

The Joys of Camel-Riding.

A few days ago I had my first ride on a camel, and I thought it would be my last. It was to go to our camp that I got cross-leggged upon an Arab saddle, insecurely fastened by strings, upon the back of a great, lumbering, hump-backed brute. I no sooner attempted to take my place on the saddle, than the camel, which was lying prone, into which position he had been forced, began grunting like an old village pump violently worked. At the same time he turned his prehensile lips aside, grinning like a bull dog, and showing a grinning row of teeth, which he sought to close upon me. I got aboard without accident, and had not long to wait for a rise.

The first movement, as he lifted his forelegs, nearly sent me over backward; the next, as he straightened his hind legs, still more nearly tipped me over his head. I had been warned to hold tight, but it was only the clutch of desperation that saved me. After several lunges and plunges, the brute got fairly on his legs.

The reins consisted of a rope round his neck for steering, and a string fastened to a ring thrust through his nostrils, to pull up his head, and stop him when going too fast. My camel began to move forward, and thereupon I oscillated and see-sawed as if seized with sea-sickness or cramp in the stomach. Involuntary as the movement was, an hour of it, would, I am sure, have made an abject a victim of me as the worst sufferer on a channel passage.

A heartless friend was in front of me on another camel, which he set trotting. Instantly I became as helpless as a child, for my camel disregarded the strain upon his nostrils, and my fervent ejaculations. My profane Arabic vocabulary was too limited to have the slightest effect, I swayed to and fro, and was bumped up and down, until I was almost shaken to pieces. It would have been a positive relief could I have found myself at rest on the ground, but the motion was so incessant I had not time to make up my mind what course to adopt. It ended, as even the experiences of the worst kind must do, and I found myself still on the camel's back.

Not so my humorous friend, who, to my great comfort, performed a double somersault, and did not succeed in landing quite on his feet. I was told that I would become accustomed to camel-riding and might even get to like it. But my faith is not great enough for that.—[London Telegraph.

The Telephone in Russia.

The most remarkable experiment in telephony yet attempted was recently carried into effect in Russia, where a conversation was carried on between St. Petersburg and Bologae, a distance of two thousand four hundred and sixty-five miles. The Blake transmitting and Bell receiving instruments were used, and conversation was kept up notwithstanding a rather high induction. The experiments were carried on during the night, when the telegraph lines were not at work. The Russian engineers of this company are so confident of further success that they hope shortly to be able to converse with ease at the distance of four thousand six hundred and sixty five miles; but to accomplish this astonishing feat, they must combine all the conditions favorable for the transmission of telephonic sounds. If it is found possible to hold audible conversation at such extraordinary distances, it is possible that this fact will be speedily improved upon, and we shall be enabled to converse freely between London and New York, and by-and-by between London and the antipodes.

Simplicity of Political Life in Switzerland.

As an example of simplicity of political life and manners, I found the Mayor of a populous Swiss rural commune, who was also a member of the Cantonal Parliament, and while in office the responsible custodian of the communial maps and registers, cutting his hay at four o'clock in the morning, while his wife and children tossed and spread it; the following Sunday he presided with dignity at the ballot in the national church, on the occasion of a plebiscite on some financial measure which required the assent of the majority of voters in the canton. After dinner, where he showed himself a courteous and agreeable companion, he doffed his Sunday and official clothes, and in his blouse—carrying a heavy load of goods on his back, went up to his mountain farm, 4000 feet above his residence, to milk his ten cows and prepare for making cheese the next morning. The "Peasant Parliaments" of the Swiss Republics are largely composed of such men, whose qualifications to be legislators consist, not in rank, wealth, or book learning, but in their intimate acquaintance with the circumstances and wants of their fellow-citizens, among whom they live as equals. The result, so far as may be judged by the people's contentment with their laws, is satisfactory.—[Macmillan's Magazine.

A Swallow Story Hard to Swallow.

A man engaged near Hurleton lately in filling up an old mining shaft found that thousands of swallows had built their nests and made their homes in the shaft, and they flew out in great numbers as he shoveled. After working a time he went home, but returned the following morning. No sooner had he began his work than out the swallows flew in clouds. Soon he was startled by a cold, slimy, wriggling snake falling on his back. He supposed it came from a bush near by, but on looking up beheld a cloud of birds holding snakes in their claws, which they were trying to let fall on their enemy. He gathered up his pick and shovel and fled from the place.—[Oroville (Cal.) Mercury.

SCIENTIFIC.

At a meeting of the Academy of Sciences, Stockholm, Prof. Lundstrom exhibited a fossil scorpion recently found near Wisby, in the Silurian formation of Gotland, and remarkable as the most ancient of an air-breathing land animal at present discovered.

A parasite known as "Heterodera schachtii" has made its appearance in France, greatly injuring the beet root. To this parasite, M. Aime Girard thinks, is largely due the partial failure of this this year's beetroot crop, which showed a deficit of 20 per cent. in the weight of the the roots, besides a decrease in the yield of saccharine, in some of the northern districts, amounting to 12 or 14 per cent.

If, says M. Scheurer-Kestner, a mixture of two parts calcium sulphate and one part ferric acid is ignited to strong redness all the sulphur of the mixture is expelled. There remains a melted mass, soluble even in weak acids with insoluble ferric oxide. The result is similar with other diatomic metals. The sulphur is given off at first in the state of sulphuric anhydride, but afterward as sulphurous acid and oxygen.

M. Cochery, the French Minister of Postal Telegraphy, has ordered that the recently completed pneumatic system of Paris be employed to convey ordinary letters to the several railway stations after the closing hours of the different post offices. An extra charge of three deniers a letter is required for this additional service. It is expected that the pneumatic tubes will be still further utilized at an early day by the post office.

At a recent meeting of the Chemical and Physical Society, London, there was exhibited a collection of the various salts obtained in the extraction of cobalt and nickel from the manganiferous ores of New-Caledonia. These ores, containing the metals in the form of oxides, are extensively distributed over the island, and are also to be found on the continent of Australia. The amount of nickle and cobalt in various samples ranges from 1 up to 10 per cent.

It is reported that at a recent meeting of the South Wales institute of Engineers Mr. A Steer read an instructive paper on miner's safety lamps. He said that the Davy, Clanny, Mueseler, Marsaut, and various other lamps, when subjected to the apparatus for testing at different velocities, caused explosions in little more than five seconds, but that the Morgan lamp, although placed in every conceivable position in relation to the apparatus, withstood the ordeal perfectly.

The wonder is not that most residences in large cities are unhealthy, but that they are at all habitable. Generally the city house is immediately connected by a pipe of no great dimensions with drains of sewage miles in length and flowing under street after street. The conditions also are such that very frequently poisonous gases find a ready entrance to the kitchen, the bedrooms, and the living rooms. There can be no healthy houses unless the conservancy and drainage systems are placed entirely outside the main walls.

Mr. Russell W. Moore, of the John C. Green School of Science, Princeton, N.J., in a note on certain methods for detecting foreign fats in butter, says: "If a process should ever be devised to render cocoanut oil completely inodorous (and it should be extensively used as an adulterant of butter) it would be seen that the Koettstorfer process would be utterly worthless as a test, and the Hehner of scarcely greater value. Thus entire reliance would have to be placed on the method of Reichert."

Taking all the facts into consideration, it appears clear to Mr. H. C. Sorby that all the bright and beautiful tints of leaves in Autumn are merely the earlier stages of decomposition, and are due to the more or less considerable triumph of chemical forces over the weakened or destroyed vitality of the living plant. He adds that one cannot but feel that this is a very unpoetically way in which to regard the magnificent tints of a fine Autumnal landscape, but it not less true than that the colored clouds of evening mark the departing day.

So very few articles of iron of unquestionable antiquity have been discovered among the remains of ancient Egyptian art, while objects of bronze have been brought to light in abundance, that many have doubted whether iron had been introduced into Egypt before the time of the Ptolemies. But it is very certain that other and neighboring peoples, who never reached so high a stage of civilization as the Egyptians, knew well the manufacture and uses of iron, and it is scarcely possible that the builders of the monumental works of Old Egypt should have neglected so useful a metal. Besides there are chemical reasons why the iron remains are so few and the bronze relics so many. Yet it would seem that the ancient Egyptians had a marked preference for bronze weapons, implements, and ornaments.

Novel Means of Detecting Criminals.

There have been many ordeals through which those suspected of crime have been obliged to pass; among them may be mentioned the Ordeal of the Cross, the Ordeal of the Eucharist, the Ordeal of Cold Water, the Ordeal of Fire, the Ordeal of Touch and the Ordeal of Chewing Rice. This last is still in fashion in many parts of India. The person is obliged to chew rice in the presence of officers of the law. Curious as it may appear, such is the influence of fear on the salivary glands that, if they are actually guilty, there is no secretion of saliva in the mouth, and chewing is impossible. Such culprits generally confess without any further efforts. On the contrary, a consciousness of innocence allows of a proper flow of fluid for softening the rice.

20 THIEVES CAUGHT.

During the past summer Mr. J. Hickling, of Artemesia, lost some $60 worth of poultry, but how they went, or what became of them was a mystery as there was no trace left by which he could discover and capture the rogue. He however, determined to, if possible, disclosed the mystery, and to this end cleaned up his musket, set a steel trap, and carefully placed strychnine where the unwary night chance to dine. The plans were effective, though the scent was anything but pleasant, as before the end of the summer he had captured 19 skunks and owl, the latter measuring four feet nine inches from tip to tip. Mr. Hickling's neighbors also killed a number of skunks, one of which was chased into Mr. Fenwick's cellar.—The dirty thing.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—A large and influential public meeting, at which the agricultural, manufacturing, milling and mercantile interests were fully represented, was held in the Convention Room of the Markdale House, on the evening of the 9th inst., for the purpose of taking steps to secure the extension of the G. T. R. from Durham north-easterly to Meaford via Markdale. A standing committee was appointed to confer with the interested municipalities, and secure, if possible, their active co-operation and assistance in the furthering of the project, and also to communicate with the General Manager of the G. T. R. to ascertain his views in reference thereto. The following compose said committee:—W. J. McFarland, chairman; Wm. Brown, secretary; Alexander Mercer, Geo. Haskett, Jas. Elliott, Edward Rutledge, Angus Plewes, D. J. Shanahan, Solomon Hill, Thomas Kells, with power to add

There is a strong feeling throughout the community, that additional railway facilities are urgently needed to meet the growing requirements of Markdale as an important business centre, possessing unlimited water power in its immediate vicinity, which only awaits the magic touch of capital, directed by skill and energy to develop its hidden wealth. The country lying between Durham and Meaford, with the exception of a few miles, is one of the finest agricultural sections in the Province, and its geographical and topographical features present no serious difficulty to railway construction. By running midway between both branches of the Saugeen, till near the centre of Glenelg, then veering northerly and following the south bank of the Rocky to Markdale, thence northerly through the wealthy townships of Euphrasia and St. Vincent, keeping the valley of the Beaver River to the right; a roadway of easy construction, entirely void of engineering difficulty could be found.

There is no doubt that if the G. T. were extended to Meaford, a large trade would at once spring up between that place and the towns and villages of the interior—the shipment of lumber alone would be no inconsiderable item. Pine lumber in unlimited quantities is wanted in the interior, and the Georgian Bay ports could supply this in abundance, and take in exchange, the products of the dairy and the farm, to supply the lumber shanties,

It is admitted by those who profess to know that at present the branch to Durham does not pay, hence it is absolutely necessary that it should be extended to some port on the Georgian Bay so as to share in the rapidly developing western trade. The present is deemed an opportune time to agitate such extension, and as Markdale is directly in the line, it is but reasonable that the people of that village and neighborhood should take the initiative.

The committee above named is now in communication with the heads of the several interested municipalities, and with the authorities of the G. T. R. developments will be watched with peculiar interest in some quarters; the good offices of the friendly Press are earnestly solicited, so that the merits of the project may be fairly set forth and intelligently advocated.

WM. BROWN,
Sec. Com.

Markdale, Jan. 14, 1885.

To the Editor of the Standard.

I think it would be an intrusion to reply at length to the communication from the Secretary of the Meaford Road Union Sabbath School. The poet says—

"A little learning is a dangerous thing," and so this young man, seized with the proud thought of his superior ability, undertakes a task, and performs it in such a limping, self-contradictory style, that he answers himself in almost every paragraph—and sayes me the trouble. It is not the first time I have noticed it, in effusions from the same source.

My contention was, and still is, that the contracting parties, to the Union, were united judicially, and that therefore it was, as is, unseemly, not to have the auxillaries of the contracting parties run in the same groove—and I further contend, that but for a "nigger in the fence somewhere," opposition would not exist. In the publishing of the report, he admits that others besides myself thought it injudicious. I said it would invoke resentment, and so it has. Does this Secretary suppose he can dictate to the Methodist body, their duties, or by his specious argumentation, blind them to their own interests? I think not—already it is bearing fruit—and the people, as they should do, are rallying around their minister. He says there were "two niggers in the fence among them and one about six miles away." I suppose he means the Rev. D. C. McDowell—this is manifested the true spirit of this faction. How does that utterance compare with facts? Is this Secretary cognizant of the fact, that subsequently a meeting of the membership of the church has been held to consult and determine on this question?

I learn from good authority that twenty four members were present, and a careful vote taken, sixteen pronounced for the new constitution; three of the remaining eight, altho' favoring the new constitution, asked for time to rectify, if possible, the mistake of the Union party so called in their hasty conclusions, and three of the remaining five were members of one family!! How does that tally with the Secretary's statement? It is not too much to state that the evening was inclement, otherwise the vote would have been larger, and more completely in unison with the new order of things. As to the course of this Secretary, there is nothing to be advised. It seems I erred in calling him a "Presbyterian," and the vernacular of the faction came rolling forth—he said "I lied." Infinitely better to be a Presbyterian than a Latitudinarian, with no settled conviction of religious truth; such, I apprehend, are not the most profound or reliable.

I was amused at the shallow attempt to show that others besides the Methodists were a party to the Union! There were simply two schools in existence, both possessing Methodistic literature and teaching, and these schools united; no schools formed and operated by other sects existed there at any time, and it was really too bad to point the statement upon the intelligence of the neighborhood. I have now done with Johnny, as he is familiarly known; he is not a bad fellow after all; he possesses some excellent qualities; but has made a mistake, a serious one in this school matter.

The duty of the Methodist body is to control their own school, in their own house. Whilst tolerance and forbearance seemed necessary in the past and every one discharged his duty well, the altered circumstances render it expedient for denominational purposes, to make a slight change, and which the almost unanimous voice of the church demands. It is hoped that all parties will fall into line—"A house divided against itself cannot stand," and so I apprehend that those frictions which have arisen will be oiled and smoothed. My action and promptings proceeded from the appearance of the unfortunate report. I belong to neither party; have a strong desire to see the school prosperous and under proper supervision; I am not a bigot nor the son of one; am a firm believer and a weak follower of St. Peter, and hope to continue so, and remain in every particular to this school, except for truth and righteousness an Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The Flesherton Division Sons of Temperance held an oyster supper and musical and literary entertainment, consisting of readings, recitations, music, etc., on Wednsday evening, the 14th inst., being the evening of their taking possession of their new Hall, in Dr. Christoe's new block. About 9 o'clock a sumptuous spread was made in the Hall below the one occupied by the Sons. After all had done justice to the good things provided, the company again assembled in the hall above, when Dr. Christoe was chosen chairman, and discharged his duties in a most pleasing manner. A song by Miss Leitch was very well sang; a short address by J. Blackburn, after which Miss Christoe, in her usual artistic manner, gave an instrumental; Miss Page then recited very nicely, "The vacant lot"; also Mr. W. Thompson gave a lengthy and interesting recitation; Mr. C. Sproule then caused a good deal of mirth, by singing "The Laziest Man in all the Town"; Miss Davis then followed by a reading which was more lengthy than interesting; Miss Bella Christoe and C. Sproule then sang a duet which was well received; Miss Hopkin a reading in her usual good style; also R. Fawcett, Esq., a reading, after which the evening's entertainment was brought to a close.

Mrs. McDowell, wife of Rev. D. C. McDowell, who has been very ill for some time, is now, we are pleased to report, convalescent.

From a Reporter.

1,100 cords of wood and 15 car-load of tan-bark has been shipped from this station during the past three weeks.

M. Pickett, brother to our section foreman, has been placed in charge of Rockford section. Mr. John Pickett is allowed to be one of the best track men men north of Toronto. He has given the best of satisfaction here since the road was opened twelve years ago.

Our blacksmiths, T. Sargent and R. Abby, are endeavoring to give the public satisfaction, and thus secure each a share of patronage.

Mrs. Allen is also doing a fair business.

What we want here is a station and we have no doubt this place would soon compare favorably with many of the important stations on the line.

THE boom in the wheat market still continues. The little bordle may be seen at all times of the day at Mack's corner flourishing his head & tongue, but he has a big Hill to climb and had better not waste his energy.

AN entertainment will be given in the Orange Hall, Maxwell, on Wednesday evening, the 28th January, in aid of the Bell Fund of St. Mary's Church. Refreshments at 6 o'clock. Concert to commence at 7. Tickets 25 cents.

MR. J. R. TRIMBLE announces a clearing sale of store goods on Thursday and Friday, the 29th and 30th January, and Wednesday and Thursday, the 4th and 5th February. Unprecedented bargains may be expected.

NO DULL times at J. R. Trimble's; business rushing; my cash sales are increasing every day; why, simply because my goods are No. 1 in quality, and sold much cheaper than any of my competitors that sell inferior goods.

THE Manitowaning Expositor of the 10th inst gives a full discription of the new school house, which was opened the 1st of the year in that village. It's a good sign to see the educational interests of a place in such a prosperous condition.

THE Globe has secured the right to publish the great Baptists sermons, and will give in future one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons each week. This will doubtless be highly appreciated by the public, and at the same time profitable to the publishers.

WE are pleased to learn that Lillie Walker and Robt. J. Brown, the two pupils of our public school, who attended the entrance examination at Owen Sound, have been successful. The latter taking second and the former third place among those writing at the Sound.

WHILE the standard rule at McFarland's is to sell cheap, yet there are special lines and seasons when, in order to reduce stock and make room for spring imports, special reductions have to be made. Sweeping reductions in every department at McFarland's for the next 30 days.

THE C. P R. is giving special rates to the great Winter Carnival in Montreal, which takes place from 26th to the 31st January. Tickets to Montreal and return, from Markdale for $9 75 from Saturday 24th to 29th good to return up to 3d February. Remember the C. P. R. runs right through to Montreal.

THE Christian Guardian, the organ of the Methodist Church, published at Toronto, begins the new year in an enlarged and improved form. It contains sixteen large pages, eleven of which are solid reading matter, the other five advertisements. In its new shape it presents a handsome appearance; we wish it abundant success.

SOCIAL.—A social under the auspices of the Ladies Aid of the Methodist church will be given at Mr. Robt. Torry's, two miles west of Markdale, on Wednesday, the 28th inst. Teams have been engaged and will be at McFarland's corner at 6 and 7 o'clock to convey those who wish to go. A good time is expected. Admission 15 cents.

SKATING CARNIVAL.—The first masquerade of the season will be given on the Markdale rink on Tuesday the 25th January. A long list of prizes are offered, nearly all in cash. ARTEMESIA DISTRICT ORANGE LODGE.—At the annual meeting of the Artemesia Loyal Orange District Lodge, which was held in Flesherton on the 18th inst., the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Bros. J. Brodie, D. M.; W. Wright, D. D. M.; A. S. Vandusen, Chap.; J. A. Bates, Rec-Sec.; J. Boland, Fin. Sec.; J. A. Blakely, Treas.; W. H. Johnson, D. C.; C. Brodie, Lecturer.—COM.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—At a meeting of the Ladies Aid of the Markdale Methodist Church, held in the vestry, on the 15th inst, the following were elected officers for the current year:—President, Mrs. Mark Armstrong; Vice President, Mrs. Casson; Sec., Mrs. Thos. Hill; Treasurer, Mrs. Cornwall. Directors—Mrs. Bowes, Mrs. Ennis, Mrs. McDougall and Mrs. Auston. The first of a series of socials will be held at Mr. Torry's on Wednesday, the 28th inst.

NEW ENGLAND.—The Temperance entertainment, held in the Methodist church on Thursday evening, passed off pleasantly. The chair was filled by Mr. E. E. Hicks; and a good programme of readings, recitations and dialogues were rendered in a very pleasing style. Addresses by W. A. Brown of Markdale, and the pastor, were very appropriate. The singing by the choir under the leadership of Mr. Jessie Dowden, enlivened the proceedings and was well received.—COM.

NOT SO SLOW.—A colored man sat down to dinner at a country hotel together with a number of other travellers and a few boarders, when the landlord thought to himself he would have a joke at the expense of the colored traveller, and requested him to say grace. Sambo was equal for the occasion and fixing his eyes upon a tough looking roast of beef, commenced:

"Poor old ox what brought you here?
You've drawn sawlogs for many a year,
With Kicks and cuffs and sad abuse,
And now you'r here for travellers use.'

" " T. A. Strain, I. H.
" " W. Wright, O. H.

It was resolved to hold the first meeting of this Chapter in the same place on the 14th of May next.—COM.

Tara Leader:—Early in the season, a young unmarried man named Albert Smith, hailing from Sullivan township, rented the Pye farm, a short distance west of Arkwright, from J. M. Kilgoure. Smith took possession and moved unto the farm about the first of November, and worked away industriously putting things in shape for the winter, until some four weeks ago, when he suddenly disappeared. The neighbors noticed his absence, but paid little attention, as they thought he had returned to Sullivan for a time. Last week several young boys in rambling around the premises, visited the barn and discovered Smith's horses dead. The poor brutes had been left loose in the barn, but had starved to death, as they could get nothing to eat but straw and no water. So far as could be learned, no one was left in charge of the animals, and Smith told no one of his proposed absence, and the finding of the team in this condition gave rise to grave fears regarding his fate.

ODDS AND ENDS.

GATHERED FROM EXCHANGES AND BOILED DOWN FOR THE STANDARD.

The by-law to grant a bonus of $36,000 to the Brockville, Westport, & Sault St. Marie Railway was submitted to the people and carried by a vote of 531 to 300. The townships of Rear Yonge and Escott voted last Tuesday 13th, for the same railway, and carried the bonus by a large majority.

P. T. BARNUM has offered General Grant one hundred thousand dollars for permission to exhibit his trophic-relics.

Salt has been discovered at Bothwell at a depth 1,406 feet. The salt bed is over 90 feet thick and very pure.

Owen Sound has now a fine roller skating rink, size 72 x 40.

The number of vessels entering Toronto Harbor in 1884 was 1,780.

A misplaced switch caused a costly collision on the C. V. R. branch of the C. P. R. at Streetsville last Thursday.

Rev. John Straith, pastor of Knox church, Shelburne, died on the 10th inst., aged 58 years.

Ten years ago there were but four school houses in Manitoulin Island, and they were little log ones, now there are about forty. The new one just opened in Manitowaning is a credit to that prosperous village.

Mr. McGill of Chatsworth is doing an extensive business in the manufacture of school desks and seats combined. Those who have used them speak very highly of them.

Elsinore has a brass band.

FIRE IN TARA.—A disastrous fire occurred about two o'clock on Tuesday morning 13, resulting in the distruction of Vandusen & Shannon's block. The following are the losses:—W. Vandusen, loss on building about $3,500, insured for $2,000; Isaac Shannon, loss on dwelling, shop, and stock, about $6,000: no insurance, J. H. Vandusen, hardware, loss on stock about $3,000, insured for $1,000; P. A. Vandusen, general merchant, loss about $1,500, covered by insurance; B. D. White, loss on furniture, $200, no insurance; John Trelford, loss on furniture and clothing about $300, no insurance; W. Bassett, tailor, small loss no insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown. Mr. John Trelford is he who was a resident of Markdale the past year. We regret such a misfortune should befal him, and that so soon after taking up house-keeping.

FOR THE FARMER.

Potatoes for Low and Wet Soils.

The common white potato, which is a native of the high, dry lands of the Andes, does not produce well on damp soils, and degenerates in character so as to be scarcely fit for table use when long cultivated under moist conditions. This has been the case in the British Isles, and particularly in Ireland, and some experiments have been made recently with a view to producing a potato that will flourish and give a mealy product in wet lands. A species of tubber, kindred to the potato, called "solanum maglia," which was discovered by Darwin, in Chonos Archipelago, growing the marshes, was planted in some low lands in England and fertilized with the pollen of the white potato. These trials, which were conducted by Mr. Arthur Sutton, have resulted in the production of a potato specially adapted to wet soils, and it is claimed by the experimenter that a good, edible potato can be grown from these tubers in wet, marshy lands. It will, of course, take many more experiments to substantiate the unlimited practicability of the new tuber, but it is almost certain to be hailed with enthusiasm by the great middle classes of England, to whom the potato is their daily bread, and who now rarely ever see one that is not rather of a wet and diseased character than a healthy and mealy. But such a potato would also be a boon to many a farmer in this country, where low lands are by no means uncommon. The experiments alluded to have been published by Mr. Sutton, and endorsed by the "London Times."

Take Care of Farm Implements.

Some one once drew a graphic pen picture of a mortal foe to the farmer—one who labored for his destruction by night as well as by day, on Sundays, holidays, and work days alike. It was a "mortgage" that the writer of the sketch wisely regarded as one of the most active enemies to the farmer's purse and peace of mind.

There is, however, another agent for evil quite as active, to be found on every farm. It is known as rust. And although it annually destroys in the aggregate a vast amount of property, farmers too frequently neglect to take the measures necessary for protectfon from the ravages of this insidious foe. Hundreds of agriculturalists are buying farm machinery, which, if properly cared for, the "Forest, Forge, and Farm" suggests, ought to last at least ten years. Most of it will be worthless in one-fifth of that time for lack of a little care.

A machine that is taken apart and properly cared for when not in use will do good work years and years after its counterpart has been thrown away by the man who had the habit of leaving it unprotected. Then the delays caused by broken machinery, loose bolts, and rotten or twisted frames, discovered just at the time when the loss of time means danger to the crop, more than counterbalance any time, trouble, or expense incurred in properly putting away the machine. The provident farmer will always clean and house his implements as soon as the harvest is ended. Whenever the paint on an implement shows signs of wearing off, it ought to be renewed. And when tools and implements are housed they should be placed just where they can readily be found when again sought for.

Mode of Curing Hams.

Virginia country-cured hams, and notably the Smithfield and East Virginia hams, are cured in the following way, admitting some slight variations of course, according to the fancy or taste of the individual:

The hogs are left on the scaffold till the animal heat is well out of the carcass, and it has become a little stiff from cold, it order that it may cut smoother and better than it does when limp. Usually the pork is not cut till the next morning after it is killed, but if the weather is very cold, and it is feared that it will will freeze before morning, it is cut and salted the same day.

On being cut, the meat is immediately salted by hands who stand ready, and packed down in bulk, flesh side up, on the floor or a platform made for the purpose of holding the meat. On packing it down, each piece is so laid that all the blood that oczes out of the meat will flow away from it, and not remain in contact with the flesh to taint it. This is one of the nice points in our method of curing bacon, namely, to have the animal bleed freely when it is killed, and not allow the pork to stand long in the bloody water that always comes away from pork for a short time after it is slaughtered. Hence we never use brine, but always salt the meat dry, and break bulk and resalt again in a short time. Care is taker to touch all the joints and bones with plenty of salt, and to sprinkle more salt on the thick part of the pieces as they are packed down.

We use from a bushel to a bushel and a half of dry salt to a thousand pounds of pork, applying the most on meat of large size. Sometimes, to give a fine red color to the flesh of hams, a little saltpetre is rubbed on them, but very often nothing but the dry salt is applied till the meat is ready to be smoked. At the expiration of four to six weeks, depending on the size, and state of the weather, the hams are taken up, washed clean of the salt (but this is often omitted), and molasses or moist brown sugar is smeared over the flesh sides, and red or black pepper applied freely to give the meat a good flavor, and also to keep off the bacon bug, the "parent of the "skipper." The red pepper should be dried in an oven, and then pounded fine in a mortar. Both sorts of pepper may be taken together. A gallon of molasses or ten pounds of sugar, and four pounds of black pepper, or a peck of red in pod, are enough of these articles for a thousand weight of hams. The pieces are then hung up and smoked in the usual way by kindling a slight fire in the middle of the room, and keeping it smothered with chips from the wood-pile. But use only green hickory or oak wood, as it imparts a brighter ginger-bread color to the meat.—[Country Gentleman.

The English Shire Horse.

The English Shire horse is an excellent animal. It is an example of evolution through a great many years of use and breeding for a special object—working in a cart. The cart is essentially English. It is used for every purpose that a vehicle is needed for on a farm. Manure is drawn in great carts in huge loads, stacked up squarely several feet above the rack. Two, three, or four horses may be used frequently in hauling these loads on smooth turnpike roads, such as are never seen in this country. Horses, and vehicles, and roads are each an essential part of the question of what horse is best fitted for any particular use. Now we are bringing over these horses in large numbers and putting them to an entirely different use on very rough roads and in drawing wagons, and even in the field the use we are putting them to differs from that of their native country. I merely note the fact before we get wild upon this horse, as we have done heretofore upon other animals.—[Rural New Yorker.

A Native Bengal Household.

The widow Kunda Nandini passed some time in Nagendra's house. One afternoon the whole household of ladies were sitting together in the older division of the house, all occupied according to their tastes in the simple employment of village women. All ages were there, from the youngest girl to the grey haired woman. One was binding another's hair, the other suffering it to be bound; one submitting to have her white hairs extracted, another extracting them by the aid of a grain of rice; one beauty sewing together shreds of cloth into a quilt for her boy, another suckling her child; one lovely being dressing the plaits of her hair, another beating her child, who now cried aloud, now quietly sobbed, by turns. Here one is sewing carpet-work, another leaning over it in admiring examination. There one of artistic taste, thinking of some one's marriage, is drawing a design on the wooden seats to be used by the bridal pair. One learned lady is reading Dasu Rai's poetry. An old woman is delighting the ears of her neighbors with complaints of her son; a humorous young one, in a voice half-bursting with laughter, relates in the ears of her companions whose husbands are absent some jocose story of her husband's, to beguile the pain of separation. Some are reproaching the Grihini (house-mistress), some the Karta (master), some the neighbors; some reciting their own praises. She who may have received a gentle scolding in the morning from Surja Mukhi on account of her stupidity is bringing forward many examples of her remarkable acuteness of understanding. She in whose cooking the flavors can never be depended upon is dilating at great length upon her proficiency in the art. She whose husband is proverbial in the village for his ignorance is astounding her companions by her praises of his superhuman learning. She whose children are dark and repulsive-looking is pluming herself on having given birth to jewels of beauty. Surja Mukhi was not of the company. She was a little proud, and did not sit much with these people; if she came amongst them her presence was a restraint upon the enjoyment of the rest. All feared her somewhat, and were reserved towards her. Kunda Nandini associated with them; she was amongst them now, teaching a little boy his letters at his mother's request. During the lesson the pupils eyes were fixed upon the sweetmeat in another child's hand, consequently his progress was not great. At this moment there appeared amongst them a Boisnavi (female mendicant), exclaiming, "Jai Radhika!"

Pat and the "Polly" Belvedere Very Much Alike.

A young Irishman visited Rome, and there met a friend and fellow-countryman who was pursuing the avocation of butcher. The butcher acted as his guide, and this is a part of Pat's story of sight-seeing, as he told his sweetheart upon his return:

"The most wonderful thing I saw in Rome was a shtone man."

"A shtone man!" ejaculated Mary.

"Yes," replied Pat, "and they called him the Polly Belvedere. As we were looking at the shtone man, says the butcher to me, says he: 'Pat, you and the Polly Belvedere are very much alcike.' And be that we measured. I was broader than him in the fut, but he was higher than me in the inshtep. I was larger than him around the ankle, but he had me in the calf of the leg. My knee was larger then his, but he was better than me in the thigh. My belly was twice as large around as his, but his brist was twice as large around as mine. Then, again, my neck was much larger than his, but his head was much larger than mine, but, as the butcher said, on the general average, we were just about the same thing."

A household paper says: "Alcohol will clean silver." Ah! We knew there was something cleaned up all a fellow's loose change, and we had our suspicions, and this authoritative statement confirms them. Well, cleanliness is a great virtue, anyhow. So is economy, and alcohol saves soap.

Ideas About India.

The account given me by the oldest and best informed of my native acquaintance (and I am not talking here of Bengali demagogues, but of men holding, it may be, or who have held, high office under Government, and deservedly trusted by it) of the gradual estrangement which has come about within their recollection between themselves and the English in India, is most instructive. In the days, they say, of their youth, 30 and 40 years ago, though there were always among the company's officers men who from their abuse of power were disliked and justly feared, the general feeling of natives toward the English civilian was one of respect and even of affection. The Indian character is affectionate, enthusiastic, and inclined to hero worship; and the English in early days, from their superior knowledge and strength of character, exercised no little fascination on the native mind. Nearly all of the older men talk with reverence and esteem of certain teachers who instructed them in youth, and of certain early patrons to whom they owed their success in after life; and they willingly acknowledge the influence exercised over themselves and their generation by such individual example. The English official of that day, they affirm, had more power than now, but he exercised it with a greater sense of responsibility, and so of honor in its discharge. He took pains to know the people; and, in fact, he knew them well. Except in the very highest ranks of the service he was readily accessible. He lived to a great extent among the people, and according to the customs of the people. He did not disdain to make friends with those of the better class, and occasionally he married among them, or at least contracted semi-matrimonial relations with the women of the land. This may have had ill consequences in other ways, but it broke down the hedge of caste prejudice between East and West, and gave the official a personal interest in the people, which no mere sense of duty, however elevated, could supply. The Englishman of that day looked upon India not unfrequently as his second home, and taking the evil with the good, treated it as such. England could only be reached by the Cape route. Traveling was tedious and expensive, the mails few and far between, and many a retired officer had at the end of his service become so wedded to the land of his adoption that he ended his days in it, in preference to embarking on a new expatriation. It is easy to understand from this that the Anglo-Indian official of the compay's days loved India in a way no Queen's official dreams of doing now. Also that, loving it, he served it better than now, and was better loved in return.—[The Fortnightly Review.

Nature's Zoo.

The country of the Upper Nile was, par excellence, the wonderland of the Roman World, as it is still the grandest out-door museum of natural curiosities. Zoologically there is no more densely populated country. All the wild beasts and birds, made homeless by the devastation of Northern Africa, seem to have taken refuge in the Nubian highlands. In the terrace-land of the Nubian and Abyssinian Alps there roam herds of elephants, wild goats, wild sheep, and four teen or fifteen different species of antelopes. Further below the hippopotamus and white rhinocerous haunt the river swamps. Prof. Blanford enumerates 290 species of water birds. With these harmless settlers less desirable guests have crowded in, the spotted hyena, the jackal, the black and yellow lion, four species of smaller cats, wild dogs, and, above all, the cynocephalus, the wily and mischievous baboon. Three varieties of these Darwinian pets inhabit the rocks of Southern Nubia; the little babuin, the cynocephalus proper, and the celada, or mantle baboon, a fierce and powerful fellow, whose shaggy mane protects his body like a cloak, and enables him to brave the climate of the upper Highlands. Profs. Kuppel and Hotton agree on the fact that a troop of these brutes, in ravaging a corn-field, will not only hold their ground against all comers, but on the slightest provocation take the offensive in a way not likely to be forgotten by the unarmed native. Dogs have no chance whatever against a full-grown baboon. The old males do not wait to be attacked, but charge them at once with an energy and skill of co-operation that would do credit to a troop of well-drilled soldiers. The hyrax, a queer pachyderm, allied to the European badger, coinhabits the rocks with a hibernating marmot, and the coast jungles swarm with wild hogs that multiply undisturbed, for the Abyssinian natives share the pork prejudice of their Mohammadan neighbors.

Native Treatment of Disease in India.

Regarding the native treatment of diseases, one of the most curious things I ever witnessed was a half-clad native shouting through the streets of a country town: "Does any one want back his sight?—a rupee only!" as if he were hawking fruits or sweetmeats; and, to my astonishment, a patient soon presented himself to be operated on for cataract. There and then, standing in the bazaar, the itinerant oculist took out his penknife and performed the operation in a few minutes, bound up the man's eyes, and telling him to keep in the dark for a fortnight, received his fee of 1 rupee, and shouted his war-cry for more patients. The operation was almost unvaryingly successful; one instance, among my servants being a woman of 80, who had charge of my fowlhouse, and had for many a day been sightless, except to distinguish light from darkness, and who in this way was successfully operated upon. Besides this operator are bonesetters and medical rubbers, male and female, especially represented by the hereditary low caste accouchause of each village, whose skill in shampooing is such an aid in her lonely calling—as the natives regard it—as to supplant much of the useless medicine and enforced rest of more civilized countries, and save endless mischief and suffering to her sex. What skill they have is, of course, almost purely traditional. None of the science of the world or British usage has yet altered in the slightest degree either the customs of the native or his horror at the idea of male physicians for women—especially in certain ailments—and their wonder at our obtruseness and disregard of propriety on so delicate a point. To supply a vacancy so long unfilled, lady doctors have now appeared on the scene, who it is hoped by reaching the zenanas, may reach the real source through which a higher enlightenment in India is possible. An immense field is open to them along with every encouragement, and were but some of the many young ladies at home who are straining health for a future pittance in one or other of the spheres of teaching to turn their attention in this direction, they would find an opening of wider and greater utility before them, and a prospect of large and rapid emolument.—[Chambers' Journal.

The Deadly Climate of Panama.

Just before Mr. Dingler left Panama for France, say, 16,000 men were at work. The wet season is now in, and today not more than 7,000 of all ranks are employed. Quite recently, owing to the very sickly season, 440 of the 7,000 were in the hospital, apart from nearly 160 under treatment at home. This tells its own story about this deadly climate. The laborers are nearly all Jamaicans. At Georgoma, a canal camp, between Saturday last and Monday noon three canal chiefs had died. We hear of the deaths of chiefs—as for the men, they die on the line and are buried, and no attention is paid to the matter. Two American carpenters are in an unnamed grave near Emperador. The death-rate a few months ago, from a careful estimate, was 109, and a decimal, nearly 100 per 1,000 for all ranks. Yellow fever kills the whites, malaria the natives and negroes. Many an able-bodied, well-built negro is cut off in from twenty-four to thirty-six hours after his seizure. Many are placed in the ambulance cars of the canal company and die en route. None but those living here and familiar with such painful sights can form any idea of this country. To return to the appearance of canal works. Lack of spirit and lack of energy were everywhere observable. Heavy rains interfered greatly with the work. Earthworks are swept away by the tropical downpour. A few hours rain caused a small stream to rise in such a manner that a railway bridge was swept away, stopping canal work there. One may safely say that during the long rainy season, from May to the middle of December, fully half the time originally calculated on by De Lesseps is lost, owing to the rains, small floods, and the stubborn fact that, while the company claimed to have 16,000 men in its employ at the close of the dry season, only 7,000 are working. Some contractors are losing money, and a great deal of it. One firm of Americans threw up its dredging contract rather than lose men and money.

The Sapphire.

The ancients, curiously enough, called this stone male and female, according to its color—the deep-colored or indigo sapphire being the male, and the pale blue, approaching white, the female. To the sapphire also have been ascribed many magical qualities—among others that it was a sure preventive of evil thoughts, that it was a remedy against fever, and that if confined in a vessel with a reptile it would cause the death of the latter. The gem was also sacred to Apollo, being worn by all who inquired of the oracle at his shrine.

The sapphire is to all intents and purposes the same stone as the ruby, differing in name only on account of the color, which last varies from white to the deepest blue and black; but there are several varieties; the name sapphire being usually restricted to the blue varieties, while the bright red are called Oriental ruby, the amethystine Oriental amethyst, and the dull, massive kinds, corundum or emery. The sapphire is next in hardness to the diamond.

A most curious property of this stone is its difference in color in different lights. Thus, a sapphire which is blue by daylight, by gaslight appears to possess a variety o other tints; but a really good stone should appear blue in both lights. Tastes differ as to the shade or tint which is the most beautiful, but connoisseurs are generally agreed that a stone which approaches in hue to blue velvet of the shade called bleu de roi is the most valuable, It is worthy of remark that the name "sapphire" is one of the very few that appear in most languages with but very slight change in spelling—thus we have the Hebrew sapphir, the Greek zaffiros, the Latin sapphirus, and the Chaldaic sapirinon, and so on; but the ancients applied the term indiscriminately to all stones of a blue color.

There are no sapphires of note in this country; but in Europe the different treasuries of rich gems, notably Dresden, possess many remarkable for their size and beauty. The late Mr. Hope, whose name has been rendered famous by the "Hope Diamond," was the owner of a magnificent indigo-blue sapphire as large as a hen's egg. At his death this treasure was added to the Russian crown-jewels, where it now is, in company with several others of exquisite beauty.

Midnight Mystery.

The Commotion which Followed the Entrance of an Ill-Looking Stranger on a Western Train.

The last weary traveler was stowed away for the night, the last curtain was drawn across the section, and the low rumble of the train through forest and clearing, farm and valley, was only broken by the occasional snort of a heavy sleeper. Miles and miles of the dreary solitude Missouri night scenery were left in the distance; the train went whizzing by small, unimportant stations, and now halted at some wayside tank and took in solid and liquid refreshments for the bloodless horse. But why should it now slew up in the dreariest of all the many dreary, unforbidding places along the road? What ill-looking stranger was that who had just entered the car and passed down the aisle between the slumberers with a scowling face stamped with a sinister brand?

"Crack!" Surely a pistol shot!

"I knew I 've been looking for this sort of thing for the last six months!" shouted a Kansas City drummer, diving for the aisle and getting there with both feet. "I surrender!"

"Crack!"

"Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord—besides that I haven't got a pistol," echoed a muffled voice from the sepulcher of an upper berth.

"Crack!"

A rather shapeless female figure, robed in white and a ruffled nightcap, bounded into the aisle and rushed at the Kansas City drummer with open mouth and a discrepancy of teeth. As she fled she tripped, recovered herself, and plumped squarely into the drummer's arms.

"Oh, save me from the Jim boys. Landlord, save me!" shrieked the woman from Parsons, "save me for my darter's sake!"

"Crack!"

"Throw up your hands!" said the drummer, trying to squirm away. The woman from Parsons complied rapidly, and he slipped out on the rear platform. The train was just starting away from a ghostly tank looming up against the rosy-hued horizon of approaching day. The conductor entered the car from the other end. "Crack!" He dodged into the smoker's apartment and peered out along the aisle where the old lady was "sashaying" and balancing before the curtained sections in a stately, single-handed minuet. Capped and undressed heads were thrust without the curtains, and white, anxious faces looked up and down the aisle.

"Any train robbers at your end?" shouted the drummer above the din of the howling Parson's woman.

"Not any down my way," answered the conductor, stepping out in front of the old lady's berth. "Thunder and Mars! What's this? A soda fountain?

"Crack!"

"Why, for the land's sake!" broke in the Parsons woman, "of that ain't my yeast, six bottles of it, all for Jane, and busted, busted, busted. I was afeered all along that the rattle of the keers would get the stuff a workin'."

Formosa.

This island should prove a valuable colony to any Power that gets it. It is a large and very fertile island, and possesses some good coal mines at Keelung. The Spaniards and Dutch were the first to get a footing on the island, the Dutch driving out the Spaniards, and being themselves at length driven out by a great Chinese pirate chief, after which the Chinese came into possesion of several important ports. The natives of the island are savages, who regard the Chinese with a most deadly hatred; they have fought bravely against the invaders, who fear them a good deal, but they are being gradually pushed further into the interior. At present the interior is still in the hands of the natives, and the Chinese hold the ports, and a good stretch of country inland, which they are steadily increasing by an insidious encroaching process. One drawback to the place is that it possesses no reallly good harbors, every port having a bar at the entrance to the harbor, which impedes navigation. Dredging would, however, no doubt do away with this drawback to a considerable extent. If the hands of a European Power the resources of the island would certainly be vastly more developed than they are in Chinese hands, and if France does take the Island for a permanent possession, it is believed that the result will be a general increase of trade.

The Life of a Brain Cell.

The wonderful activity of the human brain is in large part due to the fact that it is made up of a vast number of cells, each of which lives its own individual life, and in so doing, contributes to the lief and activity of the whole. A German physiologist, who has given careful study to the subject, computes that "the cerebral mass is composed of at least 300,000,000 nerve cells, each an independent body, organism, and microscopic brain, so far as concerns its vital relations, but subordinated to a higher purpose in relation to the function of the organ, each living a separate life individually, though socially subject to a higher law of function. The life term of a nerve cell he estimates to be about sixty days; so that 5,000,000 die every day, about 200,000 every hour, and nearly 3,500 every minute, to be succeeded by an equal number of their progeny; while once in every sixty days a man has a totally new brain."

Such a delicately organized structure needs good care and the very best of which can only be afforded by good food, free from unwholesome elements, and well digested.

A Tale of the Sea.

The long record of shipwrecks has presented few more thrilling incidents than that recently told in connection with the capsizing of the Dutch lugger Maartje. This unlucky vessel was overtaken in a tremendous gale when some hundred miles from Spurn Head in Yorkshire. A sea struck her and turned her right over, imprisoning eleven men in the cabin, where seven of them were soon drowned. The vessel partly righting herself, the other four were enabled to scramble out, and they all clung to the stemhead, the only part of the lugger which kept above water. One of them was washed away next morning, but the other three held on throughout the day, eagerly looking out for rescue. A terrible situation was this, but unfortuately not altogether uncommon in the history of such disasters at sea. Towards evening, however, one of the three poor fellows broke into wild delirium, and when at length, after another fearful night of peril and exposure, the Grimsby smack General Wolseley bore down upon them and endeavoured to rescue them, he refused to be taken from the wreck. He had spent the night in wild laughter and delirious songs, and now clung with a maniac's frenzy to the hull of his vessel. The crew of the Grimsby smack seem to have behaved with great gallantry in their efforts to save the men; and the mate, at the imminent peril of his own life, went on to the wreck and tied a rope round the poor fellow's waist, and an attempt was made to drag him into the boat. With the tenacious clutch of a madman, however, he held on, deterr mined, as he said, to go and tell his mates down below that help had come The rope was at length let go in orde that other means might be tried, and then, true to his purpose of going down to his shipmates, he broke into a frantic laugh and sank. Fiction has rarely conceived anything more grim and ghastly in its humor than the incident of this poor Dutchman beaten about in a wild sea on that stemhead for two days and two nights, and then with wild laughter plunging down to tell his drowned comrades that rescue had come.

Trying to "Figger it Out."

If there is one thing sadder than another in this world it is to see a young man with a buffalo skin overcoat on, sitting on the winter side of a grocery, with tears in his eyes and nothing but a yarn mitten to wipe them away with. Such a case was discovered by a policeman on Grand River avenue yesterday, and when asked the cause of the young man's sorrow, the reply was:

"Busted in love."

"Who was she?"

"Worked in a corset factory."

"Well, that's very little to cry over. Plenty of other girls around, you know."

"Yes, but I've been to a fortune teller, and I tell you things look dark. She took up a skull, shuffled over some cards, and went into a trance, and told me I was to marry a widow with six children."

"Oh, pshaw!"

"Fact, and here I am with less than $4 in money, no property, no clothes, no job, and going to have six children to clothe and feed and lick and school and take care of! The widow she'll want new duds and jewelry, and will be howling to go to the opera and the roller skating rinks, and nobody knows how many relations she'll bring into the house for me to support."

"Oh, well, It may be all right—perhaps it will be a rich widow."

"No such good luck as that. She'll be poor but aspiring, and the young 'uns will be poorer and aspiringer yet, and if I had any grit I'd commit suicide. Go away and lemme be! You can't comfort me—nobody can do me any good—and I want to be left in solitude. I ain't naturally a solituder, but just now I'm all broke up. A poor an' aspiring widow—six aspiringest children, and only $4 and a buffalo overcoat as a starter! G'way, and lemme figger it out!"—[Detroit Free Press.

The Commercial Traveller.

The commercial traveller is an English institution, and has contributed largely to build up the trade of Great Britain. He has probably obtained his fullest development in the United States, where his opportunities for covering vast tracts of "territory" are unsurpassed, in fact quite unequalled. Here, in Canada, up to the date of Confederation, the commercial traveller was shut up to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec; after the union he over-ran New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; later, Prince Edward Island was opened to his genius. In these Maritime Provinces he has been the means of creating dissatisfaction with the political union more particularly in Halifax and St. John, the even tenor of whose commercial life has been rudely interrupted by the "drummers" from Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and other "Western" centres; so that a large proportion of the stocks formerly supplied by Halifax and St. John, as wholesale points, to the shop-keepers throughout the Lower Provinces, now reaches the latter through the commercial travellers from "the West." The accession of British Columbia to the union did not add to any notable extent to the traveller's field of operations; not so the opening up of Manitoba and the Northwest. Here the commercial traveller found virgin territory, a new and a steadily increasing field for the display of his powers of persuasion. He has followed the Canadian Pacific Railway, mile by mile, and has generally been the first arrival in every new "town" or "city." He may be depended upon to be on the first train that passes through to the Pacific coast.—[Montreal Herald.

Influence of Mind over Body.

Mr. Crosse had been bitten severely by a cat, which, the same day, died from hydrophobia. He seems resolutely to have dismissed from his mind the fears which must naturally have been suggested by these circumstances. Had he yielded to them, as most men would, he might not improbably have succumbed within a few days or weeks to an attack of mind-created hydrophobia—so to describe the fatal ailment which ere now has been known to kill persons who had been bitten by animals perfectly free from rabies.

Three months passed during which he enjoyed his usual health. At the end of that time, however, he felt one morning a severe pain in his arm, accompanied by severe thirst. He called for water; but "at the instant," he says, "that I was about to raise the tumbler to my lips a strong spasm shot across my throat. Immediately the terrible conviction came to my mind that I was about to fall a victim to hydrophobia, the consequence of the bite I had received from the cat. The agony of mind I endured for one hour is indescribable; the contemplation of such a horrible death—death from hydrophobia—was almost insupportable. The pain which had first commenced in my hand, passed up to my elbow, and from thence to the shoulder, threatening to extend. I felt all human aid was useless and I believed that I must die. At length I began to reflect upon my condition. I said to myself, 'Either I shall die or I shall not; if I do it will only be a similar fate which many have suffered, and many more must suffer, and I must bear it like a man. If, on the other hand, there is any hope of my life, my only chance is in summoning my utmost resolution, defying the attack, and exerting every effort of my mind'; accordingly, feeling that physical as well as mental exertion was necessary, I took my gun, shouldered it, and went out for the purpose of shooting, my arm aching the while intolerably. I met with no sport, but walked the whole afternoon, exerting at every step I went a strong mental effort against the disease. When I returned to the house I was decidedly better; I was able to eat some dinner, and drank water as usual. The next morning the aching pain had gone down to my elbow, the following day it went down to my wrist, and the third day left me altogether. I mentioned the circumstances to Dr. Kinglake, and he said he certainly considered I had had an attack of hydrophobia, which would possibly have proved fatal had I not struggled against it by a strong effort of mind.

A New Process for Toughening Steel.

The French Societe d'Encouragement have had under prolonged examination a process invented by M. Clemandot for working steel. This process is described by the "Revue Industrielle" as consisting in heating the metal until it acquires a sufficient ductility, and then subjecting it to high pressure during cooling. In this way a modification of the structure of the metal is produced, and the material acquires properties analogous to those developed by tempering. It is admitted that the compression of steel has already been practiced in England by Whitworth; but, it is contended, merely with a view to prevent air holes caused by the development of gaseous bubbles during the solidification of the steel. Similar processes have been tried in France, but only upon the same principle—that is to say, by operating upon the metal while yet in the state of fusion. M. Clemandot, on the contrary, takes steel already made, heats it simply to a cherry red, and submits it, by means of a hydraulic press, to pressures of from 1,000 to 3,000 kilos per square centimeter. After having allowed the steel to cool between the two plates of the press, it is withdrawn with all its new qualities perfectly developed, and does not require any further treatment. The result of the process is to impart to the steel a fineness of grain, a degree of hardness, and a notable accession of strength to withstand rupture. This alteration is most considerable with highly carbonated steel; and in this respect the metal is made to resemble tempered steel, without being in all points identical with it. The cause of the alteration in physical condition is ascribed to the rapid heating and no less rapid cooling of the metal. When the red hot steel is first strongly compressed, the conversion of the mechanical energy into heat serves to raise the temperature of the entire mass, at the same time that the particles of the metal are more closely cemented together. This effect is followed by a rapid cooling, due to the contact of the plates of the hydraulic press with the surfaces of the metal. The close pressure materially increases this conducting effect of the cold metal.

To Examine a Horse.

A horse will always show well standing at rest. The man showing a horse for sale who keeps the animal constantly stepping about, to show off, is to be looked upon with suspicion. The time to examine a horse is when he is at rest. It is then that his weak points will be shown. If the horse "flies up" at some object on the ground, nearsightedness may be suspected. If brought suddenly into the light, from a dark stable, and the light oppresses him, his eyes are weak. His gait and speed should be tested by actual service. At rest, if the horse is sound, he will stand square on his limbs, without moving any one of them, the feet being placed flat on the ground, and all his legs plumb and naturally placed. If one foot be thrown forward, with the toe pointing to the ground, and the heel raised, or if the foot be lifted from the ground, and the weight taken from it, disease or tenderness may be suspected.

Steel Plates for the Forth Bridge.

It is a pretty sight to see ship-plates or plates for bridges rolled. Let us look for an instant at the "three high" rolls engaged in rolling a plate for the Forth bridge. A little detachment is laid on to deal with a plate weighing some two tons and two hundredweight. The great mass of steel is being raised to the heat necessary for rolling in a furnace in the immense building devoted at Landore to rolling and hammering purposes. At the proper moment the furnace is opened, and the luminous mass is dragged from its burning bed on to a light but sufficiently strong truck, and pushed quickly toward the rolling mills. An ingot or "bloom" of the great weight specified is not easy to move, and it is amusing to see the skill with which it is dealt. Wheeled at a white heat up to the "rolls," the mass is at first, as it were, reluctantly accepted, and passes into their jaws with difficulty. Then it becomes by degrees flatter and flatter, until it seems that it may become a plate. Backward and forward, spurting out flames at the jaws of the rolling-mill close upon it, the great mass of incandescent steel is kneaded as though it were dough, and flattened to the required size. As the fiery sheet pours out of the rolls, boys run beside it with brooms soaked in water to wash off the oxidized skin of the metal, and thus leave a clean surface. While this is going on at one set of rolls, others are turning out plates and girdles, angles and rods, and the iron floor on which we stand becomes so hot that we are glad to move into a pool of water to cool our burning soles. One by one the great plates are rolled and out on the floor. In the course of rolling they have become stretched a little, at the sides, so that they have the look as they lie red-hot on the ground, of the skins of mighty beasts recently torn from them and flung down by the hunters. Scarlet and crimson in every shade, they are cut by a machine, which makes nothing of their weight and thickness, into the exact parrallelograms required for the Forth bridge and for ship-building purposes, after which they are stacked in heaps ready for delivery.

SMILES.

Once a certain lad thought, in an absent-minded way, that he was in Sunday school, when he really was in weekday school. "What state do you live in?" asked the teacher. "A state of sin and misery," drawled out the boy.

"Did you pass the hat?" the pastor of a Texas congregation asked his deacon after the morning service. "Yes, I did," said the deacon, and then, looking into the vacant interior of a hat that wanted nothing but lining, he added gloomily, "and so did everybody else."

Not long ago a young Florida negro named Romeo married a young colored girl named Juliet. They now have twins, which they have named Romulus and Remus, and they are all drawn to church on Sunday by a horse called Pontius Pilate in a carriage called Noah's Ark.

"What are you doing, pet?" "I am studyin' my Sunday school lesson." "Is it hard?" "It's awful hard. Here's a question I can't answer. It says, 'Who was it said all men are liars?' Do you know who it was, pa?" "Yes; it was David." "David! How did he come to say that, pa?" "Well, I don't know, pet. Maybe he was running for office."

Little boy has been swearing, and mamma, to punish him, washed thoroughly the inside of his mouth with soapsups, "to," as she explains to him, "clean away the naughty words." A few days later, while passing the bath-room, she sees the youngster with his face one mass of suds, and his mouth so full that she barely understands his spluttering exclamations. "Getting them all out, mamma! Swore five times yesterday!"

The late Dr. Macadam used to tell of a tipsy Scotchman, making his way home on a bright Sunday morning, when the good folk were wending their way to the kirk. A little dog pulled a ribbon from the hand of a lady who was leading it, and as it ran away from her, she appealed to the first passer-by, who happened to be the inebriate, asking him to whistle for her poodle. "Woman!" he retorted, with that solemnity of visage that only a Scotchman can assume: "Woman, this is no day for whustlin'!"

USEFUL RECIPES.

Butternut Pie.—Three teacups of sweet milk, one teacup of sweet cream, three well-beaten eggs, a coffee cup of butternut meats, and sugar and spice to taste. Bake with one crust.

Bread Sauce.—Pour half a pint of boiling milk on a teaspoonful of fine breadcrumbs and a small onion, stuck with three or four cloves, a small blade of mace, a few peppercorns and salt to taste. Let the sauce simmer five minutes, add a small pat of fresh butter, and at the time of serving remove the onion and mace.

Ham Pickle.—One of the best pickles for ham and shoulders is made as follows: —Six gallons of water, six pounds of salt, three ounces of saltpetre, four pounds of coarse brown sugar and one pint of molasses. Rub the hams or shoulders two or three times with salt, then put in this pickle and leave six weeks, when they will be ready to put into the smoke house.

Eggs and Toast.—Put a quart of milk (more if your family is large) on the back of the stove to heat. When boiling hot, drop in eggs, the same as you would poach them in water. Use care not to burn the milk. Toast some thin slices of bread; butter and place on a platter. When the eggs are done, place one on each piece of toast, season the milk and pour over. Good for a change.

A Question.

How can we raise more corn to the acher? Why, of course by using Putnam's Corn Extractor. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor has given universal satisfaction, for it is sure, safe and painless. Like every article of real merit it has a host of imitators, and we should specially warn the public to guard against those dangerous substitutes offered for the genuine Putnam's Extractor. N. C. Polson & Co., proprietors, Kingston.

The "proper caper" is the kind used for sauce.

It is not Disputed.

That Nerviline, the new pain remedy, is a good article. Some indeed claim that the old-fashioned preparations are just as good, but any sufferer can satisfy himself by expending ten cents on a sample bottle of Polson's Nerviline, that nothing sold can equal it for internal, local or external pains. Always speedy in effect, prompt and certain in every cure. H. S. Webber, Orangeville, writes: "My customers speaks very highly of Nerviline as a remedy for toothache and neuralgia." All druggists and country dealers sell Nerviline. Try it to-day.

A bachelor of arts—An accomplished lady-killer.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 30 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star.

Would it be just to say that all physicians partially get their living by pillage?

Dr Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops should be used in almost every household in Canada it is one of the best and safest cough remedies known. In large bottles at 50 cents

WELL SPOKEN OF.

B. N. Wheeler, of Everton, speaks highly of Hagyard's Pectorial Balsam. It cures him of inflammation of the lungs and an obstinate cough. It loosens the phlegm and heals the lungs.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

A SETTLED FACT.

It is a significant fact that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy for internal and external use in case of pain, soreness lameness, and inflammatory complaints.

A young minister said several times, when giving some new exposition of a passage: "The critice and commentators do not agree with me here." Next morning a poor woman came to see him with something in her apron, saying as she enquired for "the master." He said in his sermon yesterday. 'The common taters did not agree with him here.' "So I have brought him some of the very best Jersey Blues."

A WIDE SPREAD EVIL.

The great source of consumption and of ugly sores is scrofula in the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the whole system and cure scrofula, as well as the more common blood humors.

Editing a paper now a days is a nice business. If we publish jokes people say we are rattlehead, if we omit jokes they say we are an old fossil, if we publish original matter they blame us for not giving selections, if we publish selections they say we are lazy for not writing something they have not seen in some other paper, if we give a complimentary notice folks say we are prejudiced, if we do not cater to the wishes of the ladies the paper is not fit to tie up a parcel or make into a bustle, if we stay in our office and attend to our business we are too proud to mingle with our fellows, if we go out they say we never attend to our business, if we wear poor clothes folks say business is bad, if we wear good clothes they say we never paid for them, and the poor editor does not know what to do. There are about 9,999,999 people in Canada and the States, all knowing more about running a paper than the editor does himself.—Exchange.

A TOTAL WRECK.

Many a strong frame has been totally wrecked by rheumatism. D. McCrimmon, of Lancaster, was cured of chronic rheumatism by Burdock Blood Bitters. It cures all blood impurities.

DRIVE IT AWAY.

Drive away all poisonous humor from the blood before it develops in scrofula or some chronic form of disease. Burdock Blood Bitters will do it.

TENDERS.

DYNAMITE!

Attempt to Blow Up the Parliament Houses.

And the White Tower in London, Eng.

SEVERAL TERRIFIC EXPLOSIONS.

(From the Mail.)

LONDON, Jan. 24.—A little after 2 o'clock a tremendous explosion occurred in the House of Parliament, the fine pile of buildings and the Government offices being shaken to the very foundations. The report of the explosion was heard for fully a mile round, and terrible excitement prevails. Vast crowds of persons assembled from all parts of the city. Downing street at the present moment is literally packed by excited people, who are clamoring for something to be done by the Government to protect them from these periodical outrages. No doubt is entertained that dynamite is the terrible agent. The explosion occurred close to the House of Lords, near Westminster hall. It is reported that the explosive was placed in a crypt under the building. One policeman was hurt. The force of the shock was tremendous, and felt at a great distance. The damage done was very great. Rumours are current that another explosion occurred at two o'clock this afternoon at London Tower. The excitement increases with every moment. The city is filled with flying rumours. There were two explosions at the Parliament house. The second came about three minutes after the first. One was near the House of Commons, and the other at Westminster hall. One man has been arrested near the scene of the explosion. The detective force is hard at work seeking further developments, which are anxiously awaited, particularly by people in the neighbourhood of Westminster hall.

THE MACHINE NOTICED BY A LADY.

One lady was seriously injured by the explosion in the House of Commons. Immense damage was done in the lobby. The masonry, decorations, and sculpture are utterly destroyed. The place is described as literally blown to pieces. The shock was felt in Pall Mall, and persons in the vicinity say the earth shook. Sir William Harcourt, the Home Secretary, and Lord Hartington, the Secretary of War, are visiting the scene. Another account of the explosion at Westminster hall says the explosion was more disastrous than at first anticipated. Four persons were badly injured, including two policemen, who are probably fatally wounded. A lady who was in the hall spied the infernal machine and called the attention of Policeman Cole to it. The officers rushed to the spot, seized the machine, and attempted to extinguish the fuse, but was not quick enough. The fuse burned so rapidly that the officer became alarmed and dropped it. The explosion followed almost immediately. Half of the hall was wrecked. The explosion in the lobby of the House of Commons occurred three minutes later than the one in Westminster hall. It came from directly under the strangers' gallery, and very close to the seat usually occupied by Mr. Bradlaugh when visiting the Commons. The lobby was completely wrecked, the gallery torn down, the Speaker's chair destroyed, and the massive stone work displaced.

DAMAGE TO THE CHAMBER.

The glass roof of the House of Commons was completely shattered by the explosion. The clock in the House stopped at precisely 2.13. A heavy beam, which formed one of the supports to the gallery, under which Mr. Bradlaugh usually sits, was projected into the Speaker's chair, seriously injuring it. Mr. Gladstone's seat was torn to pieces.

WHERE THE EXPLOSIVE WAS PLACED.

It has been ascertained that a large quantity of explosive matter was placed inside the great ornamental gates leading to the crypt under Westminster hall. The gates were blown off the hinges, all the windows on the north and south sides of the immense building were blown to atoms. The concussion shook down from the roof the accumulated soot of centuries. Thus make such a dense cloud that the officers became alarmed and feared to enter the room. In the lobby the splinters were for a time thick as flakes in a blinding snow storm. They were propelled in many cases with a dangerous force. They cut and ripped the leather from the seats and tore out and scattered the horse hair stuffings all over the House. The statues of King William IV. and King George IV. were overturned.

ARREST OF A CANADIAN.

The throng of people about the Parliament buildings continues, and is tumultuous with excitement. The policeman most seriously injured by the explosion is sinking rapidly, and all hope of his recovery is abandoned. Of the two persons arrested after the explosion as they were hurrying away from Westminster, one is a man of middle age, above the medium hight, who describes himself as a Canadian seafarer and part owner of a vessel.

ACCOUNT OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

An eye-witness of the Parliament house explosion says:—After the first explosion he entered Westminster hall and found three constables prostrated upon the stairs leading into the crypt under the hall, all of whom were seriously injured. Near by a gentleman lay stretched upon the ground completely exhausted, whose hat and clothing were torn. He has also received severe injuries.

THE LOCALITY OF THE EXPLOSION.

The locality of the explosion in the House of Commons is in a deep shadow, being directly under the gallery. The person who deposited the dynamite was thus less likely to attract notice than in almost any other part of the House.

THE INJURED CONSTABLES.

Police Constables Cole and Cox, who were seriously injured in Westminster hall, were still unconscious at 10 o'clock this evening. Their recovery is considered absolutely hopeless.

VISITORS IN THE COMMONS.

Over a hundred visitors were in the House of Commons when the explosion occurred in Westminster hall. Most of them rushed out of the building to ascertain the cause of the report, and thus many lives were saved

THE FORCE OF THE EXPLOSION.

Remarkable force was shown by the explosion in Westminister hall in a downward direction. Holes were scooped in the ground large enough to hold a man. Into one of these holes so formed Constable Cox was violently thrown, and from it was extricated in a bruised and battered condition. Two other policemen, who were near the scene were not so seriously hurt, but were thoroughly stunned by the force of the shock. A further inspection of the locality of the explosion in the House of Commons shows that the flooring was driven clean through to the basement. The floors through the building are littered with debris of broken chandeliers, glass, and other objects of a fragile nature. The gas fixtures were wrecked, and it was impossible for Col. Majendie to continue his investigation for lack of proper illumination. The damage will not delay the assembling of Parliament.

A WOMAN SUSPECTED.

The fact that an unusual number of ladies visited the Parliament buildings to-day has given rise to a suspicion that the miscreants who perpetrated the outrages were women or men in women's disguise. The attendants say parcels were carried by many of the women and they seemed to bestow unusual care in guarding them.

A SUPPOSED CLUE.

A clue to the perpetrators of the outrage is thought to have been discovered. Just before the explosion occurred a man and woman, the latter carrying a hand bag, engaged a cab outside Parliament yard, and drove rapidly away, giving no directions as to their destination. They had not gone far when the explosion happened. The cabman stopped the cab, when the and hastened away. The cabman pursued the runaways, who were overtaken and arrested. The investigations made so far by the police lead to the conclusion that the explosives used in the attack on the Tower were handled by persons who gained access as sightseers. The ruins show that the explosives were operated from a point somewhere on the inner bastion or on the esplanade near St. Thomas' tower. The report was terrific, and was heard for miles up and down the Thames. The prevalent belief is that the destructive agent was conveyed into the House of Commons by some Saturday visitor.

TUESDAY.

The excitement over Saturday's explosions still continues in London. The police are active in their investigations, and have arrested an Irish-American named Cunningham, whom they believe they can connect more or less directly with the plot. The total damage done will amount to $70,000

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

On Wednesday evening, the 21st inst., a large number of scholars and teachers of the Flesherton Presbyterian Sabbath School assembled at the residence of J. R. Anderson, Esq., when Miss Anderson was made the recipient of a handsome purse and address in recognition of her kind services as organist in the Sabbath School. After tea had been served a very pleasant and social evening was spent in various games and amusements.

On Friday evening last a social was held under the auspices of the Presbyterian Ladies Aid Society at the residence of Mr. Wm. Hogg, Flesherton Station, which was in every respect a decided success. The house, which is very roomy and well adapted for such gatherings, was filled to overflowing. The various games and amusements, provided for the evening, was entered into with a zest by all.

Friday last being court day there was a large number of people, as usual, out courting, who, a person would think, might be old enough to give up such notions; but, from their frequency in the dock, we suppose they are fond of it.

East Grey Agricultural Society.

At the annual meeting of East Grey Agricultural Society, the following named persons were elected office bearers for 1885:—

Thos. Kells, Esq., re-elected President; John Abbott, Esq., 1st Vice-President; D. R. Ellis, Esq., 2nd Vice President. Directors—William Hewgill, Geo Richardson, S. Douglas, S. Damude, R. Oliver, Geo. Glazier, S. Stokes, Wm. Norton, W. G. Pickell. Auditors, J. I. Graham and J. Brodie. At a subsequent meeting of the board S. Damude was re-elected Sec.-Treas.

The Auditors and Directors reports were read and adopted. The Auditors report show the amount received, $1337.95; amount paid, $1339.65, and all due liabilities paid.

The Secretary was instructed to confer with Prof. Brown of the experimental farm Guelph, in view of holding a farmers institute in Flesherton at an early date.

The meeting was one of the most pleasant and instructive held by the society, being evidence of satisfaction and prosperity.

The Fall Exhibition will be held on the 29th and 30th of September.

War Against Dynamiters.

A BILL INTRODUCED INTO THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Senator Edmunds has introduced a bill making it an offence to make, buy, sell, manufacture, or compound within the United States any explosive substance with intent or knowing that such shall be used either within the United or any foreign country for the destruction of property or life. Placing such explosive on board any ship is also included among the penal offences.

MIRIAM.

CHAPTER V.

The plan that Miriam formed during that long wakeful night of avoiding further intercourse with Mr. Keene on that, his last day, at Eastwick by feigning illness and keeping to her own room, was frustrated by an urgent request, received by the morning's post from Mrs. Archer, for her to go at once to the Rectory, and execute certain commissions there which were said to be important, and which must be performed without delay. The departure to Lady Hick's brother was making, all undesired by him, a good deal of disturbance in that affectionate household, therefore it was that Miriam's heavy eyes and unusually pallid face excited little comment when she, having received her letter in her room, put in a tardy appearance at the breakfast-table.

"A drive will do you good, dear," was all her hostess said. "Since you must go to the Rectory, I will take you in Ella's pony-carriage. Sir Robert wishes himself to drive Kingston to the station."

"Imagine the mother turning whip," young Rob observed, with a laugh. "Better walk down with Ella and me, Mrs. King — safer, I assure you."

But Ella had noted the tearfulness of her mother's eyes as she spoke of her brother's departure, and she thought that the proposed drive might be beneficial to more than Mrs. King.

"Why, mother can manage the ponies beautifully!" she said. "Although one of them used to be restive in single harness, he is the veriest dear when he runs with the other, Rob. Mother could manage them easily if she were twice as nervous."

"And I am thinking," Lady Hicks went on, "that, while Mrs King is engaged at the Rectory, I can come on to the station to see the last of you, Kingston."

Kingston assented perforce to this plan, having a man's horror of tearful adieux on a public platform. He looked at his sister very kindly; the tears were running down her face.

"Why, Agatha, cheer up," he said gently; "'tisn't for the first time that we are to be parted. It will be no worse for you than it has been before."

"It is your going just now—just at Christmas—that mother feels," Ella remarked. "Next week we shall be having the house full of other people who belong to us."

"All Hickses," Agatha said, with a sob. "You are the only one of my people left to me, Kingston, and you——"

"Good Heavens! Not all Hickses surely!" cried Rob, who had no sympathy with his mother's melting mood, and he proceeded to rattle on about the coming of some friends of his own, who at any rate were not Hickses.

And so, when the pony carriage drew up at the door, it happened—as they were all glad to remember in the after-time—that the whole family came into the hall to see the ladies start. Miriam was already seated, the rugs wrapped by Rob carefully about her, when Mr. Keene, having said his few last words to his sister, brought her down the steps. He helped her to her seat, pulled the furs around her, gave her the reins with hands that Miriam hated to see were trembling. She gave but one glance at his pale set face, and determined to look no more.

"That is the last I shall see of my husband for ever," she told herself, and pressed her lips tightly together as she averted her eyes.

"You will not see Mrs. King at the station," Lady Hicks said, with a sudden thought. "You must say good bye to her now, Kingston."

But the ponies were chafing to be off, and Miriam's hands were enveloped in her furs, and Mr Keene only slightly raised his hat in farewell, and they were off; and the last look his sister sought from him was given to her companion's averted face, and it was at her lessening form he looked so yearningly, standing bare-headed on the gravel sweep, when they thought he was straining his eyes to catch the last glimpse of his sister; for a pious fraud had been practised at the instance of Rob the unsentimental.

"All that about saying 'good-bye' at the station is a nuisance, you know, sir," he said to his uncle. "A man doesn't care to have his woman weeping and wailing around him in public. That was why I gave the wrong tip about the train. When she gets to the station it will have been gone half an hour."

Mr. Keene pulled himself together as the young man addressed him.

"You be good to your mother always, my boy," he said. "There are very few such women in the world, loving and tender-hearted and — forgiving."

In a few minutes, urged on by a restlessness he could not control, Mr. Keene had set out alone to walk to the station.

"I shall meet your father," he said to Ella, as he bade her good-bye; "if not I will look in upon him at the club. You will see that my things are sent."

"You will be sure to fall in with mother and Mrs. King again," Ella replied. "They call at several places in the town before Miriam goes to the Rectory."

"That Mrs. King—you like her?" he asked gravely.

"I love her," declared Ella, with effusion.

"Dear little Ella—good little girl! Always be true to your friends," he said, and stooped and kissed her with so much fervour that the tears came into the girl's eyes.

The morning was bright and frosty, and Mr. Keene, keeping pace with the tumult of thoughts whirling through his brain, walked quickly over the crisp hard roads, past the frost-bespangled hedges sparkling in the sun, past the ugly, half-completed buildings—at a stand still this morning—where the suburb approached the town, past the public house at the corner—he stood and looked at it for a moment—from which the men had reeled who had frightened Miriam on that dark evening not so long ago, passed the entrance to that gloomy sloppy lane where he and she had held their first converse after so many years. The lane was not sloppy to-day, but was beautified out of his recollection by the rime-frost and the sunshine. He turned and walked down it for a few paces. Some red berries, half eaten by the hungry birds, still hung on the straggling hedge. He broke off a couple with their stems and fastened them in the button-hole of his coat. A further walk of ten minutes brought him into the town.

He remembered what Ella had said about the chance of seeing his sister and Miriam again. Already he was feverishly anxious to do this—just to see them go by. He thought that then he would be more at rest. Making his way to the market-place, he stood at the entrance to the principal hotel. Sooner or later they must pass that way he knew.

As he waited there, there came along the broad pavement, past the hotel, a posse of men and boys. They were talking loudly together, and some portion of what they said suddenly struck upon his careless ear, and wakened him to terrified attention.

"Women ain't no bisness to drive," one respectable middle-aged man was saying.

"The groom, ye see," another explained, "'e were out—a gone in somewheres with a message, when they started off. 'Twere that orgin a strikin' up as did it, and——"

The speaker stopped suddenly and turned round, feeling a hand upon his shoulder.

"Of what accident are you speaking?" Kingston asked, addressing the group. "Be quick some of you and tell me!"

"Ladies thrown out of a pheaeton," the first speaker replied. "Some o' the Hicks's fumily, we don't know which."

"Anybody hurt!" Kingston questioned anxiously, his face, which had been a bronze not often seen in Newton, turned to a ghastly pallor.

"One on 'em," was the reply.

"Where are they?"

"I'll show ye, sir," said the middle aged man. "Come along o' me sir."

During their five minutes' walk side by side, the man glanced often into the ashen face of his companion, and with the instinct of a gentleman remained silent. But he told afterwards to his wife, and to the knot of idlers who gathered about his door as he ate his dinner, how, when the gentleman passed through the crowd around the door of the house to which he was led, he moved his hands in front of him, as if grouping in blindness.

It was into a chemist's shop that Mr. Keene passed in that blind unconscious way, which shop was full of people.

"She is carried through there, sir, into the room," a woman said pityingly.

At the same moment the glass door at the end of the shop opened, and there stood, pale and ghastly, but breathing, moving, living—his wife!

"It is not you, then," he said hoarsely; "I thank Heaven!"

Miriam came a step forward. She saw nothing of that crowd of people around her, nothing even of her husband, but only poor Agatha's brother, only the man whom that poor woman lying in the adjoining room had devotedly loved. She put her hand on his arm.

"You have come at last," she said, as though she had been confidently expecting him. "It may not be the very worst—we don't know—the doctor does not know. She is unconscious—come!" She half drew him to him to the glass door and closed it behind her.

"You are safe?" he questioned, taking her hands in his. "Not hurt at all? I thank Heaven!"

"Do not think of me," she groaned. "What do I matter? Oh, that it had been me! He, the doctor, will not say if there is hope; but I know—I know that there is none!"

A minute more and they were in the little sitting-room. Lady Hicks lay on the sofa. She was in her out-door dress, except that her bonnet was removed; she was very pale, her eyes half-closed, and she was breathing with a noize that seemed to fill the room. The doctor knelt by the side of her couch, looking, it appeared, intently into her eyes; the master of the shop stood by looking at the doctor.

"Where is she hurt!" Mr. Keene whispered, leaning over the unconscious form.

"It is her head," the doctor answered aloud. "There is no need to whisper; she will not hear," he added gravely.

"Is there nothing to be done?" Mr. Keene asked, impatiently regarding him. "Let us have further medical aid. For Heaven's sake, set about doing something."

"All the doctors in the world could do no more," the other confidently declared.

"But have you looked to see where she is hurt? That arm, is there anything wrong with it that it lies in that position?"

"It is broken, sir," said the chemist. "Both her arms are broken."

"Then why in Heaven's name don't you set about doing something for them?" the brother cried.

"Useless," affirmed the doctor, sadly shaking his head. "The hurt in her head will cure the hurt in her arms."

"You mean that she is in danger?" Mr. Keene demanded, almost fiercely.

"I mean that she is dying," returned the other calmly. "I mean that she may last for hours, but that she will never wake from that sleep."

Miriam, with a low cry of terror and grief, flung herself into the arm-chair by the fire—there she lay and sobbed convulsively. Mr. Keene uttered no further sound, but stood and looked with apparent calm at the still form on the couch, listening to the painful breathing. The chemist wheeled forward a chair to where he stood. Mechanically he dropped into it, looking and listening still.

"Sir Robert!" he said presently. "Some one should go to him."

"A messenger has been sent, sir. The young lady thought of everything before she broke down."

Mr. Keene turned and looked at "the young lady," who was sobbing passionately.

"How did it happen; do you know?" he queried, turning back to the chemist.

"Some music—a brass band or something—struck up suddenly and frightened the ponies. The groom was in a shop; Lady Hicks appears to have lost her nerve, and, although the young lady implored her to keep quiet, she threw herself out. The young lady caught at the reins, but she had no control over the ponies, and the carriage turned over at the first corner. 'Tis wonderful how she herself escaped with so little hurt."

"Is she hurt at all?" Mr. Keene asked quickly. "Are you sure that she is not hurt?"

The doctor was standing over Miriam, holding a glass with some sal-volatile. She sat up after a minute and took it from him into her shaking hand. One of them noticed that it was her left hand, and the other hung helpless at her side. The doctor lifted it, and she gave a little cry of pain.

"Does that hurt you?" he asked quietly.

"Let me look, please."

"It is nothing," Miriam answered; "it is my wrist — oh, what does it matter?"

"Are you sure that is all?" her husband asked, getting up from his chair and crossing over to her, while the doctor, having removed her jacket and cut open her dress sleeve, quickly bound her arm. "You feel no other pain, Miriam?"

"No—oh, no!"

"Then what is this?" Mr. Keene asked, touching with his fingers a drop of blood oozing from under the dark hair on her temples. He gently lifted the loose hair at her forehead and exposed a sufficiently ugly cut.

"A nasty flesh cut, no more," the doctor said, having examined it; then, while he pulled a bit of lint to pieces to staunch the blood, he continued, "You have been saved from serious injury almost by a miracle. You have very much to be grateful for."

Miriam took no heed of his words, but looked appealingly at Mr. Keene.

"I tried to save her," she said. "Even in that awful moment I thought of her husband and children—and you, who all loved her. I begged. I implored her to sit still; I could not hold her, because it took both my hands for the reins. Oh, do you think if I had let them go and held her—held her with all my force—oh, do you think she might have been saved? Hark!"—shrinking back in her chair, and hiding her face on its cushions. "There is Sir Robert!"

All this was at noon-tide. At evenfall Lady Hicks still lay unconscious on that unfamiliar couch. There was hardly a sound to be heard but that painful breathing in the room. Now and then a half-stifled sob would come from Ella as she lay with her face buried in Miriam's lap, or Kingston Keene would leave his place by his sister's side and silently pace the room, or Sir Robert, almost stupefied with grief, holding his wife's hand in one of his, would with the other take out his watch, the seals jingling noisily as he did so. Poor Rob, all unused to grief, and ashamed of the emotion he could not control, would not stay in the room, but miserably paced the pavement in front of the shop.

At midnight one of them noticed a change. Mr. Keene bent over to the girls huddled together by the fire.

"You and Ella go to bed," he said to Miriam, "you can do no good, you are both worn out. Go at once."

"I cannot, I cannot," Ella moaned.

Her uncle stooped and lifted her in his arms.

"You must think of Miriam," he said, pronouncing his wife's name unnoticed in the general excitement. "Remember that she has had much to bear and is tired. Look at her, dear, and you will see."

Ella looked into her friend's face as bidden.

"I am selfish to keep you. You go Miriam," she said.

But Miriam would not leave her, and presently putting her arm about the girl's waist she led her from the room.

On the strange bed of the chemist's spare room the two girls lay down, dressed as they were, in each other's arms, and there in a little time Ella had cried herself to sleep. Miriam could not close her eyes; she lived over again those terrible minutes in the morning; she experienced with all their original pain and intensity the sensations of the day; her thoughts dwelt with sleepless persistency on the woman dying in the room below—the wife, mother, sister, friend; they lingered with sick reluctance over the image of her own husband. The contrast of his strength of form with the helplessness of the figure on the couch beside him had impressed itself vividly on her memory—Sir Robert and Rob, his son, being slight and somewhat insignificant-looking men. His tenderness to Ella and thoughtfulness for herself troubled her in spite of herself; nor could she forget that word of thanksgiving which had burst from his white lips when he had first become certain of the safety of his wife.

"I thank Heaven that it is not you," he had said, and yet the alternative he had known must be so terrible—his sister, his only sister, the only person on earth perhaps who really loved him. Miriam's heart almost stood still at the shock of a sudden recollection which struck her with peculiar force.

"He will be alone," she thought—"as much alone as I!"

In an hour's time, unable to find sleep, she gently disengaged herself from Ella's arms and stole down-stairs to the door of the sick-room. Instead of the heavy breathing, a sound of painful sobbing broke upon her ear. With trembling hand she pushed the door farther open. Rob had come in; he was standing in the farthest corner of the room, his poor young grief-stricken face hidden against the wall; his father was on his knees by the side of the couch on which that solemn form, now for ever silent, lay, and it was from him that the sobs and the broken wailing words came.

Miriam leant against the door-post, trembling and heart-sick with grief and pity. She did not see her husband at first, but presently he came forward and put a hand on Sir Robert's shoulder.

"Be a man, Robert," he said, in a voice broken and husky and all unlike his own. "You—you have your children, remember, and others left to comfort and care for you, while I—she was the only one—I am quite alone."

Then Miriam could bear no more; but, stifling the sob that rose in her throat, she turned and fled up-stairs and took poor unconscious Ella in her pitying arms again—poor motherless Ella, who would learn when she awoke what an empty, sorrowful place was the world which for her had been so complete and joyful.

. . . . . .

Mr. Keene again deferred his departure from Eastwick, spending the best part of a week there, awaiting his sister's funeral. His companionship, although often a silent one, was of great benefit to Sir Robert—a common loss, a common grief for one both had loved bringing them into greater sympathy than one of them at least had deemed possible. Rob too, tired, boy-like, of grief, was glad to try to forget it in the presence of the only person about him who seemed anxious to dispel instead of to encourage the general mournfulness. Miriam, worn out with grief and excitement of various kinds, was too languid to persist in her antagonism, and seemed to take Mr. Keene's constant kindness and attention as Ella too accepted it, as something of her due, and as a matter of course. To the latter, indeed, during the eternity of that dark week of gloom and silence, he was an angel of light. Miriam was a consolation, she was something to cling to, to cry against, to trust in; but her uncle was the person who really helped her to live through and to rise above her childish unreasoning grief. She would lie for hours, her head in Miriam's lap, and their hands locked together, listening to his pleasant voice as he talked or read. It seemed a relief to her to talk of her mother, and she questioned Mr. Keene minutely about their early life together. Perhaps not without pain to himself he would talk to her of that distant time when life had been all before him, when he had been full of hope and faith in himself, and his sister had been more than happy in her perfect confidence in and dependence on him.

A Cure for Drunkeness.

There is a prescription in use in England for the cure of drunkenness, by which thousands are said to have been enabled to recover themselves. The receipe came into notoriety by the efforts of Mr. John Vine Hall, commander of the Great Eastern steamship. He had fallen into such habitual drunkenness that his most earnest efforts to reclaim himself proved unavailing; at last he sought the advice of an eminent physician, which he followed faithfully for several months, and at the end of that time he had lost all desire for liquor—although he had been for many years led captive by a most debasing appetite. The receipe, which he afterwards published, and by which so many other drunkards have been assisted to reform, is as follows: Sulphate of iron, twenty grains; magnesia, forty grains; peppermint, forty-four drachms; spirits of nutmeg, four drachms. Dose, one tablespoonful twice a day.

The Sugar Beet in Egypt.

There is much discussion at present in England as to the use to which the Soudan can be put after Khartoum is relieved. It is said the country is pre-eminently suitable for the cultivation of the sugar beet. These learned men are now attempting to teach the British farmer how to profitably cultivate the sugar beet. It is easier to grow, they say than wheat, and more profitable to sell; and, if Gordon manages to turn over a lease of Khartoum to England, that is the country to emigrate to, because sugar beets can be cultivated there better and with greater profit than anywhere else in the world.

A HAPPY NIGHT.

"Come in!" shouted together the host and the hostess of a little German way-side inn near the banks of the Rhine, and not far below the city of Basle, and the borders of Switzerland. It was Christmas eve, a tempestuous night. The wind was raving round the little inn and tearing away at the windows and doors, as though mad to get at the brave little light within, and extinguish it without mercy. The snow was falling fast, drifting and driving, obstructing the highway, blinding the eyes of man and beast.

The "come in" of the hostess was in answer to a loud, hurried rap at the door, by which there immediately entered two travellers. One by his military dress seemed a soldier and the other appeared to be his servant. Gen. Wallenstein was on his way from Carlsruhe to his home in Basle. He had been delayed by an accident to his post carriage and by the storm, and now found himself obliged to stop for the night at this lonely and comfortless little inn.

When the officer threw aside his plumed hat and military cloak of rich fur, and strode up to the fire, with his epaulets flashing in the light and his sword knocking against his heels cling, clang, the gruff host was greatly impressed with his importance, and willingly went out to assist the postillion in the care of the horses. As for the hostess, she bustled about with wonderful activity to prepare for the great man.

"Ho, Carl," she cried, "thou young rhinespirit, thou water-imp, run to the wood for another bundle of fagots! Away haste thee, or I'll give thee back to thy fin kinsfolk, who are ever howling for thee!"

At these strange, sharp words a wild-looking boy started up from a dusky corner of the room, where he had been lying with his head pillowed on a great tawny swiss dog, and darted out of the door. He was coarsely dressed and bare footed, yet there was something uncommon about him—something grand yet familiar in his look, which struck the traveller strangely.

"Is that your child?" he asked.

"No, indeed," said the old dame; "I am a poor woman, and have been trouble many time; but blessed be the saints! I'm not the mother of water-imps."

"Why do you call the boy a water-imp?"

"I call him so, your excellency," said the woman, shrinking her shrill voice into an awe struck tone, "because he came from the water and belongs to the water. He floated down the Rhine in the great flood, four years ago come spring, a mere baby, that could hardly tell his name, perched on a little chalet, in the night, amid thunder, lightning, and rain! Now 'tis plain that no human child could have lived through that. My good man spied him in the morning and took him off in a boat. I took him in pity, but I have always been afraid of him, and every good time I think the Rhine is coming for its own again."

The traveller seemed deeply interested, and well he might be, for in the very flood of which the superstitious old dame spoke his only child, an infant boy, had been lost, with nurse, whose cottage on the river bank below Basle had been swept away by night.

"Was the child alone on the roof of the chalet?" he asked in an agitated tone.

"Yes," said the hostess, "all but the old dog, who seemed to belong to him."

"That dog must have dragged him on the roof and saved him!" exclaimed the general; "is he yet alive?"

"Yes, just alive. He must be very old, for he is almost stone blind and deaf. A good man would have put him out of his way long ago, but for Carl; and as he shares his meals and makes his beds with him, I suppose it is no loss to keep the brute."

"Show me the dog!" said the officer with authority.

"Here he lies, your excellency," said the dame. "We call him Elfen-hund (elf-dog.)

Then Wallenstein bent over the dog, touched him gently, and shouted in his ear his old name of "Leon." The dog had not forgotten it; he knew that voice, that touch of the hand. With a plaintiff, joyful cry he sprang up to the breast of his old master, nestled about blindly for his hands and licked them unreproved, then sank down as though faint with joy at his master's feet. The brave soldier was overcome with emotion; tears fell fast from his eyes.

"Faithful creature," he exclaimed, "you have saved my child and given him back to me." And kneeling down he laid his hand on the head of the poor old dog and blessed him.

Just at that moment the door opened and little Carl appeared toiling up the steps with his arms full of fagots, his tearful face smiling brave defiance to the fury winds, and rain and snow.

"Come hither, Carl," said the soldier. The boy threw down his fagots and drew near.

"Dost thou know who I am?"

"Ah, no—the good Christian king, perhaps," said the little lad, looking full of innocent wonderment.

"Alas, my poor child, how shouldst thou know me?" exclaimed Gen. Wallenstein, sadly. "I remember thee; thou art my boy, my dear, long-lost boy. Look in my face; embrace me; I am thy father!"

"No, surely," said the child, sorely bewildered, "that cannot be, for they tell me the Rhine is my father."

The soldier smiled through his tears, and soon was able to convince his little son that he had a better father than the river that carried him away from his poor parents. He told of a loving mother who yet sorrowed for him, and of a blue-eyed sister who would rejoice when he came. Carl listened, and wondered and laughed, and when he comprehended it all, slid from his father's arm, and ran to embrace old Leon.

The next morning early Gen. Wallenstein, after having generously rewarded the innkeeper for having given a home, though a poor one, to his little son, departed for Basle. In his arms he carried Carl, carefully wrapped in his warm fur cloak, and if sometimes the little bare feet of the child were thrust out from their covering, it was only to bury themselves in the shaggy coat of Leon, who lay snugly curled up in the bottom of the carriage.

I will not attempt to tell you of the deep joy of Carl's mother, nor of the wild delight of his little sister, for I think such things are quite beyond any one's telling, but, altogether, it was to the Wallensteins a Christmas time to thank God for, and they did thank Him.

England's Favored Duchess.

The Duchess of Westminster, Constance Gertrude, is one of the favored women of the earth. She seems to be blessed with every comfort, including a contented mind. She has rank, fortune, and education, combined with beauty and health. She is a daughter of the Duchess of Sutherland, whence she obtained her aristocratic face and highly cultured mind.

Besides being the husband of the Duchess, the Duke of Westminster is the owner of more than a thousand houses at the West end. It is said the Duke is a first-rate landlord, who pays special attention to plumbing and leaky roofs. His good-hearted wife uses a portion of his immense income with which to assist worthy charities, besides entertaining royally at all seasons.

Constance Gertrude's sisters married very well indeed. They escaped the snares of the family coachman and were safely wedded to royalty. One sister married the Duke of Leinster, and another was the late Duchess of Argyll, and mother of the Marquis of Lorne. This fact makes the Duchess of Westminster the aunt-in-law of the Queen's daughter.

If the Queen should ever lose her position as forelady of Great Britain she will always have a home with the Duchess of Westminster, although the lady does not take boarders.

CONNUBIAL COMFORTS.

A Philadelphia man asked his wife for some molasses, and when she poured a gallon of the stuff down the back of his neck he was so stuck up he had her arrested.

A Connecticut farmer lost an eye and had his jaw broken in a recent encounter with a cow, and what hurt his feelings worse than all was the fact that his neighbors wouldn't believe it wasn't the result of being hen-pecked.

"It's cold day," said Jones, as he passed Smith on the street the other day. "Scold day! Great Scott! is your wife on her ear too?" asked Smith.

Many persons are surprised that George Eliot could, late in life, have married a man so many years younger than herself. There is no occasion for surprise. She doubtless married him in the hope that if she took him he would stop smoking cigarettes.

"Sound moves at the rate of 400 yards per second."—Scientific Paper. Does it? We were always under the impression that of a frosty morning when somebody was yelling upstairs from the kitchen that there was no wood in the house to get the breakfast with, it moved at a velocity of about four hundred million.

British Discipline.

There is a clump of trees in the immediate vicinity of Bangalore which is known as "the Dead-man's Tope." In it there is a solitary grave, that of a young Scotchman. For many years the natives alleged that his "ghost" was to be seen walking mournfully among the trees, for they said he could not rest until his appointed years had been fulfilled. He had been a corporal in the Scotch regiment stationed in Bangalore, beloved by all his comrades, but unfortunately hated by the sergeant of his company. At last, goaded by the unjust treatment he received from his sergeant, he struck him down in a moment of passion.

In those days, discipline was stern; the young corporal was tried, and condemned to be hanged in the presence of the whole garrison. The execution took place; but so great was the feeling against the sergeant that he had to be sent away from the regiment down to Madras, protected by a military escort. The general officer who told me this story was a witness of this sad scene, and was the interpreter to the native soldiers of the reason of the execution. That young corporal belonged to Glasgow and was connected with many respectable families in the city.

Koumiss.

Koumiss has become, with some a pop beverage. It will be remembered that it was given freely to the late President Garfield during his last illness. Here is a receipt for preparing it:—

Take a champagne bottle and fill it to neck with pure new milk, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar—lump, that has been crushed—dissolve in a little water over the fire; then add a quarter of a two cent cake of compressed yeast. Cork, tie down securely and shake thoroughly. Let stand for six hours in a temperature anywhere from 60 to 90 degrees, then place in ice box, or other cold place over night. The virtue of this drink is, that it refreshes and stimulates without bad after effects. The milk must be pure and new and the yeast fresh. Upon opening it should you find the milk curdled and thick, do not use it, as that shows that the fermentation has been prolonged beyond the proper time. Make fresh as needed.

The Washington Monument.

More than a century ago, to the year 1783, the Congress of the United States passed resolutions providing for a memorial to General Washington. This memorial was to be erected at the permanent seat of Government of the United States—then a newly created nationality. The War of Independence was ended, and the country was universally grateful to the noble leader to whose efforts they justly ascribed a great measure of the success.

Ten years later, the Commissioners who laid out the District of Columbia set apart a tract of land between the site of the President's mansion and the Potomac River, as the spot where this national tribute to Washington was to be erected, and their report in which this reservation was established President Washington himself transmitted to Congress.

He died in 1799, in the belief that on that pleasant slope, overlooking the broad Potomac, his services to the country would be recommemorated. The whole project slumbered until 1833,—fifty years after Congress had voted to make a memorial to him,—and then it was revived again by private enterprise.

A meeting of citizens of Washington was held in September, 1833, and an association was formed for the purpose of erecting a national monument to Washington. The original plan was to procure the money by subscriptions of one dollar each. The amount raised was not large. A new subscription was begun in 1846, and by the year 1854 a sum of a little more than a quarter of a million dollars had been obtained.

Work had been begun, however, some years before, and the under stone of the monument was laid on the 4th of July, 1848, on which occasion a fine oration was delivered by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, then Speaker of the House of Representatives. The contributions, however, began to fall off, and finally, when the monument had reached the height of one hundred and eighty feet, construction ceased.

A period of neglect and indifference followed, ending in the civil war and the exciting questions which were at issue after the war closed causing the shame of this unfinished monument to be forgotten. But in 1876,—the centennial year,—Congress made an appropriation towards the completion of the monument.

The foundations were examined and found to be defective. The work of enlarging and strengthening them was not completed until 1880, when construction upon the monument itself was resumed. The cap stone was put in place early last month, and the ceremony of inauguration will be performed on the 21st of February next—the 22nd, which is Washington's birthday, being Sunday,—when it is hoped Mr. Winthrop, will be the orator of the completion, as he was of the beginning, of the monument.

The monument is the most lofty structure ever erected by man. Its height was originally intended to be six hundred feet, but, owing to its enormous weight, it was not deemed wise to carry the monument so high. Its height is five hundred and fifty-five feet. Its exterior is of Maryland marble, and the interior is Maine granite.

The foundation is one hundred and twenty-six feet six inches square at the base and tapers to the top. The walls are fifteen feet thick at the bottom, but gradually become thinner until at the top they are only one foot six inches thick, and the monument is there thirty-four feet square.

Each State in the Union sent a block of stone to be set in the interior, and many cities as well as several foreign countries have done likewise.

These contributions, many of them highly polished and elegantly inscribed, make the monument a museum of mineralogical treasures.

Of the beauty of the monument there is not much to be said. It is not graceful or elegant. Those who wish to find beauty in it, however, will say that it befits republican simplicity and the rugged honest virtue of Washington. But if it does not gratify æsthetic taste, it will none the less serve as a memorial to recall to all future generations the heroic life and noble character of the first and greatest of Americans.

A Chinese Review.

The Prince's large blue tent was pitched on a slightly rising ground apart from the others, and was constantly surrounded by gorgeous officers in bright yellow raiment, with round, flat black hats and long feathers, who were galloping to and fro, directing grand charges of cavalry. It did seem so funny to see a whole army of ponies; for there are no horses here, unless the foreigners chance to import any. These Eight Banners are all Manchus or Mongol Tartars, or at any rate are descended from such, Chinese troops being ranged under the green standard. These Eight Banners which, as I have said, are multiplied are plain white, red, blue and yellow, and the same colors repeated, and distinguished by a white edge and white spot. These companies are supposed to defend different sides of the city, the colors having some mystic relation to the points of the compass; except that yellow is in the middle, where it guards the Imperial Palace. Red guards the south, blue the north, and white the west, while the east is nominally given up to the green standard, which, however, being composed of Chinamen, is not admitted to the honor of guarding the forbidden city. I am told that the Banner Army numbers upward of one hundred thousand men, who supply Tartar garrisons for the principal cities of the empire. We got out of the cart and secured good positions on the small hillock, whence we had a capital view. A number of Tartar soldiers who were off duty gathered round, and were quite captivated by the loan of my opera glasses. Then the showed us their matchlock firearms, (which certainly did not look as if any European could have superintended the arsenal where they were manufactured,) and also their peculiar belts, containing charges of powder only; and yet we are told that in addition to first-class firearms, which are being ceaselessly manufactured at the Government arsenals at Tien-Tsin, Shanghai, Canton, Foo-Choo, Nankin, and other less important places, the Chinese Government spares no expense in buying ammunition of European manufacture. I suppose they are kept in reserve for real war! A picturesque company of archers rode by on stout ponies, holding their bridle in the right hand, and in the left their bows, the arrows being cased in a leathern quiver slung across the shoulders. As to their swords, instead of hanging from the waist, they are stuck under the saddle-flap; each man's cap is adorned with the tails of two squirrels, which is the correct military decoration. Now, though we Scots are quite ready to believe that blackcocks were created for the express purpose of bequeathing their tails to adorn the hats of the London Scottish, (the said tails having very much the jovial, independent character of the bird itself,) it really is impossible to see the fitness of things in selecting poor little squgs as military emblems, unless to suggest the wisdom of he who fights and runs away! Anyhow, it now seems as if we might find a profitable market for the thousands of squirrels' tails which are annually wasted in our north country woods. I quite forgot to take note of the fan and the pipe, which I am told are invariable items in the accoutrements of the Chinese soldiers. —[Belgravia.

Discordant Notes.

Every city should be provided with a lonesome park where brass bands can blow themselves to pieces.

"Is it advisible to attempt to study the violin without a teacher if none can be procured?" asks a correspondent. Not unless you live in the middle of a prairie.

Gounod says: "Those who do not like music are deceased." Oh, well; thousands who have liked music are deceased, and one condition is about as bad as the other.

A young lady in Cincinnati who was not asked to play on the piano before company, took laudanum and came very near death's door. It did not occur to her that the company wanted to enjoy themselves.

The man who is learning to play the violin will now enjoy a period of happiness, while his wailing neighbors turn their attention to the ambitious boy with a high tenor tin whistle and a mezzo soprano drum.

An organ grinder was found almost frozen to death in Allegheny City last week, and it was found impossible to revive him until some one started to grind out a tune on the organ, when he sprang to his feet and was soon able to go to his home. It is an old saying that desperate cases require desperate remedies.

"Remus, has yo' got a fiddle in yo house?" "We haz, Rastus." "Well, pears ter me like h'it aint in werry good helf, am it?" "What am de 'casion ob dat 'mark, Rastus?' "Why, I never year de v'ice ob de same but I speck de surgins iz at it sawin' off de ims, an' dey don't gib no klory fo'm ter stop de pain."

A Story of Squirrels.

In front of the telegraph office at Stockbridge, Mass., there is a large elm tree, which is the home of three red squirrels. A little girl who is employed in the office comes out a number of times a day and knocks on the trunk of the great tree, at the same time making a whistling noise as squirrels do. Instantly three squirrels come out of the tree, and, running down the trunk, they take the nuts she has in her hand for them, and go up to a place where the branches divide. Then they sit upon the landing while they crack and eat them.

"Two of them are very tame," she told us, "but one is rather wild yet."

After the tame ones had been fed, she pointed up to one of the most topmost boughs, where the "wild one" sat, looking down so very wistfull. The little girl kept knocking with the nut and whirring like a squirrel. Soon the little creature timidly began to come down from his high tower, halting and debating every now and then as it came nearer and nearer to the uplifted nut. At last it made one quick bound, snatched the nut, and was off to a place of safety again. The little girl told us they were going to put a squirrel-house in the tree, and try to keep them there all winter.—The Evangelist.

New Uses for the New Anæsthetic.

Dr. Fleischl, of Vienna, declares that morphinism, alcoholism, and similar habits can now be cured rapidly and painlessly by means of cocaine chloride. The method is very simple—a withdrawal, either gradual or abrupt and complete of the habitual intoxicant, and treatment of the nervous and other symptoms which arise therefrom by means of hypodermic injection of cocaine. He claims that in ten days a cure may be affected in any case. The does of cocaine chloride, hypodermically, is from one-twelfth to one-fourth of a grain, dissolved in water, repeated as necessary.

Graham mush is a good substitute for pudding on certain occasions. Make just as you do corn-meal mush, but add a few raisins or English currants. Serve with cream and sugar.

A dish for breakfast is made of cold boiled sweet potatoes. Remove the skins, rub the potatoes through a colander, make into cakes, dip into meal, and fry in hot butter.

STYLES IN SUICIDES.

The Different Modes of Shuffling Off a Mortal Coil.

"Suicides," said a well-known physician of Boston, recently, "are getting very fashionable of late, and the strange part of it is that the people who commit them are those whom nobody would suspect of having any kind of trouble, for the real cause of self-murder is usually some sort of worriment, either real or imaginary.

"It is something that has developed inside of the past fifty years. In old times people did't have half as many comforts as they do now, and suicides were very rare. Many different means of extinguishing the 'vital spark' are adopted. Just now taking poison and shooting appear to be the favorites. Many of the attempts prove unsuccessful. The stomach-pump saves some, and unsteady aim or lack of knowledge as to where the vital places are causes a deal of suffering to amateurs with the revolver. Love-sick young women have a fondness for drowning, but they generally cry out for help as soon as they get into the water, and about one-half of them are rescued. That is a queer thing about suicides; if they don't succeed in killing themselves or becoming unconscious at once they get over the mania and want to live as badly as any of us. On the whole, I think hanging the most reliable. Unless a person is discovered and cut down inside of five minutes he is pretty sure to do the job for himself. It is strange how a little pressure on the windpipe affects people. Of course it chokes them, but that is no reason why they shouldn't be able to move their limbs. They seem to lose all control over their muscles, and give right in. I remember a case that occurred in Brooksville, Me., when I was a young man. A woman, the wife of a wealthy sea-captain, threw a skein of yarn over the top of an open door one day, and, sticking her head through the bight that hung down, doubled up her knees so her feet could not touch, and remained in that position until she choked to death. One would naturally think that when she became unconscious her muscles would relax and allow her feet to drop to the floor, but such was not the case. Hanging or choking seems to make every muscle as rigid as iron.

"Another case I remember very well was that of a boy of Frankfort. When he was about 14 years of age he went to a circus and became stage-struck. He used to be practicing all the time at acrobatic feats. One day his folks went out to the barn and found him dead, hanging from a scaffold with his head in a noose. The ends of the line were not tied to the scaffold, but just doubled over a pole. A weight of twenty-five pounds would pull it down. Both of his hands were clasped to the pole as if he were holding himself up by them.

"Young Carter's strange death was a seven days' gossip of the community. One day a short time after it occurred some carpenters at work in a shipyard in an adjoining town were talking about it, and one of them said he had heard that if a man were to lie down with his throat pressed closely against any hard substance, like a rope or the edge of a board, he would choke to death without having the power to help himself. The men pooh-poohed the idea, and one of them became so excited that he said:

"I don't believe a word of it. When I go home to dinner I'll try it and come back and let you know. You can't stuff an old woman's whim like that down my throat.

"When the bell rang for the men to go to work at 1 o'clock the carpenter who had expressed so much contempt for the idea was not present. An hour passed and he did not come. The other men, remembering what he had said, grew anxious, and went out to look him up. Between the shipyard and his home was an old vessel hauled up on the beach to be calked. She was prevented from going out at high water by two long ropes leading from her decks to posts driven into the shore. With his face down, lying with his neck on one of these lines, while his feet rested on the sand, was their skeptical companion. He was rigid like a log of wood. The theory had been demonstrated at the expense of a man's life."—[Boston Globe.

Chinese Servants.

In New York there are hardly any Chinese in domestic service. The kitchen has not yet been invaded, nor have the upper regions, and there is no probability that either will be invaded. I do not know a single housekeeper who employs a Chinaman to do woman's work, though there may possibly be a few such, of an eccentric sort. The average housekeeper certainly does not want a Mongolian in either kitchen, parlor or bedroom. The only way in which the Chinese have interfered with woman's work is in the laundry business. The washee-washee man has undoubtedly pushed the washerwoman very hard. He has taken away a great deal of her work and he keeps all he takes. If the Chinaman remains with with us, the old race of washerwomen will disappear, for his work is more satisfactory than theirs and does not cost any more money. But in no other respect has the Mongolian encroached upon the sphere of the Caucasian female in Gotham. The talk about him driving her out of domestic service was all moonshine.

"Well, Judge, with me it is this way. I drank a great deal several years ago, taking regular sprees. Exercising a mighty effort, I stopped, but ever since then, when the time for a spree comes around, I stagger like a drunken man." "Very unfortunate, really, but the example was just as bad as though you had been drunk. I won't fine you for being drunk—" "Thank you, Judge." "But will assess you for staggering."

LIFE INSURANCE

Life insurance appears to be growing fashionable; but, it is not like many fashions or customs, which are burdensome, expensive, and of no real benefit. A life insurance is in itself, a good investment, and one within the reach of all, and the poorer a man's financial circumstances, the greater need there is for an investment of this kind. Life insurance can now be secured at actual cost, and the amount varied from $500 to any greater sum.

There are at the present time so many benifit societies in existance, and each doing a noble work, it would be a difficult task to explain their several advantages; however, we believe it the duty of every man who has a wife and family to support, to belong to some one of those societies and thus make some provision against misfortune.

There is scarcely a man in the community who could not spare say a dollar a month, which amount would under ordinary circumstances, pay the assessment on a $1,000 beneficiary certificate, which some would go a great way in relieving those left behind, from want in case of death. While it is the duty of every man to do all in his power to providefor those depending upon him for subsistence while life and health is afforded, is it not of equal importance to make provision for "A rainy day." We are taught in the good book to "Take no thought for the morrow."

Not long since the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, taking for his text: "Take no thought for the morrow, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed," commenced his sermon by announcing the fact, "I insured my life last week for £1,000, and have thus been able to carry out the injunction of the text, and not to be over anxious for the morrow, for much undue care and anxiety that I had is now laid aside, secure in the knowledge that my forethought has provided for my loved ones."

Talmage in his masterly sermon on "The high crime of not insuring." says of the Christian man who will not insure his life: "It is meanly selfish for you to be so absorbed in the heaven to which you are gowing that you forget what is to become of your wife and children after you are dead. You can go out of this world without leaving a dollar and yet die happy, if you could not provide for them; you can trust them in the hands of the God who owns the harvests and the herds and the flocks; but if you could pay the premiums on a policy and neglect them, it is a mean thing to go up to heaven while they go to the poor house. You at death move into a mansion and they move into two rooms in the fourth story of a tenement house on a back street.

What business man would think of investing his capital in buildings and mercantile goods, and not insure against fire, and what greater security has any man of his life, than that of his buildings from fire? then it is a matter of business as well as a duty we each owe to our family to provide for them. Many an industrious man labors hard through life and fails to leave as much to his family as would keep them from want six months, while he might, by paying $10 or $15 per year to a benefit society, have secured to them $2,000 at death. This matter is worthy the most serious consideration of every family.

RAILWAY MATTERS.

The interest in connection with the proposed extension of the G. T. R., from Durham via this village to Meaford is growing and the general feeling is strongly favorable toward the project. The Markdale committee have encouraging news from the G. T. R. authorities. The Flesherton Advance and Dundalk Herald very naturally oppose this route, and each propose something more favorable for their own particular village, but the route via Markdale is the shortest, and most practicable, besides having a more important terminus. There is an extensive tract of fine country between Markdale and Meaford which contains large quantities of timber of various kinds that would at once become valuable, should the railway pass through, and there is also considerable timber between this place and Durham which is too far from market to be of any value as it is.

Since the G.T.R. authorities have signified their willingness to extend this line in the near future provided certain assistance is given, and as that assistance is not, if properly apportioned, to be feared as a burdensome undertaking, we have no doubt the scheme will terminate successfully.

GOOD BYE PARTY.

On Tuesday evening, the 20th inst., a large number of Miss Minnie Rorke's young friends assembled at the residance of her uncle, W. J. McFarland's to spend an evening together e'er her departure for College. A very pleasant and sociable time was spent, during which W. J. McFarland presented the guest of the evening with a beautiful engraved solid gold watch and chain, in fine plush satin watch box, with the following inscription engraved on dome:—"To Minnie from W. J. McF. Temvus Fugit (Time Flies)."

PRESENTATION.

A few evenings after the above, a committee waited on Miss Rorke, when the following address was presented, together with a beautiful toilet bracket.

ADDRESS.

To Miss Minnie Rourke:

We the business men, and your many friends of Markdale and vicinity, understanding you have resigned your position as Post Mistress, which situation you have held for the past eight years, and are about leaving for a College course, feel it due to you to make some slight recognition of your service to us; in so faithfully, carefully, and efficiently discharging the important duties of the office incumbent on you. We have always found you obliging, attentive, and pleasant, with an earnest desire to please accomidate, and give satisfaction in your official relation, Your amibility, and social qualities have won for you many warm hearted and true friends, whose best wishes, and prayers will follow you constantly in all the walks of life, trusting your future may be prosperous, and happy, and useful in whatever sphere providence may deem it wise to place you in. We hope in your course of studies at college, you will fine much to profit the intellectual nature God has so fully endowed you with; and so develop its powers, that your future usefullness may be greatly increased. You are intrusted with talents to improve, seek to so put them in use, that the commendation may finally be yours: "Well done good and faithful servant." As an expression of our esteem, we beg to present you with this illuminated address, supplemented with a ladies' silver toilet bracket. Satisfied that you will appreciate the motives that have prompted their presentation. May the lines fall to you in pleasant places.

Signed on behalf the subscribers:

Wm. Brown, Esq., Merchant;
Wm. Young;
G. S. Bowes;
G. Haskett;
C. W. Rutledge.;

This was entirely unexpected, and took Minnie completely by surprise. She replied in a few well chosen words.

THE MASQUERADE.

The skating carnival which took place on the Markdale rink on Tuesday night was the best ever held in this place. The ice was in good order and the attendance large. A number came from Dundalk, who carried off many of the prizes. There were a large number of masquers, and an enjoyable time was spent throughout. The 25 lap race was a most exciting one, resulting in a victory for J. Gibbons of Dundalk. He and J. W. Sproule of this place, have decided on a match to take place in Owen Sound on the 3rd Feb., for $50 a side. The prizes are as follows:—

Lady and Gent race, Minnie Dundas and F. F. Middleton; Best Lady Skater under 17, Mabel Mathews; Best Lady Skater over 17, Miss H. Purvis; Worst Skater, Rudd Mathews; Best Looking Lady on the rink, Minnie Cornwall; Best Dressed Lady, Mrs. Dr. Griffin, Dundalk; Best Fat Man, Rudd Mathews; Best Nigger Swell, S. M. Smythe; Back Race, open to all, F. F. Middleton, Dundalk; Worst Looking Man, Frank Porter; Boys Barrel Race, Alfred Hall, Dundalk; Boys Race under 14 years, Willie Dundas; Open Skating Race, 25 laps, Joseph Gibbons 1st, J. W. Sproule 2nd.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—Last week's Advance had a lengthy editorial on railway extension, also an anonymous communication anent the same subject, which requires a brief notice. Firstly, on behalf of the committee, I have to thank the editor and also his nameless correspondent, for their timely criticism and more especially the partial though unintentional endorsation of the scheme which I had the honor to lay before your numerous readers.

Certainly if an extension via Flesherton and Eugenia to Thornbury would be practical and successful, much more would that by Markdale to Meaford—this we hold to be self-evident.

The two points brought prominently forward, both in the editorial and the communication referred to, are first the impracticability of the route proposed, compared with that by Flesherton and Eugenia, and secondly its financial unfeasibility.

We would remind the editor that the "Spur of the Blue Mountains" which he seems to dread, has no existence west of the valley of the Beaver River, consequently this Blue Mountain "Bugaboo" cannot interfere with a line between Markdale and Meaford, however it might menace that between Eugenia and Thornbury.

Of course the editor and probably his nameless correspondent, as Flesherton men would naturally wish to see the extension of the G. T. via that place and Eugenia to somewhere rather than by Markdale the rival village—this is human nature, and with such a desire we have no cause of quarrel; but we cannot repress the thought that the man who can see, or profess to see greater physical difficulties to railroad construction between Markdale and Meaford than between Eugenia and Thornbury is greatly troubled with visual paralaxity liable to warp his judgment.

Your numerous readers interested in railroad extension will be pleased to hear that the Committee are in receipt of encouraging information from all quarters, that from the General Manager of the G. T. R. is most satisfactory. We have hopes that as soon as the present stringency in the money market passes away, the extension from Durham to Meaford will be among the first schemes which will occupy the attention of the G. T. authorities. Every municipality yet heard from speak hopefully, some are sanguine and volunteer substantial aid. As for the financial aspect of the question it is yet premature to outline the shape which the scheme may ultimately decide, yet the following may be regarded as not far from the mark:

A bonus of $110,000.00 will be asked from the municipalities, distributed as follows:—Meaford $10,000, St. Vincent $25,000, Euphrasia $40,000, Artemesia $15,000, Holland $10,000, Glenelg $10,000, and probably Durham might give "another $10,000." Then the Ontario Government would doubtless give a grant of $2,000 per mile, which would, taking 40 miles as the distance, allowing for curvatures, amount to $80,000. This would afford a substantial financial basis to begin with, and the G. T. R. would gladly furnish the balance in order to reach one of the finest harbors on the Georgian Bay. These hints are thrown out to furnish food for reflection and prepare the minds of the people for an intelligent consideration of the whole matter pro and con. Other aspects of the question will be dealt with at some future time.

Local cotems, circulating in the municipalities named, will please copy.

WM. BROWN,
Sec. Com.

Markdale, Jan. 26, '85.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—In last week's issue of your interesting paper I see "Outsider" attempts a reply to my last explanation of the S. S. trouble here. He begins by indulging in personalities—a very unfair and cowardly thing to do when he is not man enough to put his signature to the bottom of his articles. I suppose he endorses the sentiment of the poet he quotes; if so, it shows that he has about as absurd and erroneous ideas on the subject of education as he has on some other subjects he speaks of.

He is not pleased because he was so flatly contradicted; but says I write in a self-contradictory style; but fails to show it. I wrote facts, and facts never contradict themselves.

In the face of facts to show different his contention still is that the contracting parties to the Union were judicially united. He still leaves out the 27 families, and tries to make out that the Union only embraces 12 Canada Methodists and 3 or 4 Primitive Methodist families. The thing is absurd, and all in the immediate neighborhood know differently. And how any man can think that a school in which "Isms" are taught can be productive of more good in a mixed neighborhood like this, than a Union one where all may feel at home, is more than I can see or understand.

"Outsider" must be very near sighted if he imagines that the steps taken by his much abused aged minister in this matter is going to be for the ultimate benefit of Methodism here or elsewhere. What do they preach for? To make money, or an easy living? or to save souls? If the latter, which I hope, how are they going to save them if they, by their uncharitable acts, shut outsiders out in the cold, or drive them away entirely?

Oh, yes, Mr. "Outsider," I hear of a meeting called in the church, packed with a few of Mr. McD's special friends, shall I call them? I heard too, that no business was done, except that a member was appointed by the pastor to call a meeting of all interested parties to try to come to some amicable settlement. But before the set time his reverence, who, it would appear, got further instructions, summarily told that member that it was going to humble him too much to settle it that way (!) and announced, after preaching that he wanted all ticket members to meet him the next evening there. I heard they met, Mr. McD. read the new M. S. S. constitution, asked who were willing to support him in enforcing it, allowed no questions to be asked—no remarks to be made—without giving time for consideration forced the vote when eight were independent, enough to stand out for freedom. You see you give part of the truth only, but perhaps that was all you got, if you were not present.

I admit that no school were formed and operated by other sects solely, because it was a Union school when first started and never was a Primitive Methodist school, but was managed by a Presbyterian superintendent for years.

"Outsider" would fain draw me out as to my religious belief, and to please him I would say I believe in the inspired Word of God and in most of the doctrines as set forth by Methodism, but not the practices of some of them. I also believe in the right of every man to think, speak and act for himself, independent of ism or party, but subject to law; and I wish it to be understood I speak for no faction or party of which "Outsider" falsely accuses me, but give my own candid convictions; and if tolerance and forbearance were necessary in the past I think they are just as much so now.

I never wished to dictate to the Methodist body, but have been an admirer of their zeal so long as it has been according to knowledge; of course he and his pastor too probably hopes to oil and lick over the wound made, and that he has succeeded in driving things his own way, and now hopes they will all "Fall into line" and submit more gracefully in future. Well, maybe so, maybe so. Good bye, "Outsider," but I guess I won't pay you for your soft soap..

A GOOD START.—The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church gave their first social of the season last evening (Wednesday) at the residence of Mr. Robert Torry, Glenelg, which was well attended and a most enjoyable evening spent. Mr Torry has erected a fine substantial and very comfortable brick house the past summer, the room and other accomodations were the very best, Mr. and Mrs. T. have the unanimous thanks of the society for their generous hospitality. We hope they may long live to enjoy their present comforts, the result of industry and economy. Proceeds of social over $17.

THE STANDARD is published as regular as clock work, on Thursday each week and it is a rare thing to hear a subscriber complain of his paper not coming to hand regularly; even those hundreds of miles distant, often communicate their gratification on account of the regularity of its weekly appearance. The reputation the STANDARD office enjoys for dispatch in filling orders for job printing, whether by mail or otherwise, is also most satisfactory both to our customers and ourselves. We shall use our best endeavors in future to merit a continuance of that generous patronage and friendly business relationship which now exists.

THE Flesherton Advance of last week says: "Our northern friend, of the Standard, is disposed at times to be rather critical. Last week he (?) wrote a letter to his own paper, in which he compared the market reports as published in THE ADVANCE with those published in the Standard, and finds that there is a difference in favor of his paper," &c. How the Editor of the Advance can manufacture a lie and publish it with so little concern would appear strange to some, but we have become so accustomed to seeing this class of literature in the Advance we are constantly expecting it and are not therefore surprised. The letter above referred to was not written, or dictated or suggested by us, and we knew nothing of it until it was sent in for publication.

FOR THE FARMER.

About Swine Feeding.

The first thing a farmer should consider is, to have healthy hogs, and in order to secure this he must provide a variety of food, and give them comfortable quarters. My pigs were fed, last winter, corn, roots, wheat middlings and buckwheat bran. This winter they are fed the same, with the addition of raw apples, of which I purchased eight hundred bushels, mostly for the pigs. Warm sheds, or rather pens, are constructed in a sunny corner of the fields adjoining the buildings and here the pigs are being wintered, in lots of a dozen or less in each. They have plenty of room in which to stir about; and are fed in a spot where the cold winds do not reach them. One fruitful cause of disease with pigs is, exposure to a cold wind when just out of a hot nest where, perhaps, they have been piled upon each other The sudden change of temperature may be as great as twenty or thirty degrees, enough, anyway, to cause colds, which may assume the form of pleurisy, quinsy, inflammation of the lungs or bowels. Sleeping under the straw stack, and feeding on the open ground in a raking wind, lay the foundation for many diseases. If the farmer has made no provision for feeding his hogs, other than corn, let him give them clover hay. This may cause the exclusive corn feeder to smile, but he should remember that this is not only a change of food, but that clover contains the very elements the corn lacks. If his hogs have been so pampered that they have no appetite for such food, then get a breed which has, and let "early maturity" mean, with him, a healthy body, ready to slaughter. I care not whether the pig weighs one hundred, two hundred, or three hundred pounds, so long as this weight has been made at a profit. Good appetites are the result of good bodies and good bodies cannot be made without a variety of food. With good appetites and strong digestion, coarse and cheap foods can be utilized, and herein is the best basis for profit. Let corn come in as an aid in fattening swine, but not as the all in all in pig-feeding.

More Brain-Power on the Farm.

About the best use a farmer can make of himself is, to devote the present long winter evenings to an increase of his mental activity. Farms differ in their productiveness, mainly according to the amount of intelligence that is brought to their cultivation. Brain-power may be increased by a thorough knowledge of the present condition of the farm, and its worth as a machine for making money. What crops have paid, and what have been raised and sold at less? What per cent. has it paid on the capital invested? In the case of the gain, what secured it? Was it the manure applied, or the frequent tillage, or the extra amount of rainfall? In case of loss, was it the want of fertilizers, was the crop choked by weeds, or was the seed poor, and the crop damaged by late planting? This accounting for failures is as profitable as bragging over big crops, without making any record of the process of obtaining them. Brain power may be increased by planning improvements. There may be several acres of peat-swamp or bog meadow, producing only brush and bog hay, hardly worth cutting There is a good outlet, and it can be drained three feet or more deep. Cipher out the cost of drainage, and of making it produce three tons of clover or Timothy to the acre. Would not the sight of the waving heads of the grass be more pleasing than the cat-tails, flags, and skunk-cabbages, that now waste their sweetness upon the desert air? There may be an acre of swale, underlaid with hard-pan, over which ferns, weeds, and aquatic grasses run riot during the whole summer. Is it not time the bottom was knocked out of it, by tiles laid three or four feet in the ground, and the superfluous water compelled to go out through these instead of creeping lazily over the surface? It can be made the best grass land on the farm. Why not make it so, and handle the dollars that come from maximum crops? Brain power can be increased by reading and digesting the instructive contents of agricultural papers.

Profitable Feeding of Cows.

Where milk is sold at high prices near cities, it may pay a dairyman to overfeed his cows with brewer's grains and articles of the kind, to stimulate milk production, without regard to their health: but for the general farmer, it is important not only to have a good cow, but to keep her in health for a number of years. At present prices of dairy products, I do not see what profit the ordinary farmer can make without, by close management, he can turn every function of his cow to account. First, of course, in importance is her milk production, but of almost equal value are her calves for veal or to raise, and finally her carcass for beef, when her milking days are over. While admitting that the excessive milk or butter production of individuals may be so profitable, that the other elements above named may be dismissed as of relatively little importance, I feel called on to lay down as a proposition, the truth of which extensive observation and the experience of many years devoted to the breeding of animals of various kinds has convinced me. To wit: excessive or abnormal development in any one direction, destroys the balance of the system, and unless kept within proper bounds, results in acute disease or constitutional deterioration. No one believes more firmly than I do, that the average yield of our domestic animals of every kind, can be largely increased in every direction, but the improvement must be sought in improved animals, both in breed and general individual quality, and not in an over development of one organ or set of organs at the expense of the rest.—[American Agriculturist.

Keeping, Watermelons and Squashes.

We ate the last of our watermelons December the 8th, a large one, a descendant from seed brought from Virginia, a dozen years ago or more. This fruit, as usually managed, lasts only three or four weeks in the Northern States The season may be prolonged through October and November with a little pains taking. Specimens for late use should be picked about a week before they are in their best eating condition, carefully handled, and placed in a cool, dry room, where there will be no danger of frost. By the last of October they should be packed in dry sawdust, clean dry hay, or cut straw, kept in a dry room and used as wanted. The old-fashioned way of keeping crook-neck squashes, hanging up in the kitchen by a loop of woolen listing, is still in use, and is effective when the room is safe from frost. When the coal fire is not suffered to go out, they keep well through the winter. The Hubbards and Marbleheads are good keepers under similar conditions. Where there are closets against the chimney, these and other hard-shelled squashes, keep well. The great secret of success is very careful handling. As a table vegetable, and in pies, these winter squashes are hard to beat.

How Many Acres in this Field?

If one asks how many acres there are in any of our fields, nine out of ten of us will say: "Oh, about—acres." This guesswork is one of the serious defects in our practice; we guess too much. Let us be more accurate and know each month just where we stand. We can not tell just how much we have gained or lost by a crop, unless we know how much land it has occupied. If it has occupied "about" so much land, then we do not really know anything about it. To measure fields with straight sides and square corners is an easy matter; the length multiplied by the breadth will give the area. If there is a hollow running through the field, get its length by measuring along either side a certain distance from the central line, and multiplying this by the average width. No matter how many bends there may be in the central line follow it; if the bends are equal both ways, you will have the exact length; if the central line follows a continuous curve in one direction, measure it, or else measure along both sides and take one half of their sum When the area occupied by the hollow is thus determined, subtract it from the gross area of the field as previously ascertained.—[American Agriculturist.

One Poor Chamois.

We had made good progress, when of a sudden Franz gave a loud whistle and then fell flat down. The other two guides immediately followed his example and beckoned to us with excited gesticulations to behave in a similarly foolish manner. Thereupon we, too, sat down, and inquired what the purport of this performance might be. It turned out that there was a very little chamois about half a mile off. Knowing that it would be impossible to induce the guides to move on till the animal had disappeared, we seized the opportunity of taking an early breakfast. The guides meanwhile wriggled about on their stomachs, with eyes starting out of their heads, possessed by an extraordinary desire to miss no single movement of the object of their attention. "See, it moves," said Franz in a whisper. "Himmel! it is feeding," said Burgener. "It must be the same that John saw three weeks ago." "Ach! no, that was but a little one" (no true chamois hunter will ever allow that a brother sportsman can possibly have set eyes on a larger animal than himself). "Truly it is fine." "Thunderweather! it moves its head." In their excitement I regretted that I could not share, not being well versed in hunting craft; my own experience of sport in the Alps being limited to missing one marmot that was sitting on a road licking its paws. In due course the chamois walked away. Apparently much relieved by there being no further necessity to continue in former uncomfortable attitudes, the guides sat up and fell to a warm discussion as to the size of the animal.—[Above the Snow Line, Clinton Dent.

The Seal of Fidelity.

Quite recently the Canadian papers reported an anecdote of canine fidelity which, had it been told of a Roman soldier or a Hindu nurse, would have been bruited throughout the civilized world as an instance of humanity's supremest devotion to duty. The story as told to us is, that when nearing Montreal, the engine-driver of a train saw a great dog standing on the rack and barking furiously. The driver blew his whistle; yet the hound did not budge, but crouching low, was struck by the locomotive and killed.

Some pieces of white muslin on the engine attracted the driver's notice, he stopped the train and went back. Beside the dead dog was a dead child which, it is supposed, had wandered on the track and had gone to sleep. The poor watchful guardian had given its signal for the train to stop; but, unheeded, had died at its post, a victim to duty.

Rewards for Comet Finders.

H. H. Warner, of Rochester, offers two hundred dollars in gold for any new comet or a comet of 1815, found this year, and two hundred dollars for the best three thousand word essay on the causes of the recent red light appearances at sunset, the competition being open to North and South America, the West Indies, Great Britain and Australia.

Of the amount stated $1,400,000 came from saloon licenses alone, as a result of the operation of the high license law; and this represents only eight months, the law not having gone into effect until May 1.

Three great musical festivals will be held in the provinces in England this year—that at Birmingham at the latter end of August, one at Hereford in September, and another at Bristol later in the year. At the first one Gounod's "Mors et Vita" will be produced. and new works by Dvorak, Mackenzie, Stanford, Cowen, Anderton, and Prout.

Lord Rossmore, the Orange champion, has been compelled to part with his racing stud. He married the daughter of Mr. Naylor, the inheritor of an immense Liverpool fortune. Mr. Naylor has no son, and the marriage would be a great thing for Lord Rossmore if his father-in-law approved of him, but it is distinctly understood that he does not.

The translation of the "Arabian Nights" by Capt. Burton, the explorer, will probably be published in part next spring No passages will be suppressed, as the book is specially intended for students and scholars. It will be obtainable only of Capt. Burton, Trieste, Austria. Capt Burton has been 32 years at work on it. The special aim kept in view is to reproduce the book as originally written.

The London Land Agents' Record says: "Real estate is not at a premium in Kerry just now. The land agent or proprietor who escapes dynamite has too good a chance of being 'potted' with a shotgun unless he exercises the utmost caution. Probably the Kerry landlords have suffered more than almost any in Ireland. I doubt if Lord Lansdowne has cleared £8 000 a year on an average during the past ten years."

Charlotte Bennett, of Weymouth, England, was unable to procure poison, as such, with which to commit suicide, But she displayed a fine instinct for the drugs which kill when she called a well-known patent medicine to her aid. At the inquest it was shown that her friends found her dying, with an empty glass in her hand; three bottles which had contained the legalized poison were discovered in the room.

The English Journal of Education prints the following as bona fide answers to questions set in recent examinations: "William Pitt began life by playing the cornet in the Blues." "Dryden was a man in high position, Pope lower, Johnson still lower. Johnson was a frequenter of the Cock tavern in the Strand." "Zacharias and Elizabeth had a son named John. When he grew older he had his head cut off to please a young lady."

A Scotch boy, having injured his leg severely, was turned over to a local practitioner. The cure progressed slowly, and the mother, who had become very anxious, concluded to consult a "bone setter" living some miles away. The latter worked hard at the leg and at last "got the bone in" to the music of the boy's lusty screams. "Didn't the setter do it well?" asked the cheerful old lady as the pair hied homeward. "Yes, he did, mother," said the lad, "but I was na sic a fool as to gie him the sair leg."

Archdeacon Denison, the distinguished English ritualist, writing to a friend at Langport, Eng., says that the highly prized Cheddar cheese has of late years greatly deteriorated in quality and value through what he calls the "insane process of making it rapidly." It is true that enormous quantities of cheese, bearing some outward but no inward resemblance to true Cheddar, are brought to market, but nothing like the old are now to be found. American and factory imitations have taken the place of the Cheddar of years ago.

The discovery in California lately of considerable quantities of the peculiar stone used by lithographers is the subject of much remark in the papers of that State. Heretofore the best lithographic stones have been found at Kelheim and Solenhofen, near Pappenheim, on the Danube, in Bavaria; but they have been found also in Silesia, England, France, Canada, and the West Indies. They are found in beds, commencing with layers of the thickness of paper till they reach the dimensions of one and several inches in thickness, when they are easily cut, being yet soft in the quarries, to the sizes required for printing purposes.

A London real estate paper says: 'The death of Mr. Mountiford Longfield Judge of the Encumbered Estates Court, and then of the Landed Estates Court, recalls a momentous but somewhat disappointing measure. It is a dismal reflection that much Irish real estate now is, in point of selling value, about where it was when, on Oct 25, 1849, the operation of the court (which ceased Aug. 81, 1858) began. The returns of the Encumbered Court when it wound up showed that there had been 4,413 petitions, and that the total amount of purchase money was £21,161 093. Of purchasers 8 253 were Irish, and 324 English, Scotch, and others."

The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad had a busy time last spring taking settlers to southern Dakota. Fortunately for the Territory and the road and the people themselves, the settlers were accustomed to American life, being from Ohio, Wisconsin, and other Western States. The newcomers had to live under canvas or in their wagons for a time, but they got houses built, and in the main they have stayed and prospered. Had a like number of Europeans attempted settlement in any of the new States, there would have been great suffering, and final failure. The railroads do not encourage city people, nor, in fact, persons unaccustomed to American ways, to battle with the prairie.

Escapes from Siberia.

Escapes of political and other convicts from Western Siberia are more frequent than is generally supposed, but from Eastern Siberia, though often attempted, they seldom succeed. Save for convicts under sentence of penal servitude and actually imprisoned it is easy to elude the vigilance of the police and get away from a convict village or settlement, but it is almost impossible to get out of the country. The immense distances to be traversed, the terrible climate, lack of money, the absolute necessity of keeping to the highroads prove, except in a very few instances, insuperable obstacles to final success. In order to be really free, moreover, it is imperative for a fugitive not alone to pass the frontier of European Russia, but to reach some country where he runs no risk of falling into the clutches of the imperial police. Even in Germany he is liable to be recaptured, and is really safe only in England, France, or Switzerland. Hence, to make good a flight from Eastern Siberia requires a conjuncture of so many favorable and nearly impossible circumstances as to render a complete escape a rare and remarkable event. But the incentives to escape are as great as the obstacles to success. No life can be more horrible than that of a political exile in the far east or far north of Siberia. Even at Irkoutsk the mean temperature is 50 ° below the freezing point of Reaumur; for many months of the year the sun in some parts of the country shines but two or three hours in the twenty-four, and for days together darkness covers the face of the land. A man untrained to manual labor, or unacquainted with the arts of trapping and killing wild animals and collecting peltry, turned adrift in the remoter parts of Siberia, runs the risk of perishing of hunger and cold. A Russian refugee, now at Geneva, tells that, during his sojourn in Eastern Siberia, he spent the greater part of the long winter in bed, rising only to swallow some rancid oil, the sole food he could obtain. To escape from such a life as this a man will risk almost anything. Even incarceration in a central prison, or the penal servitude of the mines, can hardly be more terrible. The trouble is, that the way to freedom lies through Western Siberia and Russia in Europe. The road south is barred by the wild tribes that haunt the frontiers of Mongolia and Manchuria, who either kill or give up to the Russians all the fugitives that fall into their hands.

The Panama Canal.

Capt. Bedford Pim, of the British navy, gives the result of his observations along the route of the De Lesseps canal across the Isthmus of Panama. He says that over sixty million dollars has been expended in the work thus far; that less than three miles of the contemplated forty-one miles of waterway have been opened; that even this section is by no means completed; that, owing to the nature of the soil and stone strata, it would be impossible for a force of ten thousand laborers to complete the total excavation of the canal in less than fifteen years, and that to protect the work from overflow by the Chagres River would require five years of great industry and immense outlay.

How to Avoid the Press of Business.

"It is a matter of life and death. You are overworked, sir, and must take a rest."

"That is impossible, doctor. My best men are all sick, my customers are coming in by the hundreds, and I must be at my post."

"If your custom should temporarily drop off you could then find time to rest, couldn't you?"

"Certainly; but how can I temporarily stop all my old patrons from rushing in on me, even if the case should be, as you say, a matter of life and death!"

"Easy enough. Stop advertising!"

They had been quarreling. "Before we were married," she sobbed, "you would go out with me anywhere." "Well what of it?" "Now I don't believe you would even go to my funeral." Ah! wouldn't I, though?"

USEFUL RECEIPTS.

Pancake.—A novelty in pancakes is made in this way; To two eggs allow two ounces of flour, a little salt, and milk enough to make a batter of medium thickness. Beat the eggs until they are very light before adding the flour; put a lump of butter into a saucepan and then pour in enough batter to make one large cake; put in just enough to cover the bottom of the pan nicely, as the cake should be so thin that it will not need to be turned. When the pancake is done sprinkle powdered sugar over it and roll it up; put on a hot plate, and when you have three or four done send them to the table. To make these cakes very delicate, flavor with a little lemon. A little thick raspberry jam may be rolled in them if you please.

Corn Bread in Cups.—Two and one-half cups Indian meal; one cup flour; three tablespoonfuls cornstarch; three tablespoonfuls shortening; three eggs; one teaspoonful soda; and three and one-half cups thick sour milk; add salt at discretion. It should be a thin batter. Bake quickly in small tins or cups. It is best to soak the meal at night, or at least several hours in the sour milk, adding the other ingredients just before baking.

Cream Cake.—Three eggs, one coffee cup of sour cream with a teaspoonful of tartar stirred in, one and one half cups of sugar, two and one-half cups of flour, one-half cup of water with a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in it, one cup of currants, a pinch of salt, and a little grated nutmeg. After baking, cover while hot with a soft frosting made by stirring pulverized sugar into the unbeaten white of an egg. Stir it only enough to mix thoroughly into a thick paste, then thin it with lemon juice and spread on at once.

Scalloped Codfish—Season one pint of rich milk with a little salt and pepper. Put it over the fire, and when heated and a generous lump of butter with a teaspoonful of corn starch rubbed into it. Let the gravy boil up once, then set it off with a cover on the saucepan to keep the contents warm Put a layer of thinly sliced cold potatoes on the bottom of a baking dish. Have ready a cupful of soaked and shredded salt codfish; put a thin layer of this over the potato: Chop six hard-boiled eggs—they must be cooked fully twelve minutes to insure their not being sticky. Spread a thin layer of egg over the fish, then begin again with a thick layer of the potato, and so on till the dish is full. Pour the cream gravy on, sprinkle bread-crumbs thickly over the top, and bake for fifteen or twenty minutes. The dish makes a good substitute for meat at dinner.

Ginger Snaps.—These ginger snaps are very crisp, and keep well. One coffee cup of butter and lard mixed, one coffee cup brown sugar, one cup of molasses, half cup of water, one tablespoonful ginger, one tablespoonful cinnamon, one teaspoonful cloves, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in hot water, flour enough for pretty stiff dough. Roll out very thin and bake quickly. The spices must all be ground.

Washing Fluid.—One pound of washing soda, quarter pound unslacked lime (or a teacupful of good whitewash), one gallon of water. Boil up and set aside to settle. Use one teacupful to each boiler of clothes, and it will take out dirt and stains with almost no rubbing: and I have never thought that it injured clothes in the least. I have never found any machine or soap equal to it for lightening the labor of washing.

TROUBLOUS TIMES IN RUSSIA.

Nihilists Accused of Stealing Money and Hatching New Plots.

The police of Russia have received some startling information about the doings and designs of the Nihilists. It is said that the Nihilists are now engaged in a conspiracy to murder certain officials, who have incurred the hatred of the order, by means of poison. In the effort to thwart the conspiracy a circular has been sent to all the principal officials in the empire warning them against the employment of new servants who are not strongly vouched for, and cautioning them against the acceptance of food or drink from any one not known to be trusty.

Ever since last September numerous defalcations and embezzlements by minor officials connected with the treasuries of Russian cities have come to light. The thieves have invariably proved to have been connected with the Nihilist organization and little or none of the stolen money has been recovered. It is feared that the Nihilists have now obtained sufficient funds to organize a well-planned attempt upon the life of the Czar.

There is no longer any doubt that the attempt to wreck the special train on the Gatschina Railway, which was conveying the Czar to St Petersburg, was a deliberate attempt upon the life of the sovereign, and the body of the sentinel found by the side of the railway just where the train was expected to leave the track furnished ample proof of the malignity of the assassins. That narrow escape has considerably shaken the Czar's nerves. He is now virtually a hermit in his gorgeous Winter Palace on the Neva Perspective, and he looks forward with superstitious dread to the first of March, which will be the fourth anniversary of the murder of his father.

More Than the Circus Poster Advertised.

An equestrienne in a Russian circus, after going through several daring and difficult feats, flourished a revolver, placed the muzzle to her temple, and while her horse was in full career fired and dropped dead upon the saw-dust. Such an attraction must be fearfully draining on the company, but it is sure to draw like a corkscrew or a porous plaster.

HORSES.

MISTAKEN KINDNESS.

I find that a great deal of the care exercised in the regimen of horses by all classes of people is—like the unwise petting and coddling of children—a source of mischief, and often constitutes positive cruelty.

Some of the kindest and most tender-hearted persons in the world spend time and money, and exercise their minds in various ways, with the intention of doing for their horses the best that can be done; yet, in their misconceived efforts, doing, in some particulars, the worst things possible. That is to say of two evils which may present themselves, they choose the greatest, or as between a good and an evil, they choose the evil, by following blindly the prevalent "customs of the country"—doing all this year just as they did last, combating and even resenting the suggestions of those who essay to introduce innovations. A single illustration will serve to show my meaning and possibly add to the comfort of some of my equine friends: A horse comes to stable from a sharp drive, perspiring freely the steam rising like a heavy mist about him, and the "go-by-rule" hostler, in the kindness of his heart, as soon as the harness is removed (a rubbing down being just then impossible, perhaps) throws the woollen blanket, perhaps two of them, if in severe cold weather, over the steaming animal, and leads him to the stall; and he will do this—even his employer would direct it—in the very face of the suggestion from a bystander that the effect is to saturate the blanket almost as though dipped in water, so that in half an hour the condition is precisely as though the boy had thrown a wet blanket over him at the start. A few minutes on the stable floor, or in his stall, unblanketed, would change the whole phase of the subject, and then the dry, warm blanket would remain dry. Of course the question remains open as to the desirability of blanketing horses at all; there is much to be said on the side of leaving him in his natural coat, much depending, however, upon other considerations affecting the question. Again, a horse is observed to have lost his appetitite, his hay and grain remaining untouched or partly eaten. The kind-hearted owner leaves the food in the manger, for his horse to eat when he wants it, and explains to the "women folks" that "Tom" is "off his feed," and they must use "Billy," or forego their drive—a little jaunt about town, perhaps, and just what overfed and underworked Tom needed, while Billy was well enough to stay indoors, if necessary! But of this more will be said later on.

INSTINCT IS REASON.

The intelligence of men, so often and in so many particulars, resembles the instinct of dumb animals, that I find therein an unanswerable argument in favor of the view that the difference between our reason and theirs is one of degree only. In point of fact, we find instances wherein exceptionally intelligent animals are positively the superiors, in all that gives evidence of logical thinking, of exceptionally unintelligent men. It is instinct only (if we are to distinguish between instinct and reason) which prompts a man to speedily blanket a steaming and heated horse; it is reason which impels another to refrain from the act. It is instinct which prompts most men to feed their horses just so often and at just such times, irrespective of their work or their physical condition; it is reason which impels one to withhold a feed, or to give his horse a fast-day, or to reduce the number of his meals, if it should be found from the experience of others that less are better. There are times when the regular "feed," however hungry the horse may be, is extremely cruel—times, indeed, when it means a painful death. Horses do not die from overdriving alone, at least not often. I am inclined to think that in 99 cases in the hundred, when this is the supposed cause of death, and when without such over-exertion the horse might have continued to live, except for some wrong condition connected with his diet, he would still not only have lived, but would have withstood the great strain without harm; in other words, what proved too great a strain for him, fed as he was, would not have been excessive, or, at least, not fatal, had he been fitted for it by judicious treatment, and had the strain been succeeded by reasonable, or reasoning, care, instead of routine care, which I place under the head of instinctive. Often enough, it is the care and treatment which are most kindly intended that kill or break down animals prematurely, and put them, as before remarked, into the keeping of those who can only obtain the ownership of cheap horses; and such persons, by continuing the very means which have made their horses dyspeptic and emaciated, keep them so and prevent the recovery which might often be assured by a strictly hygienic and curative regimen.

A Lake Erie Mystery.

Quite an excitement has been occasioned at Eagle, in Aldboro township, by the finding of some mysterious kegs sunk in Lake Erie. They were first discovered by some young men in swimming last fall, but owing to their great weight it was not possible to remove them from the water. During the past week the tubs have attracted a great deal of attention from a report current in Aldboro that a man named Wrightman had got one of the kegs on shore, and found it filled with gold ingots, which he had immediately transported to Ohio. Since this report boats have been numerous in the vicinity, and the sand bank has been pretty well searched. People who have no romance in their composition say that a number of old paint pots were thrown into the lake at that point, and becoming filled with sand have aroused all this excitement amongst the credulous.

Honest Dogs.

Chamber's Journal.

It is related by Professor Bell that when a friend of his was travelling abroad, he one morning took out his purse to see if it contained sufficient change for a day's jaunt he proposed making. He departed from his lodgings, leaving a trusted dog behind. When he dined, he took out his purse to pay, and found that he had lost a gold coin from it. On returning home in the evening his servant informed him the dog seemed to be very ill, as they could not induce it to eat anything. He went at once to look at his favorite; and as soon as he entered the room, the faithful creature ran to him, deposited the missing gold coin at his feet, and then devoured the food placed for it with great eagerness. The truth was that this gentleman had dropped the coin in the morning; the dog had picked it up, and kept it in its mouth, fearing to eat, lest it should lose its master's property before an opportunity offered to restore it.

Anecdotes of this character are innumerable, as are also those of dogs reclaiming property belonging, or which has belonged, to their owners. Sir Patrick Walker furnishes a most valuable instance of this propensity in our canine cousins. A farmer having sold a flock of sheep to a dealer, lent him his dog to drive them home, a distance of thirty miles, desiring him to give the dog a meal at the journey's end and tell it to go home. The drover found the dog so useful that he resolved to steal it, and instead of sending it back, locked it up. The collie grew sulky, and at last effected its escape. Evidently deeming the drover had no more right to detain the sheep than he had to detain itself, the honest creature went into the field, collected all the sheep that had belonged to its master, and, to that person's intense astonishment, drove the whole flock home again!

Dogs are not only honest in themselves, but will not permit others to be dishonest. The late Grantley Berkeley was wont to tell of his two deerhounds, "Smoker" and Smoker's son "Shark," a curiously suggestive instance of parental discipline. The two dogs were left alone in a room where luncheon was laid out. Smoker's integrity was invincible; but his son had not yet learned to resist temptation. Through the window Mr. Berkeley noticed Shark, anxiously watched by its father, steal a cold tongue and drag it to the floor. "No sooner had he done so," says his master, "than the offended sire rushed upon him, rolled over him, beat him, and took away the tongue"; after which Smoker retired gravely to the fireside.

Christmas in Bengal.

At sunrise the ever-grateful cup of tea is conveyed to each before rising through the ayah or bearer, and by and by the guests drop into the veranda to enjoy the only fresh air of the day, and partake of the chota hazri (little breakfast) which is already waiting. Coffee and tea, with toast, eggs, and fowl, are the usual items of this meal, and while engaged with it you get a view from between the veranda pillars of a dead level country, with patches of jungle here and there amid wide tracts of cultivated land, while in the foreground stretches a velvety compound interspersed with ornamental banyan and india rubber trees, clumps of bamboos, shrubs, and flowers. Winding along the avenue presently appear four great elephants, which soon draw up in front of the bungalow, and ayahs, bearers, and children, suddenly entering on the scene, turn everything into commotion. Servants hurry to and fro with guns, ammunition, and sporting gear, which the sportsmen see safely deposited in the howdahs; and, lastly, they themselves mount by a swing on the elephant's trunk, or by the rope-ladder that hangs from the side of the howdah, and the mahout gets the order to march. The ladies and children are to join them at breakfast a few hours later at the camp pitched on the hunting-ground. Meanwhile, to pass the time, some of the ladies sauntered down to the garden under an archway of acacia and other tropical trees that line the avenue; while through the leafy canopy glances the genial sun of the cold season with pleasant warmth, illuminating beautiful flowering creepers, parasites, and trailers that have entwined themselves among the foliage.

Camels Fond of Tobacco.

A Dongolo letter to the London "Telegraph" says: Knowing what I do about camels, I fear the brutes will do as much for us as the Nile whaleboats in the way of maiming and invaliding our men. Perhaps I am prejudiced against camels, for being a non-smoker myself, I have just discovered my camel is an inveterate lover of the weed. Let any one smoke a pipe, cigar or cigarette in the compound called stables, and the camel will follow the smoker about, place his nose close to the burning tobacco, inhale the fumes with a prolonged sniff, swallowing the smoke, then throwing his head up, with mouth agape and eyes upturned showing the bloodshot whites, will grunt a sigh of ecstacy that would make the fortune of a low comedian in a love scene. This is the plain unvarnished fact, easy of corroboration. What have the Anti-Tobacco League to say about it?

Easy Enough to Get His Feet Wet.

"There, see that boy, Job," said Mrs. Shuttle, excitedly. "Wading in the water up to his knees. I belive he doesn't know enough to come in when it rains."

"Don't seem as if he did. Hasn't he rubber boots on?"

"Of course, but what of that? He'll get his feet wet just the same."

"Boots leak?"

"No."

"Then how does he get his feet wet?"

"I'd ask how did you get your feet wet when you was a boy?"

"I went barefoot."

DOMESTIC AND USEFUL.

German silver has no silver in its composition. It is a compound of copper, zinc and nickel.

In polishing black marble wash it with warm soap and water, and when dry rub it well with furniture paste or French polish, and then rub it with an old silk handkerchief. After one or two trials it will become quite bright.

Parisians declare that the sceptre of the day is a needle, and that the millionaires are tailors, dressmakers and milliners; but the needle in the hand of a great Parisian tradesman is a different sort of weapon from that sceptre in the hand of a working-woman.

To cook scalloped chicken take equal parts of cold chicken, boiled rice or macaroni, and tomato sauce. Put in layers in a shallow dish, and cover with buttered crumbs; bake till brown. Cold roast turkey, using stuffing and gravy, may be prepared in the same way.

In making beet hash take cold boiled beets and potatoes, one-third beets and two-thirds potatoes; hash them, and fry or stew in milk and butter, with salt and pepper. Heat slowly and thoroughly. This is nice for a breakfast. Beets and carrots may be cooked in the same way.

Bronze may be renovated and re-colored by the use of a mixture of one part of muriatic acid with two parts of water. After the article is freed from all grease and dirt the diluted acid is carefully applied with a cloth. When the solution is dry the article is well polished with fine olive oil.

Professor Brinton says that the best thing for a sprain is to put the limb into a vessel of very hot water immediately, then add boiling water as it can be borne. Keep the part immersed for twenty minutes, or until the pain subsides; then apply a tight bandage and order rest. Sometimes the joint can be used in twelve hours. If necessary use a silicate of sodium dressing.

Sago custard, which is both nourishing and palatable, is made by soaking two tablespoonsful of sago in a half pint of cold water for an hour and a half, then boil it in the same water until it looks clear, then add a tumbler of sweet milk, let this boil for a minute or two, add sugar to your taste, and when you remove it from the fire add one well-beaten egg, and flavoring to your taste.

GINGERBREAD PUDDING.—Eight ounces of bread crumbs, four ounces of flour, four of suet, a teaspoonful of baking powder, the same of ground ginger, half a teaspoonful of mixed spice, and the same of salt; six ounces of treacle, one egg, and a quarter of a pint of milk. Mix all the dry ingredients first; warm the treacle, and stir it well in with the egg and milk. Boil in a greased basin (leaving a little room for the pudding to swell) for three hours. Currants, raisins, or chopped figs will improve this pudding.

Strength of the Sword Fish.

The power of a sword fish has always been admitted, and instances have not been altogether uncommon of his attacking vessels and burying his formidable weapon in them. A case has just occurred which shows that the strength of the fish is even greater than was suspected. The three-masted schooner "Themis," of Boston, lately put into port leaky. On her voyage from Mobile she was suddenly found to be making water fast. The crew were set to the pumps, and found that they were able to keep down the water, but that steady work was required. The hands, therefore, shifted the cargo, and at last found the hole, which was caused by the sword or horn of a sword fish. It had passed through the copper sheathing of the ship, through the outer planking, four and-a-half inches in thickness, through the nine inch space between that and the lining, and then through the inner planking, another four and-a-half inches thick, projecting three inches inside the the ship. The force required to send a blunt weapon like this through nine inches of solid wood must have been immense, and had it not been that the horn was exhibited in situ when the vessel reached port it would have been difficult to believe it. The sword fish, who, no no doubt, thought the dark mass passing over him was a whale, must have been pretty well astonished and disgusted at the result of his attack.

Levity for Lawyers.

The successful lawyer finds his avocation the most profitable per-suit.

The wit of eminent lawyers in our modern courts is essentially fee bill.

A shrewd lawyer never refuses a case—not even a case of champagne.

There is only one lawyer in the Indiana penitentiary, and it is just fun to see how all the other convicts dodge him.

A New Orleans lawyer has made himself round-shouldered carrying law books into court. Some Philadelphia lawyers have made themselves round-shouldered carrying their fees home.

"A journalist," said the lawyer, "is a man who has employment without a profession." "A lawyer," retorted the journalist, "is a man who has a profession without employment."

"As I was coming home from the lawyer's to-day I noticed the most beautiful sealskin sacque. It cost only $300." "Why didn't you buy it, dear?" "I was just coming away from the lawyer's," I said. "Oh!"

"I don't know which of them to accept," replied Miss De Silva, thoughtfully to her mother. "Mr. Brown's father has just died and has left $1,000,000." "Yes." "And Mr. Smith is only Mr. Brown's lawyer." "Is the will to be contested?" "I believe it is, but"—— "Then I think I will marry Mr. Smith."

Purely Vegetable.

First the bud, then the blossom, then the perfect fruit. These are the several stages of some of the most important ingredients composing the painless and sure corn cure—PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR. The juice of plants greatly concentrated and purified, gums and balsams in harmonious union, all combined, give the grand results. Putnam's Extractor makes no sore spot, does not lay a man up for a week, but goes on quietly doing its work until a perfect cure results. Beware of acid substitutes.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

Compound Oxygen.

H. LINDSAY, GROCER, 60 KING STREET west, Toronto, writes:—Have suffered for years with Dyspepsia; felt great distress after eating; dared not eat bread or potatoes; thought there was no help for me; that I must suffer while I lived; was induced to try "Compound Oxygen" at 78 King street West; at the end of three weeks could eat any food I wished, and gained six pounds; have now taken one month's treatment, and feel like a new man altogether; no sign of rheumatism, which has troubled me every winter for years.

Good The Year Round.—National Pills are a good blood purifier, liver regulator and mind purgative for all seasons.

The Signs of worms are well-known, but the remedy is not always so well determined. Worm Powder will destroy them.

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tested by years of trial and has been found the most convenient and effectual method of applying Carbolic acid. The greatest anticeptic in use for Cuts, Burns and Old Sores. Be sure you get McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold for 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 6

An analysis of salt taken from the deposit recently discovered in Bothwell, Ont., shows that it is of an unusually good quality, a sample taken at a depth of one hundred feet giving 92.65 parts of pure salt. The bed is claimed to be the deepest and purest on the American continent.

WELL SPOKEN OF.

B. N. Wheeler, of Everton, speaks highly of Hagyard's Pectorial Balsam. It cures him of inflammation of the lungs and an obstinate cough. It loosens the phlegm and heals the lungs.

The largest bridge in the world crosses Lake Pontchartrain, at New Orleans, and is twenty-two miles in length. It is trestle work, on piles, and is made of cypress wood, which was first saturated with creosote oil, which renders it impervious to moisture and proof against the attack of barnacles.

A SETTLED FACT.

It is a significant fact that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy for internal and external use in case of pain, soreness, lameness, and inflammatory complaints.

A WIDE SPREAD EVIL.

The great source of consumption and of ugly sores is scrofula in the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the whole system and cure scrofula, as well as the more common blood humors.

We are glad to learn that the old T. G. & B., flat cars which were discarded at the time of the change of gauge, are at last disposed of at a good figure. They have been taken by a syndicate of Orangeville girls and will be used as roller skates.—Shelburne Free Press.

A TOTAL WRECK.

Many a strong frame has been totally wrecked by rheumatism. D. McCrimmon, of Lancaster, was cured of chronic rheumatism by Burdock Blood Bitters. It cures all blood impurities.

A minister forgot to take his sermon to church and his wife, discovering the mistake, sent it to him in charge of a small boy, who was to receive ten cents for the job. Presently he returned for the money. "You delivered the sermon, did you?" she asked. "No, mum," he replied. "I jest guv it to him; he's a deliverin' of it himself."

For The Complexion.—For Pimples, Blotches, Tan, and all itching tumors of the skin, use Prof. Low's Magic Sulpher Soap.

The Great Carnival.

Thousands upon thousands of people from all parts of the continent are going to the Montreal Carnival at the end of January. We hear the Montreal Daily Star is bringing out a magnificent Carnival number, something that will eclipse in artistic merit and absorbing interest every illustrated paper heretofore issued in this country. It will have the attack on the ice-palace and defence by the Garrison in all its magnificent pomp and brilliancy; the tobogganning-fete in its true natural beauty; the Ice-Condora after the Egyptian models, inaugurated with electric and pyrotechnic illuminations; the mammoth ice-lien (British); the great sleigh drive, embracing thousands of superb equipages, and probably the grandest thing of the kind of modern times; the fancy dress entertainments, true to nature; and a magnificent inset-plate of the ice-palace in tints—a fine picture for framing. It will be remembered that there was a tremendous furore over the last year's Carnival number of the Montreal Star, the issue running up near a quarter of a million. It is said this year's number will be far ahead of last. The artists are Bengough, Julian, Harris and Haberer. The writers, George Murray, John Reade, Dr. Beers, "Adirondack" Murray, and W. H. Turner. Grip sends for production in the Carnival Star a double page which is said to be the most side-splitting cartoon ever published in this country. Fifteen cents in stamps sent to the publishers, Graham & Co., Montreal, will secure a copy of what is said to be the greatest Illustrated paper ever issued in this country.

The Alps ...

The ancient Romans, says Professor H. Nissen, of Strasburg, saw in the Alps a kind of wall completely shutting them out from the people living beyond them, and so for centuries they hesitated to take possession of the mountain-lands, although their legions had subjected all the country at the base of the Alps to the Rhine, and had made demonstrations toward Germany and England. So great was their dread of these unknown heights that they quietly endured the audacity of the rapacious tribes inhabiting them till about fifteen years B. C. Yet Hannibal had crossed them for the first time in September of 218 B. C. This was considered a deed of such magnitude that its success was ascribed by the southern people to the assistance of the heavenly powers. The darkness that rested over the Alps was first illuminated by the historian Polybius, who visited them and described them from his own observations. Roman power was extended over them by Augustus Cæsar, B. C. 15. Afterward roads were built over them, fourteen at least, the laying out of which shows that they were made after careful studies of the situation by the engineers. The opening of the mountains to travel was followed by a great streaming of adventurers in search of the riches to be found in the regions beyond, and scenes were enacted very much like those which were witnessed a few years ago in California. At one time gold was found in such abundance that the price of the metal was depreciated thirty-four per cent. through all Italy. The treasure hunters carried vines with them and planted them wherever they settled down; and to this, in part, Germany owes its wealth in vineyards. The forests were laid waste as a matter of course, just as they are now wherever a new settlement is planted, and with similar results. The Romans had no appreciation of the beauty and grandeur of the mountains, so highly admired by modern taste, but expressed only dread of them and abhorrence of their savage aspect, which they considered well represented in the barbarous names their indwellers gave to them. They entertained the wildest ideas of the height of the mountains, which they exaggerated tremendously. Pliny, who was a native of Como, at their very foot, speaks of one of the peaks as being fifty miles high, or sixteen times as high as Mont Blanc.

The Horses of the Great Desert.

The Arabs of Sahara are very particular as to the color of their horses. White is the color for princes, but does not stand heat. The black brings good fortune, but fears rocky ground. The chestnut is the most active. If one tells you that he has seen a horse fly in the air, ask of what color it was; if he replies "chestnut," believe him. In a combat against a chestnut you must have a chestnut. The bay is the hardest and most sober. If one tells you that a horse has leaped to the bottom of a precipice without hurting himself, ask of what color he was, and if he replies "bay," believe him. Ben Dyab, a renowned chief of the desert, happening one day to be pursued by Saad-el-Zenaty, turned to his son and asked:

"What horses are in the front of the enemy?"

"White horses," replied the son.

"It is well; let us make for the sunny side and they will melt away like butter."

Some time afterward Ben Dyab again turned to his son and said:

"What horses are in the front of the enemy?"

"Black horses," cried his son.

"It is well; let us make for stony ground and we shall have nothing to fear; they are the negroes of the Soudan, who cannot walk with bare feet upon the flints."

He changed his course and the black horses were speedily distanced. A third time Ben Dyab asked:

"And now what horses are in front of the enemy?"

"Dark chestnuts and dark bays."

"In that case," said Ben Dyab, "strike out, my children, strike out, and give your horses the heel, for these might perchance overtake us had we not given barley to ours all the summer through."

Montreal's Great Carnival.

One of the most noticeable features of the Montreal Winter Carnival is a magnificent special "Carnival Number," issued by Messrs. John Dougall & Son, of the Montreal Witness. The publishers have pressed into service the most talented Canadian artists and, consequently, the result has never been equalled in Canada. The number fairly teems with illustrations, and has a gigantic four-page picture—"Storming of the Ice Castle by Night"—designed by Mr. Robert Harris, A. R. C. A. Besides this there are full page pictures by Messrs. Harington Bird, Raphael, Walker, and other leading artists, and the number also contains the Carnival Poem, appropriately illustrated, for which a prize of $100 has been paid, and a special Suppliment re-presenting the various athletic clubs and their leading men. The letterpress pages have been tastefully prepared, and contain a very large number of engravings, representing various phases of our Canadian winter sports. The price of this gorgeous number is but ten cents per copy, postpaid. Orders are filled strictly in the rotation in which they are received by John Dougall & Son, "Witness" Office, Montreal.

A WISE CONCLUSION.

If you have vainly tried many remedies for rheumatism, it will be a wise conclusion to try Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It cures all painful diseases when other medicines fail.

The Surgeons of the Ontario Sanitarian, Toronto, the largest medical association in Canada, may be consulted Free of Charge, at the Markdale House, Markdale, on Thursday, Feb. 12th, and at the Flesherton Hotel, on Friday, Feb. 13th. All chronic and lingering diseases, which baffle the skill of ordinary physicians treated. The public should bear in mind that the Surgeons of the Sanitarian, are all residents of Toronto and have no connection with any Yankee institution.

MIRIAM.

For the first time Miriam fully realized how strong had been the bond between these two—formed by the joys and the griefs, the failures and successes of those early days. She recognized, too, how deep must be the man's own grief, of which he seldom spoke; and a sudden break in his voice, or a heavy though quickly checked sigh came to hurt or distress her almost as though his pain had been her own. Of his latter life too he would often talk, and of his home in that distant land; of the large low rambling house built in the midst of a paradise of bloom; of the hurricanes which sometimes passed over it; of the plantations which were his; of the negroes who were his servants. How strange and unreal it all seemed to the two girls, yet what a charm there was in its very unfamiliarity! Or was the charm simply in Kingston Keene's voice—the result of his unconscious eloquence? He did not forget, when he talked to Ella and strove to win her from her grief, that he had another listener. Once or twice when he had perhaps managed to interest himself as well as his hearers he would look up by chance to find that besides Ella's tearful orbs another pair of eyes were fixed unconsciously on his face—eyes no longer proud and defiant and scornful, but soft and clear and womanly—eyes of the sweetest hue, and capable of the tenderest light—"les yeux gris qui vont au paradis!" His voice would falter somewhat then, and a sigh break from him, accounted as one sigh more for the sad cause of all the sighs in that sad house.

Once, quite at the beginning of the week, he had come upon the two girls in the drawing-room, and had found Ella fallen asleep on her friend's shoulder. On Miriam's face there was a drawn and weary look which struck him.

"Are you in pain?" he asked softly, for fear of awakening the sleeping girl.

Miriam's lips were white and dry.

"It is my arm," she whispered. "I dare not move Ella, she had no sleep last night; but my arm is in horrid pain. Oh, please let her be; do not wake her!"

Very tenderly Mr. Keene lifted his niece's sleeping head and laid it back on the cushions.

"Now show me your arm," he said, with gentle firmness, and turned up the sleeve as it lay helpless on her lap. "Were you not told to keep this wet with lotion?"

"Yes."

"And why don't you do it then? Why do you neglect you self? Will it add to the general happiness, do you think, to have you ill too?"

Then, having sought and found the bottle of lotion, he proceeded very carefully himself to wet the bandage, and, unfastening the black silk handkerchief at his throat, he knotted it about her neck, making a sling for the sprained arm.

"Thank you," was all she said, simply and wearily, when this was done.

In her pain and exhaustion it seemed natural to her to accept this slight service, and it had been performed with such deliberation and lack of expressiveness that she had not been alarmed. After this it became a usual thing for him to inquire after her arm, and more than once in similar circumstances he discharged a similar service.

. . . . . .

Many of the guests whom Lady Hicks had looked forward to having about her for the Christmas festivities filled her house for a very different purpose, and on the eve of that day which had always been so joyous in that prosperous household they followed to her last home in the grand new vault in Eastwick church the wife, mother, friend and mistress. Mr. Archer, still very far from robust in health, and shocked inexpressibly at the sudden calamity which had befallen Lady Hicks, read the beautiful words of the burial service with a trembling voice, while half the inhabitants of Eastwick stood weeping around her tomb. And so, when the costly wreaths of delicate white flowers laid upon her coffin were hidden by the rude trophies of holly and evergreen gathered from many a rustic garden and strung together by childish fingers of stiff horny hands, all unused to such delicate work, when these in their turn were sprinkled by the mould which rattled among their shining leaves, when the last solemn words had died away upon the frosty air, they turned away and left her there—left her with those humble tributes, thrown by many a hand she had helped and encouraged, lying on her breast.

Said Rob to Miriam that night, Ella having gone to bed, and they two being temporarily alone—

"We had best try to forget all about to-morrow being Christmas day. Tell them to do what they like in the servants' quarters, but don't let us see anything of it. I saw the gardener bringing in a cart-load of holly this afternoon. Idiot!" cried the boy, the tears springing to his eyes, "as if any of us could ever be cheered by the sight of holly again!"

Miriam silently laid her hand upon his arm. He had become like a young brother to her during those long days of grief, and of clinging together.

"It will be miserable for you," he went on—"for you and for Ella. She talks of going to church, but for Heaven's sake, don't let her! Archer will be speaking of—of her, and we can't any of us bear it yet. I shall get the poor governor out for a drive, it will cheer him up perhaps, and my uncle, you know, will be gone. I would have had him stay over to-morrow; but he seems in a tremendous hurry to be off at last."

Miriam turned away.

"I wish he could have stayed a day or two more," she said, the words coming straight and sincere from her heart.

At that moment the door opened and Mr. Keene came into the room.

"Mrs. King wants you to stay over to-morrow, sir; we all want you. Are you sure you can't manage it?" Rob asked.

Kingston Keene turned and looked quickly at Miriam, then at Rob.

"Go to your father, my boy," he said. "I have been saying good-bye to him, and—and he wants you."

As Rob left the room, Mr. Keene crossed it and joined his wife, standing with her back to him by the big fire.

"One word," he said. "I have not troubled you; have I? But now just one word. Is it true that you wish me to stay? Say only 'Yes,' and I will stay; only Heaven knows how gladly!"

For the space of a moment Miriam was silent, then she answered calmly—

"They will miss you. I thought you would have remained with them a little longer."

"And you? If I stay, I stay at your wish—for you!"

There was another momentary pause.

"It was for them," she said then, in almost a whisper. "You have been a comfort to them all. I think it would be better for Ella if you could stay a little longer."

"If I stay over to-morrow, it will be forever," he said, still in low tones. "It will not be well for Ella, poor child; it rests with you. Say but one word—go or stay; I swear to obey you."

She looked at the fire in silence. He could not see the expression of her eyes, try as he would, nor would she raise her down-droppde head; but her hands were locked in a clasp telling of agitation, and he noticed that her breathing was quick and troubled.

"Go or stay?" he repeated, his voice faltering over the words. Miriam, which is it to be?"

"The conditions of your staying? Let me quite understand them," she asked, in trembling tones.

"That I stay with you"

She shook her head sadly but firmly.

"Then go," she decided promptly. "You surely need not have asked me that question again? If it were to save my very life, I would not ask you to stay!"

"But will you let me stay?" he asked, moving closer. "Miriam, may I stay?" He came a step nearer, he bent his head to try to see her face, he held out both hands to her. "My dearest, let me stay!"

There was again an instant's pause. The thrill of passion in the deep voice could not fail to touch Miriam; her heart beat loudly, her breath came quick and troubled. And then, he still holding out his hands to her, there sounded on their ears the opening of the library-door—the door opposite that of the room in which they stood. A moment more and Rob would be with them. They listened breathlessly till they heard the handle of the door turn in his grasp.

"Let me stay," the man said then, in hurried tones of passion. "Tell me to stay with you, my wife!"

But Rob was in the room, and Miriam, awaking as if from a spell, lifted her eyes and looked her husband, with the old proud defiance in the face.

"Not with me," she said with quiet decision. "If that must be the condition of your stopping, I bid you go!"

Then, giving her hand to Rob in silent farewell as she passed him, she went from the room.

"Sweet is revenge," especially to women," says the poet; and Miriam had at last fully tasted hers. It was to be hoped that through the long watches of the coming night the flavor of it might be found as little bitter to the palate as she, through many waiting years, looking forward to some such opportunity as this, had confidently expected.

CHAPTER VI., AND LAST.

A fortnight later, and Miriam was again with the Archers. The family from the Park had started on a foreign tour, the doctor having declared change of air and scene necessary both to Sir Robert and Ella, terribly unnerved and shattered as both had been by the sad circumstances of their loss. They had begged Mrs. King to accompany them; but she too was anxious for change—change of another sort. She wanted to be free of the Hickses, and of the sad memories which troubled her so deeply, if she could. She thought that, could she be in the less dispiriting atmosphere of the Archer household, she might shake off at least something of the horrible weight and oppression which at Eastwick Park so grevously oppressed her. For in that place did not every person, every word, everything recall to her saddened memory two people—one of whom she would have given half her life to forget—her lost friend and cast-off husband?

"What an altered woman your friend Mrs. King has become through this sad time!" said Mr. Archer to his wife one day. "She does not appear to recover her spirits at all. There is a dullness, an apathy about her quite foreign to her nature; she wants rousing. "Can't you do something for her, Georgie?"

"She is altered," Mrs. Archer admitted, looking up from her book. "But can you wonder? Think of the terrible shock! You see, she was with her—it might have been herself who was killed; and Lady Hicks had been so kind to her. What do you think I can do for her, James! I let her have her own way about everything, and she has the children."

Mrs. Archer was silent for a while after this, looking across at her husband, her eyes fixed dreamily upon his face. That chance allusion to the children had recalled to her mind a little scene she had, all unseen herself, witnessed last night. Attracted by the sound of Miriam's sad, rich voice softly singing in the nursery, she had peeped in at the open door, unnoticed in the dusk. Miriam was sitting over the fire in the big deep cushioned chair, the little Archer boy clasped in her arms.

"Alone, alone in a pitiless world Forever and evermore!"

sang the sorrowful voice, breaking off with a sob, and then the beautiful head had been bent down, and the face hidden among Tommie's curls.

"Mim shan't sing the bad ole song that makes Mim cry no more," said the boy, struggling to look into her face. "Tommie don't cry at the ole song, what you cry for? Mim not naughty."

"Yes, but Mim is—Mim is naughty, and miserable and so—so lonely Tommie."

"You has good little Tommie and baby and mummie. You not lonely, Mim," said the child.

But Miriam had kissed him and smiled at him through falling tears.

"What does the song say, Tommie?

"Alone for evermore"—singing the words softly. "That's what your poor Mim is, 'Forever and evermore."

Mrs. Archer thought of this little scene now and sighed gently over it.

"Hers is a sad life and a sad history," she said. "All this has brought the old trouble home to her, I fear."

"I think I would speak to her were I you," her husband answered; "it is best for women to tell their sorrows out and not to brood over them. Get her to talk to you of her troubles; it will do her good."

Miriam took no notice of the shudder nor the look at first, but, when both were repeated, she glanced in surprise at her friend.

"You surely are not cold?" she asked. "Why do you shiver?"

"It is of James I am thinking," Mrs. Archer replied. "It is terrible for him to be out on such a day as this. He has gone to comfort that poor woman whose husband was killed yesterday; but if my husband is killed—as he will be if I can't get him to spare himself—then who is to comfort me?"

"Poor Georgie!" Miriam said soothingly. "He is a good man—your husband! He won't die, dear; but, if he did, that would comfort you—the knowledge that he was good, and that you loved him, and that he knew it."

There was a silence, while Mrs. Archer wiped a tear from her eye, and Miriam still lay back in her chair and still listlessly stared into the fire.

Presently the Rector's wife spoke again.

"Where are the Hickses, I wonder now, and how does poor Ella get on? Dear me, there seems to be nothing but mournfulness on one side and the other left to us! This unfortunate winter will sicken you of Eastwick, Miriam; you are looking ill and unhappy."

"Do not trouble about me," Miriam answered, "I shall do very well—soon."

"I do not wish to force your confidence dear," Mrs. Archer went on; "but there is just one thing which you must let me ask you—as a reward for my non-interference and my most unfeminine lack of curiosity you must just tell me this. Is whatever this is which is distressing you now that old trouble at which you have hinted to me, or is it something new of which I know nothing?"

Miriam paused for a moment before she answered this, then, without changing her position or moving her eyes from the fire, she replied—

"Such a trouble as mine is always now."

"You do not straightforwardly answer my question; you think me impertinent," Mrs. Archer said quickly. "Pray, do me the justice to believe I do not want to pry into your affairs, to torment you, Miriam. We thought—James thought—that you might find some relief from the sorrow which so evidently oppresses you, if you could speak of it to some one. It was only for that that I broached the subject."

"You are very kind," Miriam returned dully.

"You cannot wonder that we are interested in you," Mrs. Archer resumed presently; we are not the only people. There are the Hickses—Sir Robert would do anything to serve you, and James was saying that Mr. Keene even spoke of you to him before he left."

The bitterness and the apathy vanished from Miriam's manner in an instant; she withdrew her eyes from the fire, sat upright, and looked eagerly across at her friend.

"Mr. Keene, what did he say?" she asked.

Mrs. Archer noticed with some surprise that sudden rush of color to the pale face, that flash of startled interest which transformed it.

"James did not say much about it," she answered slowly; "it was something to the effect that you had been a comfort to them—to the Hickses—at that awful time, and that none of them could ever forget you and your unselfishness and devotion, and that it was a great satisfaction to him, Mr. Keene, to know that you, who were so young and beautiful, and so alone, would always have the friendship of my husband and myself. James said he understood him as desiring the assurance from himself that we would always be your friends; and he gave it. There is no fathoming what a promise such as that from a man like my husband may signify. Mr. Kingston Keene, all unconsciously perhaps, with those few words, made you his charge for ever; and so it is that he is anxious about you now. Miriam, are you sure he cannot help you—is there nothing that either of us can do?"

Miriam shook her head sadly.

"There is nothing," she responded dejectedly. "With all my heart I thank him, I thank you; but there is nothing. What could your husband do for me, Georgie? That poor woman now to whom he is gone, if she has but the recollection of her own love and tenderness to look back upon, he may comfort her; even I could point out to her in how much she had been blessed; but if it should be that she had turned from that poor young husband of hers—spurned his goodness, repudiated his love, sent him from her for ever with cruel words, never to be recalled, sounding in his ears—if this should be, as Heaven forbid; then—then do you ask him, ask your husband if he could carry any comfort and consolation to her. Well, it is so with me; I have worked my own undoing—nothing can put me right any more."

"Miriam," Mrs. Archer said, "it is something fresh; it is more than the old trouble after all."

"It is nothing that can be altered," Miriam rejoined sadly.

During the silence that followed, Mrs. Archer reflected curiously over the change which had come over Miriam but now at the mention of a certain name. She asked herself could she have been mistaken, and resolved to try the effect once more.

"He was looking fearfully ill and worn and aged, James told me," she remarked quietly.

Miriam looked up with eager inquiry.

"He?"

"Mr. Kingston Keene. James says he never saw a man so altered in such a little time. Something—his sister's death, perhaps—seemed to have crushed him."

Miriam rose hastily from her chair as if stung with sudden pain.

"Don't," she implored, putting up her hand with a gesture of agonized entreaty. "Don't, I cannot—cannot bear it!" Then she crossed the hearth rug, and fell upon her knees at her friend's feet. "Georgie," she said, with an uncontrollable sob of anguish, "he—he is my husband, and he loved me, and I sent him away."

. . . . . .

Two hours afterwards, when Mr. Archer returned, all splashed and wet and cold, he found the little breakfast room a paradise of comfort. The warmth and brightness of the room were in cheering contrast to the scene he had left. Luncheon was set, silver and glass were shining on the white cloth, and Miriam, with a shy look on a tremulous happy face, was sticking some blossoms of scarlet geranium—sent up that morning from the Eastwick Park conservatory—into the moss around some ferns in the centre of the table. Mrs. Archer was following the movements of the girl with sympathetic, admiring eyes, feeling excited and proud and happy. What news for James; how proud he would be of her, his wife. For she had followed his advice, had won Miriam's confidence, and had obtained from her—easily, she admitted to herself—a promise to write to her husband by the next mail.

She looked at her husband eagerly as he came in, and glanced significantly at Miriam, who looked up with that wonderful shy happiness, so foreign to her face, as she said a word of greeting; but for once Mr. Archer took no heed of either. He came over to the fire and warmed his hands, looking down into its cheery depths in silence.

Life in Japan.

In Tokio there is a large government paper-making and money-printing establishment, where hundreds of laborers and operatives are engaged. In connection with the works there is an eating-house, where food is supplied to all who desire to obtain their meals on the premises. The scale of prices for a meal is from one and one-half cents to six cents. The lowest wages paid is ten cents a day. It will be seen that the laborer working for the smallest stipend can get all the food required for a small proportion of his earnings. All the operatives in this establishment are good specimens of what Japanese food will do in the way of sustaining strength and robust health. No more healthy set of men and women or youths can be seen in any part of the world; none more capable of enduring the strain and drain upon the system that continuous labor entails. Your correspondent has taken the trouble to ascertain the measurement of the lower limb of a number of the draught coolies in Yokohama, and he is able to assure you that by actual measurement, very many of these chaps have a calf to their leg measuring seventeen inches and even larger, the height of the men being not over five feet and four or five inches. It takes good strong food to put such muscle into the frame of the human being, and that of the Japanese does it.

Doubtless had not the long centuries of seclusion from the outside world compelled the Japanese to marry and intermarry among themselves as they have, would show a much taller race than they now do. Every species of animal life is dwarfed from the same cause of interbreeding. The cattle are small, and the horses are much smaller than the California mustang; in fact, they can only be called ponies. There may, perhaps, be yet another cause for the short stature of the race. Their internecine wars have destroyed the lives of myriads of the fighting population. It is known that the wars of Napoleon served to shorten the stature of the French people very materially, and doubtless the destruction of life caused by war has effected the same result here. The Japanese are a war-like race, and when they fight they fight to kill, using the most effective edged tools made for the trade of war.

The Tichborne claimant has taken up pigeon shooting since his release. He took part in two matches for £50 a side, at twenty-five birds each, at Leeds, the other day, against Mr. W. Graham of London, and Mr. G. H. Fowler, both well-known shots. In the first match Mr. Fowler was declared the winner at the nineteenth bird, having killed thirteen birds to the claimant's seven. In the second match the claimant shot much better, Mr. Graham winning by only one bird.

Repetition is sometimes the only way to impress a truth upon the mind. Accordingly take notice that Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," (the original Little Liver Pills) continue to be wonderfully effective in cases of sick and nervous headache, constipation, indigestion, rush of blood to the head, cold extremities, and all ailments arising from obstruction of the bodily functions. Their action is thorough yet gentle, and the ingredients being entirely vegetable, they can be taken with impunity into the most delicate stomach. All druggists.

The Great Inflammatory Remedy,

NERVILINE, the latest discovered pain remedy, may safely challenge the world for a substitute that will as speedily and promptly check inflammatory action. The highly penetrating properties of Nerviline make it never failing in all cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, cramps, pains in the back and side, headache, lumbago, etc. It possesses marked stimulating and counter irritant properties, and at once subdues all inflammatory action. Ormand & Walsh, druggists, Peterboro', write: "Our customers speak well of Nerviline." Nerviline may be tested at the small sum of ten cents, as you can buy a sample bottle for that sum at any drug store. Large bottles 25 cents. Try Nerviline, the great internal and external pain cure. Sold by all druggists and country dealers.

Day after day the evidence accumulates that the "Myrtle Navy" is the people's favorite tobacco. The demand keeps increasing and from every new circle of consumers who have been induced to try it the evidence is emphatic in its favor. Its genuine qualities always hold the friends they have once made. These qualities will be kept up to their full standard by the manufacturers of it, It is to these qualities and the reasonableness of the price that they attribute their marked success. To the quality they will adhere to at all cost, and also to the price if that be possible.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

ENGLISH WHALING.

Whales are more numerous than is usually supposed; that is to say, there are a greater variety of these giants of the deep than the two or three which are known to commerce; such animals being abundant in all seas, so far as they have been explored. It is not, however, our intention to enter into the natural history of these cetaceans farther than may be necessary to understand their commercial value. Nor do we intend to dwell on the dangers which are incidental to the pursuit of the whale, of which it would be difficult to compile a melancholy catalogue. Terrible shipwrecks, vessels crunched by the power of the ice without a moment's warning, others run into and destroyed by the animal itself; pitiful boat-voyages, so prolonged as to cause deaths from hunger and thirst; ships engulfed amid the roar of the tempest, and crews never heard of since the day they sailed; these are among the incidents which have from its beginning marked the progress of the whale-fishery; the mortality connected with which has often attracted attention, not only in the icy regions of the Arctic seas, but also in those of the Pacific Ocean, in which, all the year round, men pursue the sperm-whale with unceasing activity, at a risk to life and limb only faintly realized by landsmen.

The fortunes of whaling are exceglyedin var ed: one ship may capture ten or twelve fish, some vessels occasionally come home clean, while others may each secure from two to half a dozen. We have before us several records of the financial results of whale-fishing, in which the profits and losses among Pacific whalers exhibit some striking differences. One ship, for instance, places at her credit during her voyage one hundred and thirty-two thousand dollars; but to the owners of the fleet of whalers fishing from New Bedford, United States, in 1858, there accrued a loss of more than a million dollars. Again, a Scottish whaleship from Peterhead, in Aberdeenshire, was one season fortunate enough to capture forty-four whales, the largest number ever fished by one vessel. The value of the cargo in oil and bone considerably exceeded ten thousand pounds stirling. One of the largest cargoes ever landed was brought home by the steamer "Arctic," of Dundee, commanded by Captain Adams, one of the ablest Arctic navigators. It consisted of the produce of thirty-seven whales, which, beside oil, included almost eighteen tons of whalebone.

The only whales of commerce were at one time the great sperm-whale of southern latitudes, and the right or Greenland whale, both of which are animals of gigantic size and great power, the latter being undoubtedly the larger. No British vessels take part in the sperm-fishery, their operations being confined to the Arctic regions. Dundee is now the chief whaling port, sending out annually sixteen ships to Greenland. The Greenland whale, which our British whalemen endure such dangers to procure, seldom exceeds sixty feet in length, and is about half that number in circumference. An average-size specimen will weigh some seventy tons or more, and forms a mass of matter equal to about two hundred fat oxen. One individual caught by a Scotch whaler was seventy-two feet in length, the total weight being reckoned at upward of one hundred tons. The chief product of the sperm and the right whale, their oil, is of course common to both animals, and is obtained by boiling their fat, or blubber as the substance is technically called.

It is somewhat curious that in both of these whales the head is the portion, size being considered, which is the most valuable. In the sperm-whale the case, situated in the head, is filled with a substance which is known as spermaceti, and brings a high price. One of these giants of the deep will sometimes yield a ton of this valuable substance, which is found, when the whale is killed, as an oily fluid, that when prepared, gradually concretes into a granulated mass. In the Greenland whale the great prize is the bone with which its head is furnished, and which at the present time is quoted as being of the enormous value of two thousand two hundred and fifty pounds per ton. The price in America is even higher, the last sales in that country bringing two thousand five hundred pounds. It is only the Greenland fish which yields this valuable commodity. The whale of the Pacific is furnished with teeth; but the right whale has in lieu thereof a series of plates, or laminæ, on the upper jaw, which are in reality the whalebone of commerce. The uses to which bone is applied vary according to the demands of fashion, so that within the last hundred years the price has fluctuated exceedingly, and has been quoted from almost a nominal price per ton up to the sum mentioned. At one period, we are told in an American account of the fishery, the rates for whalebone were so low that few whalemen would bring any of it home, their space being of much greater value when packed with oil. Threepence a pound weight was at one time all that could be obtained for it; now the price of bone is twenty shillings per pound-weight. It may be explained that the yield of bone is as eight or ten pounds to each barrel of oil. A vessel which brings home one hundred tons of oil will, in all probability, have on board six tons of whalebone.

Formerly it was the oil which rendered the whaling voyages remunerative, and made or marred the fortune of the venture, but the case is now altered, owing to the enormous prices realized for bone. The head of the sperm-whale is equal to about a third of its whole size, and the case yields spermaceti, which commands a high price; but in the case of the Greenland whale, as we have shown, only a comparatively small weight of whalebone is contained in the mouths of each of them; but small as it is, the quantity tends to swell the account and increase the dividends. Whaling ventures are usually made by companies, and nearly everybody engaged in the hazardous work has a share in the venture, the men being partially paid by a share of the oil money. Whalers earn their wages hardly. The work, not to speak of the dangers incurred, is always carried on at a high pressure rate, and is anything but agreeable. The pursuit and capture of the whale are usually very exciting, some of these animals being difficult to kill, even when the boats, after a long chase, come within such a distance of them as admits of striking with the harpoon. Many are the adventures which take place on the occasion of whale-killing; though most of the animals attacked finally succumb. Then begins the labor of securing the prize, and converting the products which it yields into matter bearing a commercial value. The dead whale must be brought either close to the ship, or the ship must be brought close to the whale, which, in the icy waters of the high Arctic latitudes, involves a great deal of fatigue, the animal being sometimes killed at a considerable distance from the ship. On some occasions a day will elapse before it can be known that the whale will without doubt become the prey of those who have found it, and several boats may require to take part in the process of killing. As many as four boats may at one time be fast as it is called to the same animal, in other words, they have all succeeded in planting their harpoons in the whale. But the harpoon, even when shot from a gun into the fish, does not kill it; the putting of the animal to death is accomplished by means of what are called lancs, instruments which are used after the animal has been harpooned. After that process has been successfully achieved, the labor of capture, which may have taken from two to ten hours to accomplish, is over. Instances are known where boats have been fast for upwards of fifty hours before the whale was finally despatched.

The whale is usually dragged to the ship by the boats engaged in its capture. Holes are cut in its tail, and ropes being then attached, the laborious process of towing the gigantic carcass commences. Once alongside of the ship, the work of flensing, or cutting-up of the whale is speedily in operation, all engaged being in a state of ferment, and eager for further work of the same sort. The crew may be likened some animals which, having tasted blood, long for more. The operation of removing the bone from the head of the whale is first entered upon; this is superintended by an officer known as the spectioneer, and who is responsible for this part of the process. After the bone has been dealt with, the blubber is cut off the body in long strips, which are hauled on board by means of a block-and-tackle. It is first cut into large squares, in which condition it is allowed to remain till the salt water drains out of it, a few hours, or even a day or two being allowed, according to the work on hand. The skin is then peeled off, and the mass of fatty matter is further dealt with by being chopped into little pieces, which are stowed away in barrels or tanks, to be brought home to the boileries, in order to be, as we may say, distilled into a commercial product. When the fish has yielded up its valuable products the flensed carcass is cut adrift. Sometimes the pondrous jaw bones are preserved; when that is the case they are cut out of the head and lifted on board. The strips of blubber vary in thickness from ten to sixteen inches, or even more, according to the size and fatness of the fish. In general, it averages twelve inches all over the body, the thickest portion being at the neck, where twenty-four inches of blubber are sometimes found. The yield of oil is of course in proportion to the size and condition of the animal, and will run from five to twenty tons. A whale caught many years ago by the crew of the "Princess Charlotte," of Dundee, yielded thirty-two tons of oil. An examination of some old records of the fishery shows fifteen hundred tons of oil to the one hundred and thirty-five fish of the Aberdeen fleet of eleven vessels; twelve hundred and forty-three tons to the Peterhead fleet of eleven ships (three vessels had been lost), which captured eighty-eight whales and three thousand seals.

The ships which go whale-fishing from Scotland to the Arctic regions make an annual voyage, which lasts from five to nine months; but sperm-whalers often remain at sea for a period of three years. They boil out their oil as they cruise about in search of their prey; or when blubber has so accumulated as to warrant the action, the ship will put in at some convenient island, where the process of melting the fat can be conveniently carried on.

No recent statistics of an authentic kind of the seal-fishery have been issued other than those contained in the newspapers; but from figures before us relating to a period from 1849 to 1859, we find that over one million seals were killed within that time by Scottish sealers alone; and the success of individual crews in the killing of these animals, it may be said, comes occasionally within the realms of the marvellous. The oil obtained from the seals is as valuable as that got from the Arctic whales, whilst their skins are also of some commercial importance. It was a happy circumstance that just as whale-fishing began to fall off, gas as an illuminant became common, and although train and sperm oils are still used in various manufactories, and especially in jute-mills, the mineral oils which have been found in such quantity have doubtless served many of the purposes for which whale-oil was once in constant demand.

A NEGRO'S TREACHERY.

[illegible] Massacre of [illegible] Expedition in Africa.

Signor Luccardi, correspondent of the Milan Society of Exploration in Africa, has sent from Massowah the following summary, dated Dec. 12, 1884, of Signor Naretti's report confirming the news of the massacre of the expedition led by Signor Bianchi: "From Mavaja Bianchi and his companions continued their journey into the country of Mohammed d'Aufar d'Aussa. During the first stage they were surrounded by Danakils, but frightened them away with a few shots and fireworks. The next morning seven Danakils approached, and the travellers told their guide, Mandaitu, to ask what they wanted. After a long conversation the guide returned, saying that the Danakils wanted to make peace and be friends, and declared that they were ready to show the travellers where water was to be found, and to conduct them as far as Assab. Bianchi accepted this offer, and allowed the Danakils to stay in the tent and eat and drink with them and his companions. Bianchi said to them: 'If you are our friends, I beg you to tell me whether you know where our friends Giuletti and his party died." One of the Danakils answered: 'We know the place. It is not far from here and the place where we shall camp to-night.' The party then left the golema far behind to the right, and, passing the volcano, advanced to the northwest and camped in the evening. Bianchi, Monari, and Diani, with the seven friendly Danakils and the guide, then went to the spot where Giuletti and his companions were killed to search for their remains. They found and took with them a few bones, returning to the camp, where they passed a quiet night. In the morning they raised the camp, and at that moment a quarrel arose between Mandaitu and the natives, whom Bianchi and his companions, with the help of a servant, managed to separate, and the journey was continued. They arrived at evening at a place called Robcock, which is still in the region of Mavaja. There, on the summit of an elevation, near a small lake, they camped. Bianchi and his companions ascended to the topmost point, and exclaimed, 'here is Assab; we are very near!' and joyfully returned to the camp. The Danakils had taken with them a fine white cow as a present, and this was killed for supper. Afterward the whole party began to talk and laugh, but the travellers were on their guard, and had placed some slaves and an Abyssinian servant outside to watch, while Bianchi's own faithful servant went to and fro. Towards 2 o'clock in the morning some noise was heard outside the camp. The travellers were taken by surprise. Bianchi had only time to call his faithful servant, 'Ciufa! Ciufa?' who on entering the tent was the first to be killed. Diana wounded a savage in the leg before he himself fell. The guide Mandaitu was only slightly wounded with a lance, and on his calling out, 'I am Mandaitu! I am Mandaitu!' the chief of the Danakils told his followers to let the man live, as he was one of them. The servants outside the tent shot a native, but in their turn were all massacred. This occurred about the 7th or 8th of October. In the morning, when the Danakils found that Mandaitu was wounded, they gave him twenty cows and thirty sheep, and carried him into his own country, also called Mandaitu, and only two days' journey from Siket. This," continues Signor Luccardi, "is the sad story related by Naretti. It seems to me that Mandaitu, who misled Bianchi and his companions, is the chief traitor. I therefore wrote yesterday to King John, begging him if he wished to please the king of Italy, to try and take Mandaitu, as he was so near Siket, and send him to Italy at the disposition of the Italian government."

His Big Friend.

A crowd gathered on a wharf in San Francisco had an opportunity to see a dog rescue another dog from drowning, and go about his work as intelligently as if had been the trained officer of a humane society. The Alta says:

A small terrier dog fell from the stringer of the wharf into the bay. He swam around for some time in a circle, and many plans were suggested for his rescue, but none of them proved practical. The little creature seemed doomed to a watery grave, for he was fast becoming exhausted. The female portion of the audience was much exercised, and gave many expressions of pity.

Just at the moment that all hopes of saving the terrier were given up, the bark of a dog in the crowd attracted attention, and there appeared upon the stringer in front of the wharf, a large Newfoundland.

He saw the little fellow in the water, and with a low wail he ran to and fro along the wharf for a moment or two, and then, to the surprise of every one present, he sprang into the water and at once swam to the terrier.

Seizing him by the neck with his teeth, and after swimming about for some time, he sighted the new sea-wall extension, about a hundred yards distant, for which he headed.

Upon landing his burden on terra firma, the Newfoundland gave two or three sharp barks, and seemed to be proud of what he had done. It was some time before the terrier was able to gain strength to walk away.

One of the witnesses of the strange sight, patting the Newfoundland dog, said, "This dog is mine, and I would not take one thousand dollars for him at this moment."

A Vermont farmer made a net profit of $43 50 from the produce of a single hen turkey during the past season. This is equal to 100 bushels of wheat in Kansas at 43 cents per bushel, with this difference: It would cost as much to raise and harvest the wheat as it would bring, while the proceeds of the turkey were gain.

A two-and-a-half-year-old child wandered away from its home at Moccasin Springs, Utah, a few days ago, and after travelling several miles through a deep snow and sleeping one night in the mud, it was found, forty-six hours after starting, badly frostbitten, but in such a condition that by good treatment and nourishment it soon recovered.

The London Echo says: "While our navy is reported to be gone to the dogs, and the national industries are supposed to be following the navy, it must fill every well-conditioned Briton's heart with delight and pride to learn from the papers that the repairing and refitting of the royal yacht are just complete. The bill is only £50,000 sterling.

A charitable clergyman of Chicago had a large bundle of half-used clothing made up for disposition by a ladies' missionary society, but when the agents of the latter called at the clergyman's house they were given by mistake a bundle prepared for laundryman, and by the time the error was discovered the family wash was on its way many miles toward the Northwest.

A peculiar article produced by the negroes of Georgia is called by them persimmon bread. Five pounds of it, it is said, will make nearly a barrel of agreeable and non-intoxicating beer. The persimmons are gathered when thoroughly ripe, the mass is kneaded till it is of the consistency of bread dough, made into a cake, and then put into an oven and baked. It will keep all winter, and can be used until late in the spring.

Churchill's Medical Directory puts the number of doctors in Great Britain at the end of 1884 at 21,381, as against 19,947 in 1882. In London the increase has been 12 per cent., so that the metropolis now has a doctor to every 880 inhabitants. But England turns out very many more doctors than it retains. In 1882 over 1,500 registered practitioners resided abroad, and in 1884 they numbered over 1,900, an increase of 26½ per cent. in two years. Altogether there are now over 25,000 doctors holding British certificates.

There are in existence rather more than forty Egyptian obelisks. Of these England possesses 7; America, 1; Germany, 1; France, 2; Italy (including Rome, which has 12), 17, and Constantinople, 2. The remainder, many of which are fallen or broken, are still in Egypt. The smallest is the Lepsius obelisk in the Royal Museum at Berlin, which is two feet one and a half inches high, and weighs 200 pounds; the largest, unfinished, of Assouan, still in quarries at Syene, the estimated weight of which is more than 1,500,000 pounds.

In the twenty eight large towns of England—containing an aggregate of 9,000 000 of population—the death rate for 1884 was 19.3 per 1,000, being 1.4 below the mean rate in the ten years ending in 1833. The rates for 1881-2-3 were 18.9, 19.6, and 19.5. The decline has been, according to the Lancet, coincident with the Public Health acts of 1872, and 1875. From 1840 to 1870 the rate was practically stationary at 22.4; from 1871 to 1875 it declined to 22, and in 1876-80 fell to 20.08. In the first four years of the current decade it fell to 19.3, and the death rate in each year was lower than in any of the forty-three previous years. The effect of these reductions is to add two years to the life of every male and three and a half to the life of every female born in England.

The saltpetre beds of Nevada are better situated for the development of their deposits than the nitre region of South America, which is a desert entirely devoid of water and all vegetable life, and where the developments can be accomplished only by surmounting many dicffiuclties; the provisions of the miners have to be transported from long distances; the water supply for all purposes is condensed from the ocean water and carried to the nitre fields, while fuel has to be procured from the mountains in the south of Chili. In Nevada, we are told, the saltpetre deposits are in the vicinity of a rich farming country, with an abundant supply of water and wood close at hand, and the nitre can be furnished at prices considerably cheaper than that for which the South American article can be obtained.

Edmund Yates fares less agreeably than did Leigh Hunt, when the latter was imprisoned in 1812-14 for calling the Prince of Wales "An Adonis of 50." By his own taste and the attentions of his friends Hunt's prison cell was transformed into an elegant apartment, adorned with bookcases, busts, and flowers; luxuries of many kinds were showered upon him, and he was cheered by visits from such men as Byron, Shelley, Keats, Moore, Lamb, and Hazlitt. Poor Yates, on the other hand, is to be put on an allowance of half a pint of wine, or one pint of malt liquor per day; visits from friends must be arranged by the visiting magistrates, and he can receive only one newspaper daily. His letters are to be regulated by the Governor's orders. He is to take exercise by himself in the first-class misdemeanant's ground, to rise at 6:30, and to retire at 9:15.

Some of the British peers are very wealthy, as for instance the new Duke of Buccleuch. The entailed estates in Scotland to which he has just succeeded extend to upward of 450,000 acres, and include the magnificent seats of Bowhill, Drumlanrig Castle, and Dalkeith Palace. The present annual rental is about £170,000, which is at least 20 per cent. less than the return of ten years ago. The Duke also comes into the Boughton estates, in Northants, near Kettering, and he gets a property in Warwickshire, near Rugby, the two being now worth about £28,000 a year. The Duke's piers at Granton bring in £10,000 a year, his minerals and quarries are worth nearly as much, and he owns valuable urban properties in Midlothian. The Duke will receive about £500,000 from his father's personal estate. His income, therefore, will be about £270,000, on which pittance even a Duke can live handsomely.

Narrow Escape.

Positions in the service of railroads at certain points in the extreme west and southwest, are sometimes filled at the not infrequent peril of the lives of those who have their duties to discharge. A man who recently occupied such a position tells a thrilling story of one of his experiences. He had never been really in danger but once, and that was at Granada on the Santa Fe road, when it was first opened. He says, "I was in the office in the evening, getting ready to close up, when four or five rough, hard-looking men came in. They didn't say much, but seemed to be looking the ground over. We were always on the lookout for such dangerous looking fellows, and as the machine connected with the telegraph was ticking, I pretended that somebody was asking me a question.

"I laughed a little, and seized the key I called for the agent at the station where the express stopped for water and ticked off the words:

"'Don't stop the express at Granada to-night, whether signalled here or not. Robbers here.'

"The men eyed me sharply, but said nothing. The sounder kept up a merry click, and I leaned back in the chair. They remained at the station for half an hour and then one of them asked me what time the train was due.

"'Eleven five,' I said.

"'Well, we want it,' one of them replied. I told him that I would signal it.

"About 10.30 I got out the red lantern and lighted it. Just as I got it fixed two of the men jumped at me with revolvers in their hands and said they would save me the trouble. While one of them covered me with a pistol, the others tied me flat on my back to a settee. I couldn't move head or foot.

"After they had tied me there I began to think what sort of a scrape I had got myself in. The train would come presently and would go flying by, and then those cut throats would murder me in revenge. I had hardly thought this over when I heard a sharp whistle and a roar.

"The men ran out to the platform with masks on and revolvers in hand. One of them had the lantern, which he swung vigorously. In going out on the platform they left the door open, so that I could see them distinctly.

"I began to hope that the train would stop, for I knew that it contained men enough to overpower the robbers, if not taken too much by surprise.

"The roar came nearer and nearer, until at last I knew by the sound that the train was not going to stop. With the whistle blowing at full blast and the dust flying in clouds, it swept by like a streak of lightning.

"My time had come, I thought. The robbers dropped the lantern and began to swear. Then I could hear them talking, and pretty soon I made up my mind that the train had stopped down the road, and that the robbers were watching it.

"Before long they took to their heels, mounted their horses and were gone, and when some men came up from the train to the depot, armed with Winchesters, I was the only occupant.

"They released me, and I told them what had happened. Two of them stayed with me, and the train went on. If any express ever came any nearer being robbed than that one, I'd like to know it."

An Ocean Waif.

Every day something turns up to call forth the remark that truth is stranger than fiction. The London papers are advertising for the coming forward of the parents or relatives of a child whose nurse was washed off the deck of an English steamer and drowned, leaving scarcely a clue to the identification of her charge. But this is not so strange a fact as that associated with an adopted daughter of the Hon. F. G. Hay, recently deceased. During a life of strange experiences, Mr. Hay was once a common sailor in the English navy, and at the time of his death was an officer of the British-India Steam Navigation Company.

One of the company's steamers was a few miles off Aden. Mr. Hay was in command of the watch about four a. m., when he fancied he noticed a boat adrift and that he heard a faint scream. He at once stopped the vessel, lowered a boat and proceeded to search for the castaway. He was rewarded by discovering the dead body of a lady and a living child tied together in a boat, which was half full of water.

The child he adopted, and she is now in the charge of his family. Oddly enough, he was never able to discover her birth or parentage, or even the name of the vessel on which she had been a passenger. This sounds like a chapter from a sensational romance, but it is true, notwithstanding.

Count Pahlen, a Russian nobleman well known in English society, who has just died at the age of ninety-six, once won a hundred thousand dollars at a sitting from Prince John Lichtenstein.

SNOW FENCES.

The periodical snow blocade on leading roads in certain places is upon us, and the question, how this can be obviated, is doubtless a very general one, yet nothing is done to overcome the difficulty. There are certain portions of the roads which are very badly drifted up with snow, if not completely impassable almost every winter, which fact retards winter work very much, and often brings it to a complete standstill.

If those particularly bad portions of leading roads had wire fences, especially on the West side, we believe the difficulty would be, at least in a great measure, overcome. In order to have this done, it would be necessary for township councils to give some assistance, and we hold that it would be a just expenditure, as the whole community would be benefitted.

Should the councils agree to supply the wire, we are of opinion that it would be sufficient inducement to many, who own farms in the locality of those bad winter roads, to erect wire fences, and the road commissioner in each Ward would be a proper person to judge where they were entitled to such

This question of blocaded roads, impeding, and at times, entirely suspending public traffic, is year after year becoming more serious, and some means should be adopted towards its remedy.

We would like to hear from our contemporaries, as well as from the public who travel and have to contend with the obstacle. Let us have your suggestions. Fences cannot be erected in winter season; but, a plan might be adopted which could be put in practice for another winter.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS.

On Saturday last Mr. D. J. Shanahan of this place sold the wood department of his business to Mr. Wm. Mason. Mr. Shanahan has built up a very large business during the four years which he has been in Markdale, in fact it is by far the most extensive carriage establishment in the County, and the business is not only extensive, but most satisfactory to those who have purchased rigs, of which there are not a few, over 350 having been turned out during the four years.

The business is now to have a new impetus, and we have no doubt, with the additional strength, the business will not only hold its own, but largely increase. Mr. Mason is a first-class mechanic, of which the public are aware, he having done business in this place, either for himself or otherwise, for ten years.

The business will be carried on in the same premises, and the public may rely on procuring there the very best vehicles at the lowest living prices.

AN INFERNAL MACHINE.

On Tuesday evening last a lamp in W. A. Brown's jewellery store took fire, caused by the acumulated snuff around the burner. Mr. B. was at his bench, and alone in the store when he discovered it. The thought of the recent dynamite explosion in the parliament buildings in London flashed through his mind, and how the policeman narrowly escaped loosing his life by venturing to remove the infernal machine from the building, and how he might suffer equal, if not greater injuries, attempting to remove the lamp which might at any moment explode, scattering its burning fluid in all directions. At second thought he, however, sprang towards the treacherous combustible, pulled off his cap, and in it grasped the burning lamp and rushed to the door, throwing it with all his strength. The lamp was scarcely out of his hands when it went into a thousand pieces. Had it exploded while in the store, one of the most destructive fires in the history of Markdale might have been the result; as it was, the loss of the lamp and a few slight blisters on Mr. Brown's hands is the extent of the damage.

No deaths nor marriages to report. Considerable courting going on.

Owing, I suppose, to the enterprise and good business qualities of Markdale merchants every person within any reasonable distance are going there to market, passing such places as Flesherton.

Some talk of the extension of the railroad from Durham. We are glad to see Markdale people move in the matter. We (in Kimberley) feel safe knowing that no railroad can afford to pass us either to the East or West without giving us a station

From our own correspondent.

Stormy weather; roads badly drifted up.

Miss A. Buchanan has returned home from Hamilton, where she has been visiting friends for some time past.

Mr. G. Luman has rented Mr. J. C. Buchanan's farm.

Mr. R. Thompson, Jr., has sold his farm and is going to live in the Valley where he has purchased Mr. Bannerman's farm.

The beautiful snow that we have at present has made things steady around the Eclipse saw mill, and the result is that the obliging proprietor, Mr. J Sparling, is in his best of humor.

The Sabbath School business is still in a very unsettled state. The chasm is getting wider, and will soon need a suspension bridge to connect both sides.

Euphrasia.

A monster Royal Arch meeting was held in the Hall of Little Derry L. O. L. No. 1295, 11th con., Euphrasia, on the evening of the 21st inst., when six highly respected and loyal young men of the vicinity (who joined this Lodge during the past summer) was initiated into the mysteries of a Royal Arch Purple Marksman. Notwithstanding the bad state of the roads the Hall was filled to its utmost capacity by visiting brethren of surrounding Lodges. The ceremony was very ably conducted by Bro. John Clugston and Bro. Carefoot of Collingwood, a young man possessed with good ability and capable of filling the chair of a W. M. After closing in the usual form, the brethren repaired to the house and store of Mrs. Bailey, where a magnificent spread was provided for the occasion. When all had done ample justice to the good things, the brethren again betook themselves to the Hall. Bro. John Clugston, District Chaplain, took the chair. The chairman, in a few brief remarks, called Bro. W. J. Shepherdson to the platform, who gave a lengthy and humorous speech, which was received with great applause. Bro. Carefoot next addressed the brethren. Bro. Stinson, W. M., and Messrs. Blakely and Brady of Markdale Lodge, Bro. Quinton, W. M., and Messrs. Clarke and Irvine of Temple Hill Lodge, gave short speeches. Bro. J. A. Hawken, W. M., of Little Derry, in a very courteous manner, thanked the visitors for their presence that evening. Bro. James McCarter sang an excellent song well suited to the occasion, and to an encore heartily responded. After returning a vote of thanks to the Ladies for the splendid supper, the company dispersed about 3 o'clock, by giving three cheers for the Queen.

Testimonial.

To Mr. Crosson:

SIR,—I have given the "Model Washer," which you left on trial, a fair test; did not at first think much of it, but, on further testing it I am highly pleased with its work. It saves labor, saves the clothes and gives the fabrics a beautiful white color. Can cheerfully testify to its excellence.

STRUCK BY A TRAIN.—As the noon train on the T. G. & B. R. was coming west on Monday it struck a team and sleigh on the first crossing after leaving Luther station. One of the horses was killed, the other escaping with a few bruises. The occupant of the sleigh, a farmer who had been drawing wood to Luther village, was thrown about twenty feet into a snow bank but came out unhurt, while the sleigh which was completely wrecked, was carried about 200 yards on the front of the locomotive. We failed to learn the farmer's name.—Mt. Forest Representative.

The Public Herald.

We are in receipt of the first number of the Public Herald, published at Philadelphia, by L. Lum Smith. In his salutatory, Mr. Smith lays down the principles on which the Herald will be conducted, viz., to fight newspaper, quack medicine and other frauds which prey upon the public, and to prove that he is in earnest, says: The Public Herald will "practice what it preaches." The Herald has assumed a wide field in which to work, and judging from the work already performed by he Agents Herald in the same direction, we have no doubt the Public Herald will be a success, and trust that Mr. Smith may long continue in the good work so well begun. The Herald is a monthly publication, and should be in the hands of every business man in the country. Its list of frauds is worth more to the business man in one month than ten times its subscription price, which is placed at $1 per year. Send for a sample copy to L. WORTH $25.00.

HOW TO GET IT.

"A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases" by Dr. B. J. Kendall. This is a book of nearly 100 pages, profusely illustrated, giving symptoms of, as well as treatment for the various diseases common to the horse. Some of our subscribers who received this book a year ago, have assured us that it has been worth to them in twelve months, enough to pay for the STANDARD 25 years, and yet it is given as a premium with the STANDARD to every new subscriber who pays $1.00 in advance for the paper.

We had several new subscribers the past week from a distance, and can yet supply others, send us $1 by mail or other wise and you will receive the book by return mail and the STANDARD twelve months. Address Standard Office, Markdale.

Social No. 2 will be held under the auspices of the Ladies of the Markdale Methodist church at the residence of Mr Thos. Boland, four miles east of Markdale, on Friday evening, 13th inst. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The Presbyterian church will be reopened on Sabbath, Feby., 8th, when the Rev. Mr. Scott of Owen Sound will preach morning and evening. There will also be an entertainment on Monday evening 9th. For further particulars see posters.

A social in aid of the Presbyterian church was held in Rae's Hall on Friday evening of last week. Quite an enjoyable evening was spent by those present, No doubt the number would have been largely augmented had there been sufficient notice given.

On the Ice.—The 25 lap race between J. W. Sproule, Markdale & Joe Gibbons of Dundalk took place on the Owen Sound Skating Rink on Tuesday evening before about one thousand spectators, and resulted in a victory for the latter. About $200 changed hands over the affair.

The Mds. C. C. Rossiter and Chas. Kelly company will give a concert in Flesherton next Wednesday evening under the auspices of Dufferin Lodge I. O. O. F. this company are very highly spoken of by the press all over Canada and we have no doubt their concert will be a success.

Paste This in Your Hat.—For the benefit of those who may be curious to take observations, we give timely notice that the next total eclipse of the son will occur August the 12th, 1999, and can be seen all over. It will be the only total eclipse of the sun during the next 250 years.

Mr. Cæsar, our station Agent had a miraculous escape from sudden death on Saturday last while unloading freight from a car. Something gave way while lowering a heavy casting from the car, burying him under the truck and about ten hundred of freight. The truck saved him and he is not much the worse.

Amalgamated.—The Rural Canadian and Canadian Farmer and Grange Record have amalgamated, the proprietor of the former having purchased the Canadian Farmer. The Rural Canadian is now very much improved, and is in every respect a first class agricultural journal. It is published in Toronto at $1 per annum. C. Blackett Robinson, Publisher.

Accident.—Charlie Rowe, brother of W. J. Rowe of Barrhead Mills, had two fingers cut off his left hand on Saturday while working in Rowe's saw mill. He was cutting up slabs on a small circular when the saw caught his mitten with the above result. Dr. Carter dressed the wound. The other fingers were also more or less damaged, but the little finger and third were completely severed.

New Business.—Our townsman, Mr. W. Dundas, has decided to devote his whole attention to the boot and shoe trad. He has engaged the services of Mr. Alex. Kay. (who has given up business on his own account) and will keep a number of shoemakers employed besides. He intends keeping a large and well assorted stock of ready-made, as well as home manufacture. Mr. Dundas has good experience in the business and we bespeak for him success.

The following is a list in order of merit of the pupils of I Division of Markdale public school who obtained over 60 per cent. at the examinations for the month of January:—Class V—Mamie Bowes, Sam Douglass, Herby Brown, George Bowes, Lillie Walker, Robert J. Brown, Herbert Henry. Class IV. Sr.—Annie Cunningham, Richard Douglass, John Dundas, P. Thibaudeau, Wm. McAleer. Class IV, Jr.—Herbert Hull, Lottie Mann, Mary Nesbitt, Ben Coleman, Nettie Kay, Harry Large. Class III—Peter Thibaudeau, Mary Cosson,—Frank Porter, Teacher.

Mr. Jesse M. Loop of Eagle Mills, Simcoe, Co., and son-in-law to Mr. Jas. Plewes of this place visited Markdale this week.

Edward Brady of Euphrasia cut his foot badly on Saturday last while chopping. He had eight stitches put in it, and is now doing well.

New Paper.—A copy of the first issue of Mt. Forest's new paper, the Representative, is before us. It is a forty-eight column eight page, is ably written, neatly made up, and well printed; has also a good advertising patronage to start with. In politics it is Conservative. From what we can judge from the appearance of the paper and what we know of Mr. Lambert, the editor and proprietor, we bespeak for the Representative a successful career.

J. R. Temple's great clearing sale by auction will be continued this week Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, when there will be offered some very choice goods in Black Silk, Ladies Dress Goods, and a general clearing of all goods. As I am bound to give up the General Business, all goods offered at this sale must and will be sold. A special line of good fresh Uncolored Japan Teas will be offered each day at this sale. Come one—come all and get bargains.

New Paper. — The Presbyterian Review is the name of a new denominational paper, published in Toronto, the first number being issued the 18th December. It is handsomely printed in clear, large type, and is filled with original and well selected matter, which is calculated to interest, instruct and elevate the mind of its readers. The price ($1.00 per year) is exceedingly low for a denominational paper, and it will require the hearty support of that influential body to insure its success. We welcome it to our exchange list, and wish it unbounded success.

Enterprise.—Mr. John Moffat of the firm of Moffat Bros., founders, of this place, returned last week from a trip to Hamilton, Ont., Troy and Albany, N. Y. and other smaller places. Moffat Bros. propose enlarging their premises and going extensively into the manufacture of stoves and the above trip was made with a view to securing the most approved patterns. Troy is perhaps the most extensive stove manufacturing centre on the continent. The Moffat Bros. have been making box stoves for the wholesale trade and we are glad to learn that it is now their intention to enlarge and go into the manufacture of all kinds of wood burning stoves. We hope abundant success may be theirs.

County Council.

From the O. S. Times.

The County Council of 1885 met in accordance with statute at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. Some of the representatives of the southern townships not having yet arrived, the Council adjourned till 7:30 in the evening without organizing.

At 7:30 the different members of the Council had handed in their cirtificates, as follows:—

Artemesia—W. S. Christoe, Reeve; J. A. Blakeley, Deputy.

Bentinck—D. McNicol, Reeve; J. Messenger and J. McCallum, Deputies.

Collingwood—T. McKenny, Reeve; A. Campbell and W. Hewgill, Deputies.

Derby—J. Robetson, Reeve; W. Brien, Deputy.

Euphrasia—T. Gilray, Reeve; W. Fawcett, Deputy.

Egremont—W. Caulfield, Reeve; D. McCormick, Deputy.

Glenelg—T. Davis, Reeve; J. McMillan, Deputy.

Holland—J. Cameron, Reeve; A. Shute, Deputy.

Keppel—W. Totten, Reeve; John Clark, Deputy.

Normanby—V. Lang, Reeve; A. O'Farrell and C. Widmeyer, Deputies.

Osprey—T. Gamey, Reeve; E. Potts Deputy.

Proton—A. McPhail, Reeve; S. Rogers, Deputy.

Sarawak—R. W. McNaught, Reeve.

Sullivan—A. Pringle, Reeve; J. Stewart, Deputy.

St. Vincent—Jas. Bowes, Reeve; N. Read, Deputy.

Sydenham—W. Lang, Reeve; H. Gordon and C. H. Heming, Deputies.

Durham—D. Jemieson, Reeve.

Meaford—R. Agnew, Reeve; D. McCann, Deputy.

Owen Sound—John Chisholm, Reeve J. W. Frost and Jas. C. Miller, Deputies.

Mr. John Gale, Assistant Clerk, took the chair, and called for nominations for the office of Warden.

Mr. Bowes, seconded by Mr. McKenny, nominated John Chisholm, Reeve of Owen Sound.

Mr. McNicol, seconded by Mr. O'Farrell, nominated Victor Lang, Reeve of Normanby. (Mr. Lang desired to have his name withdrawn, but his mover and seconder did not consent.)

The ballot was then taken, with the following result: Chisholm 82, Lang 8. The election of Mr. Chisholm was then made unanimous by a standing vote. Mr. Chisholm was declared duly elected, and was conducted to the Warden's chair by his mover and seconder. The Warden elect then briefly returned thanks for the honor conferred on him.

A committee was then appointed to strike the Standing Committees, as follows: Cameron, Clark, Gamey, Bowes, and Read.

Messrs. T. Gamey and A. M. Stephens were appointed members of the Board of Audit.

Messrs. Christoe, McNicol, Read, McKenny and Frost, were appointed a committee to complete the revision of the standing rules.

Council adjourned till 2 p. m., Wednesday.

[We are unable to give a further report of the Council proceedings this week owing to a press of other matter]

Euphrasia Council.

The members elect of the township council of Euphrasia for the year 1885, being Thomas Gilray, Esq., Reeve; William Fawcett, Esq, Deputy Reeve. James Boyd, Henry Hurd, and William Shepherdson, Esquires, Councillors. Said members elect having assembled at the hall of said township, according to law, on Monday, the 19th January, 1885, made and subscribed their declarations of qualification and office in due form and took their seats at the council board.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

Robert Abercrombie, on nomination of the Reeve, and W. F. Dodson on behalf of the council were appointed auditors and a By-law passed confirming said appointment, Moved by Mr. Hurd, seconded by Mr. Fawcett, that A. F. Buchanan be appointed assessor at a salary of $75 and a By-law passed accordingly.—Lost.

Moved by Mr. Boyd, seconded by Mr. Shepherdson, that John Clugston be appointed assessor at a salary of $80 and a By-law passed accordingly.—Carried.

On motion of Messrs. Fawcett and Shepherdson, A. C. Paterson, A. T. Buchanan and George Crabtree were appointed members of the Local Board of Health.

By-law 346 appointing an assessor, and By-law No. 347, appointing a local board of health were carried through the different stages and passed.

James Falls was appointed caretaker of the township hall at a salary of $15 with instructions to hand over to the Treasurer whatever he may receive as rent for the same.

The Reeve and Deputy-Reeve, were appointed to enquire into the validity of the Treasurer's security as required by statute.

The time for the collectors to return their Rolls was extended until the last Saturday in February next.

The Reeve's Order issued on the Treasarer in favor of John McKenzie, for $15, to be applied for the relief of old Mr. Powley an indigent.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay for the use of school houses used as polling stations at last municipal election as follows, viz:—Union S. S. No. 4, $2; S. S. No. 14, $2; S. S. No. 15, $2; S. S. No. 9, $2; and for the use of Orange Hall, Village of Kimberley, used also as a polling station, $2.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay as follows for the service of Deputy-Returning Officers, and their poll clerks at municipal elections, viz:—James Struthers, Esq., $5.50, and poll clerk, $2; Nicholas Hewson, $5.10, and poll clerk, $2; Nathaniel Curry, $4.70, and poll clerk, $2; Daniel Silverthorn, $4.70, and poll clerk, $2; James Yelland, $5.08, and poll clerk, $2; Thomas Abercrombie, $4.00, and poll clerk, $2.

The Reeve's order was issued on the Treasurer in favor of Robert Dunlop, clerk, for $20, services in connection with the last municipal election.

Moved by Mr. Fawcett, seconded by Mr. Hurd, that this council now adjourn until the last Saturday in February next, and further that this council meet on the last Saturday of every month throughout the year, for dispatch of business, instead of the first Friday in each month as heretofore.—Carried.

Robert Dunlop,
Tp. Clerk.

FOR THE FARMER.

Stones and the Soil.

In some very stony localities, it is a popular belief that stones are in the process of formation, or as it is often expressed, "they grow." The fact is, instead of any increase of a stone from the surrounding soil, the action is in exactly the opposite direction. All of the soil, save the vegetable matter it contains, results from the disintegration, the breaking down and powdering, of solid rocks or stones. Changes of temperature, contracting and expanding them, break down stones. Rain penetrates the pores of rocks, and freezing them, throws off small particles Rain also dissolves some of the constituents of rocks, especially those largely, or in part, of lime-stone. Finally, plants aid in breaking up rocks into soil, by the action of their roots while growing. Also, when plants decay, various compounds, including acids, are produced, which act upon rocks and aid in reducing them to powder. Instead of there being anything like an increase in the size of rocks and stones, there are a number of agents silently but ceaselessly at work, slowly converting them to soil.—[American Agriculturist.

Farm-Gardening.

The farmer who continues .o raise the same crops that he grew before towns and manufacturing villages sprang up all around him, makes a great mistake. In the older States, at least, there are but few farms not within an hour or two hours' ride of a market. It is worth while for farmers in such localities, to consider if they can afford to raise field corn, when sweet corn will pay them much better. It is true, that sweet corn needs high manuring, but when the ears are off, there will be a heavy crop of the very best fodder. The ears will bring in ready money, just how much will depend upon the market, but safe to say, more than any crop of ripe corn would be worth. It is a mistake to grow late potatoes, to be dug when every one else has potatoes, and prices are low, while early pototoes will bring several times the price of late ones. It is so with other crops. There are but few garden vegetables that may not be grown as farm crops, and it is a mistake to raise produce that will bear transportation from a distance, instead of that suited to a near market, and must be disposed of at once. A farmer, on the other hand, would make a mistake, were he to devote his land to a new set of crops at once. He should determine to grow those things that pay the best, and to gradually work into a more profitable kind of farming. Those who propose to do this, will find sweet corn and potatoes excellent crops to begin with. Others will pay better, but these are best to prepare the land for other and more profitable crops. It would have been better had the land been prepared for these last fall, but as this was not done, make it ready as soon as it is safe to work it.—[American Agriculturist.

Live Stock Notes.

The results of neglect in the stable and stall will be apparent now. All who have failed to keep their animals clean, warm and well fed, will need to take more than ordinary care in bringing them through the winter. Liberal feeding is the only true economy in wintering stock. Induce animals to eat, keep their appetites keen with frequent changes of food, and feel satisfied, when spring comes, that all the fodder has been consumed in keeping the live stock plump and healthy. Every barnyard should have an abundant supply of pure water Animals that are well wintered are half summered. Steady work does no harm to a mature horse. If well fed, carefully groomed and kept from undue exposure, a team may labor the winter through with profit both to the owner and the animals. Horses when confined to a close, warm stable, become tender and subject to colds, etc. Incoming cows should have a limited diet of dry hay, with a little bran, for a few weeks previous to calving. The young stock, and all others infested with lice, should have the skin rubbed with a mixture of sweet oil and kerosene in equal parts. Sheep need, besides abundant wholesome food, plenty of pure air, a dry yard and sleeping place. The porkers should have already gone to the market. Store pigs will make a profitable growth if well housed and fed during winter. Light and frequent meals are best. Eggs can only be expected from fowls that are "at home" in a warm, dry house, provided with abundant food, both green and dry, lime, gravel, and pure water.

What is a Silo?

So much has been said about Silos and Ensilage in this and other journals within the past few years, that it is surprising the subject should have escaped the notice of any one, yet here is a new subscriber in Indiana who asks in effect the above questions. As there may be others to whom the matter is equally new we answer our inquiring correspondent in brief. A silo is a contrivance for preserving green fodder, in the fresh state in a manner similar to that used in the canning of vegetables and fruits for human food—by exclusion of air. A silo—literally a pit—is any air-tight receptacle. It may be built of stone, of brick or of wood. It may be constructed entirely below ground, entirely above ground, or built into a bank and be partly covered and parly exposed. The important point being that its walls shall be air-tight Green forage of any kind, especially Indian corn stalks, is cut small and closely packed in the silo, treading it down firmly. The fodder is covered by boards or planks, upon which heavy weights are placed, the cover following the fodder as it settles. The weights may be heavy logs, stones or boxes filled with earth. When the fodder is taken out for feeding, during the winter, it may be quite unchanged, may have an alcoholic odor, or even a strong odor of vinegar. In either case the animals are fond of it; but as the alcoholic or acetic odors indicate that there has been some loss of nutritive matter by fermentation, these conditions are not desirable, and recent experiments tend to show that they may be avoided. Several power cutters are now made for the purpose of preparing the fodder for storing in silos. The term ensilage is applied to the method of preserving fodder, and to the fodder that has been thus preserved. The term ensilo is short, and well suited for the first use of the word ensilage. We ensilo the corn fodder, and it comes out of the pit as ensilage.—[American Agriculturist.

Points in Poultry Keeping.

The "Plymouth Rocks," being the best feathered of all varieties of chickens, are apt to be the best winter layers, and as they feather up very young, are better suited to the incubator trade, or the artificial rearing of broilers than the "Light Brahmas," or many other varieties. There ought to be a profit in buying up young roosters, caponizing them, fattening them an selling at the usual dmarket price. Turkeys treated in this way often reach a weight of from thirty to fifty pounds. A brood of chickens led by a turkey hen to forage in the fields, will attain to great weight and early maturity without food or care on the part of the owner. The best eggs are the result of a meat diet; the high colored and well flavored eggs of Kansas during the grasshopper visitation were a marvel to strangers. When grasshoppers and worms fail, their lack should be supplied by feeding cracklings and other cheap butcher's offal. The crushed oyster shell supply, and the boxes of road dust or ashes, should be kept within easy reach. When moving to an entirely new location we secure immunity from gapes for two years. The farmer who does not provide his wife with a good poultry house is standing in his own light, as it need not be fine or costly. In winter, drop a little carbolic acid in the food mixture, once a month, as a preventative of disease, and give a few appetizers, such as cabbage, garlic, and red pepper, with a variety of grain food and not all corn. With this treatment and a proper house, we may count more certainly on profitable returns than when the fowls have to roost on icy perches, exposed to the zero winds of long winter nights. The products of the poultry yard are always in demand, and judging by the imports now made in that line, they will be the last to glut the market in our large cities.—[American Agriculturist.

Animal Longevity.

Camels live from forty to fifty years; horses average from twenty-five to thirty; oxen, about twenty; sheep, eight or nine; and dogs, twelve to fourteen. Concerning the ages attained by non-domesticated animals, only a few isolated facts are known. The East Indians believe that the life periods of the elephant is about three hundred years, instances being recorded of these animals having lived one hundred and thirty years in confinement after capture at an unknown age. Whales are estimated to reach the age of four hundred years. Some reptiles are very long lived, an instance being furnished by a tortoise which was confined in 1633 and existed till 1753, when he perished by accident. Birds sometimes reach a great age, the eagle and the swan having been known to live one hundred years. The longevity of fishes is often remarkable. The carp has been known to live two hundred years; common river trout, fifty years; and the pike ninety years, while Gesner—a Swiss naturalist—relates that a pike caught in 1497 bore a ring recording the capture of the same fish two hundred and sixty-seven years before. Insects are very short lived, usually completing the term of their existence in a few weeks or months at the most. Some even die upon the very day of entering upon their new life. As a general rule not to be applied too closely, larger types of animals live very much longer than smaller, although there may be some marked exceptions to the rule.

Never Used Ear or Eye.

In a pretty cottage half-way between Abington Four Corners and Pomfret live Mr. and Mrs. Willis Pike and their son Warren, 42 years old, who was born deaf and blind. He is of powerful frame and moves with the quick graceful motions of a panther. The only food he ever swallows is milk, which he drinks from ten to fifteen times a day. He springs out of a sound sleep in the night and darts out of doors. Before quitting the house he never fails to go to the window and touch his tongue to a certain spot in a pane, by which means he is able to tell what the weather is. During the day he lies on the floor, always in one place, which has been worn into a hollow of the shape of his body. He can tell instantly whenever his parents quit the house and which one it is. He is able to tell exactly when it is noon and sunrise and sunset. His only amusement is to walk to the old-fashioned kitchen door and rattle the thumb-piece.—[Hartford Times.

Science destroys some of the most cherished popular delusions. Catgut is derived from sheep; German silver was not invented in Germany, and it contains no silver; Cleopatra's needle was not erected by her, nor in her honor; Pompey's pillar had no historical connection with that personage; sealing wax does not contain a particle of wax; the tuberose is not a rose, but a polyanth; the strawberry is not a berry; Turkish baths did not originate in Turkey, and are not baths at all; whalebone is not bone, and contains not any of its properties.

A young school-teacher, twenty-years old, Miss Mattie Worley, of Greenwood County, Kansas, earned money enough to buy one hundred and sixty acres of land, hired men to break up eighty acres and sow ten acres of wheat, and purchased stock for the rest of the land. Madame Kuki, the wife of the new Japanese Minister to Washington, is taller than most of her country-women, and has more regular features. She is animated and the voice in which she addresses her interpreter, when making her social calls, is very musical. She dresses in the French fashion; her calling dress is of rich black velvet trimmed with fur, and a bonnet of black velvet and jet with crimson pompons.

A Japanese Native Village.

At the invitation of Mr. Tannaker Buhicrosan a number of ladies and gentlemen were present yesterday at a private view of a Japanese native village which has been constructed under his direction at Albert gate, Hyde park. It covers a considerable area of ground, and is entirely roofed in. No expense has, we believe, been spared to make the village complete in all the necessary details and surroundings, and the result has been to produce a very picturesque interior Suspended from its various shops shops and houses are Japanese lanterns, which, when lit at night-time, must greatly enhance the effect. To people the "village" no less than one hundred native men and women have been brought from Japan. These represent various trades and industries, and after the exhabition has been opened to the public will be seen in their national costume daily, engaged in their different vocations in their native-built shops and houses, as in Japan The women will also give musical entertainments, while the men will engage in fencing and wrestling. For this purpose a theatre has been fitted up. The visitors were yesterday afforded an opportunity of seeing some of the men at their athletic exercises, in which they showed remarkable skill and dexterity. There is a tea-house, where a 5 o'clock tea will be served, and a Buddhist temple; and, in fact, to quote the words of the official hand-book, "Visitors during a short sojourn in the village can imagine themselves transplanted to the 'Land of the Rising Sun.'" Sir Rutherford Alcock formally opens the exhibition to-day, and it can not fail to possess a great attraction for the public for many months to come. A hand-book and guide is published at sixpence, which gives a discription of the various exhibits, and also some information concerning the manners and customs of this interesting people.—[London News.

Nihilist Crime in St. Petersburg.

Excitement is rife among Government officials at St. Petersburg over the attempted assassination of Police Superintendent Kollert. He was attacked by two strangers in one of the main thoroughfares in bread daylight this morning. His assailants each fired shots from revolvers at him and then fled. They were pursued and captured. One gave his name as Pchelingew and the other gave his as Leonow. Both have been identified as well-known Nihilists. Superintendent Kollert's escape is considered extraordinary, as none of the shots struck his person.

California's first attempts at raisin producing were made about nineteen years ago. The following year about 1,500 boxes were made. Ten years ago the crop amounted to about 40,000 boxes, while this year it is estimated at 200,000 boxes.

"Railroad Dick."

In one of the large towns on the Pennsylvania Railway whose limits embrace [illegible] or two ago, an old negro named "Railroad Dick."

Dick's self-appointed task in life was to "see de trains in safe." In front of the station at this place run eight or ten tracks, which cross a busy thoroughfare. Dick made it his business to meet each incoming train, and run before it to clear the track of any chance impediment. Passengers would hold their breath in terror to see the stooping, ragged figure, with white hair flying and arms outstretched, running in a kind of dog trot before the engine, in the possible danger of being crushed to death.

No remonstrance or reproach could compel old Dick to give up his perilous task. It had not been a useless one. Twice he had removed obstructions from the track which would have wrecked the trains. Once he had dragged a man, who had fallen upon the rails, to a place of safety, and three times he had saved the lives of children.

"Ole Dick's got his work, sah!" he would say, when told of his danger.

He never left the station. The railway officials made a protege of the old man, and gave him a comfortable room in which to sleep back of the engine-house, and a standing order for meals at the restaurateur's. But Dick preferred to take his bread and bone in his fingers, to be eaten as he squatted on the floor of the station.

"Dem paid fellahs takes turns, but I'se always on guard," he said.

Dick probably grew feeble and stiff by old age, and the time came which everybody had looked for. He was caught by the cow-catcher of an engine, thrown against the rocks, and carried to his room dying. He lingered for a few hours. With each roar and shriek that announced an incoming train, he would struggle to rise.

"De's lots of chillen on dem tracks! Lemme go! Ole Dick's got his wohk to do!"

When told that he must die, he lay silent for a long time, and said finally, "'Pears like de's nobody to take up jes' my wohk. But de Lohd'll see to it," and so, closing his eyes, his work was over.

The roughest employees on the road were better men for having known this poor, unselfish negro, who, simply and according to his light, faithfully did the work which he thought had been given him to do.

Searching for Pirates' Treasures.

An expedition is about to start from the Tyne in search of supposed hidden treasure. The primary mover is an inhabitant of South Shields, who, as bookkeeper and cashier, has for many years been in a large steamship owner's office on the quayside. A ship's captain who has traded to the Tyne for some years was the first person to obtain the plans and papers relating to a hidden treasure from an "old salt" who was ill and living in poor circumstances, and consented to hand over the documents on receipt of pecuniary relief. He had seen the wealth carefully hidden, and; in fact, was in his younger days one of the pirates who plundered the vessel from which it was taken. The papers remained in possession of the captain for some time, during which he endeavored to get a vessel bound in the direction of the island to call and inspect the place.

He succeeded at last in persuading the owner of a ship bound for Rio Janeiro to allow the captain to call at the island of Trinidad, which is situated 250 miles south of Rio Janeiro on the Brazilian coast, where the wealth is hidden. If, on reaching the island, an inspection of the spot be satisfacrory, means will be used to get at the treasure without delay; but, should the enterprise on the island be a failure, then the ship will proceed to Cape Town, where the coals will be sold and discharged, and where it is expected a homeward charter will be secured, so that the loss on the venture will not be great.—[Lodnon Telegraph.

An Ape's Curiosity.

The object of popular interest in the London Zoological Gardens is the monkey house. A few years ago, its most attractive occupant was "Joe," a chimpanzee, who was lodged and boarded in a separate compartment. To his keeper and to the scientific gentlemen connected with the "Zoo," Joe was especially attractive, because he never learned from experience, and could be controlled only by his curiosity and fear.

Every morning when Joe was let out for an airing, he abused his liberty by leaping around the outside of the cage and pulling the tails of his mates. When it was time to shut him up again in his cage, Joe would just as regularly rebel, and refuse to come to his keeper.

As he was too nimble to be caught, and two crafty to be allured by dainties, his keeper had to use strategy.

Near an end of the monkey-house was a large dark hole out of which came a gas-pipe. Having opened the door of Joe's compartment, the keeper would peep into the dark hole, and then appear as if he saw something intensely interesting.

Joe would descend from his perch, follow the keeper, and, like him, earnestly gaze into the hole. Then, with a gesture of fear the keeper would run into Joe's cage, followed by the chimpanzee, chattering with fright, and the door would be shut.

Singular as it may seem, though this trick was repeated daily for months, Joe never learned it. Every morning he was captured by the same ruse, and yet experience never taught him wisdom.

Dr. Klenko, of Vienna, thinks that the emanations from petroleum producing soils kill cholera germs.

HEALTH ITEMS.

[illegible], of Munich, is the author of the new system of reducing flesh by not eating and drinking at the same time, but by letting two hours intervene.

In relation to the ventilation of bedrooms, Horace Mann used to say that since the atmosphere was forty miles deep all round the globe, it was a useless economy to breathe it more than once.

Patti seldom goes out-of-doors in winter without filling her ears with cotton, and protecting her mouth with a handkerchief if she speaks, just as the owner of a precious violin would protect his instrument.

One of the easiest and best disinfectants known is that invented by Dr. Vilandt, consisting of forty drops each of turpentine and carbolic acid, simmering in a small kettle of water over a slow fire in the room where the diptheritic or other patient is.

The learned Dr. Max von Pettenkofer, of Munich, says that whatever tends to lower the general health and cause depression predisposes to cholera, and that places provided with a good drainage and abundant pure water lose all susceptibility to the decease.

It is interesting to learn, in view of the general belief in the lenthening of the average of human life, that Mrs. Sarah Howlett, of Amelia, Virginia, has just cut a third set of teeth, and that Sir Moses Montefiore, at the age of one hundred, has recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Mr. E. D. Smith, of Newport, Rhode Island, an octogenarian, whose son-in-law Mr. Clarke, has lately been appointed Pension Commissioner, was nearly stone deaf when, slipping and falling in the street very recently, he hit his head, and on recovering from the stunning effect of the blow had entirely regained his hearing.

Dr. Hamilton Cartwright, Professor of Dental Surgery in King's College, London, says that with the twenty per cent. solution of hydrochlorate of cocaine, the new anæsthetic, he has removed children's permanent teeth without pain, cured ear ache in a few minutes, and instantaneously and painlessly destroyed the exposed pulp or nerve of a tooth, ordinarily an excruciating agony.

A Singular Story.

Nineteen years ago a female infant was left with an old Irishwoman in Boston. The name of the child was not given, and the only clew was a handkerchief bearing a name, which was with the child's effects. All trace of the babe's family connection was lost, and the little one grew up in ignorance of its father or mother, cared for by the old woman and her family. After a lapse of years a peculiar growth appeared on the lid of the child's eyes. She was taken to an oculist, who remarked upon the singularity of the case, and said that he had operated only upon one other similar case in the course of his practice, and that was upon the eye of a wealthy lady in a city near Boston. Here was the long hidden clew to the child's identity. The person who took the little girl to the oculist, reported what the doctor had said. An attorney was called in, and it was developed in the process of a long investigation that the name upon the handkerchief was that of a manufacturer's wife and the girl's mother. The girl was confronted with her father and mother. A settlement by the payment of several thousand dollars for back board and damages, so the story goes, and an annuity of fifteen hundred dollars for the daughter, now a young lady, was affected, it is said. When the child was abandoned, the husband of the lady was a poor book-keeper. It was feared, it is said, that the birth of the baby would anger a relative of the mother's, and so the child was given up. To-day the book-keeper is a wealthy manufacturer. He has a family who have grown up in ignorance of the existence of their eldest sister.

A Wonderful Faith Cure.

There is nothing like a miracle to whip up recruits or to convince unbelievers; and a miracle has at last been worked in the neighborhood of Hawarden castle, through the instrumentality of the Salvation army. A tram-car conductor in Chester had for fifteen years been lame in one leg. "Affliction sore long time he bore," and also tried various highly recommended patent medicines. At last he heard of the Salvation army, and he resolved to try the cure by faith. Yesterday morning the man, whose lameness had been hitherto undoubted, jumped off his car, and, to the alarm of everybody, began to indulge in extraordinary convulsions. A fear lest he should be demoniacally possessed, or perhaps intoxicatod, was at once dispelled when he fell on his knees and began to pray in what is described as "a loud and fervent manner." He then, we are told, "jumped joyfully about," and exclaimed: "Praised be! I am quite cured." Then rest of his ejaculations would be ordinarily considered profane. He then jumped on his car again and continued his official avocations. Some people in Chester believe in the miracle; others do not. There are always skeptics in this wicked world. —[St. James' Gazette.

Bitten by a Cobra.

Among many instances of snake-bite poisoning I have seen was a strong young Brahmin of twenty, well known to me, who had been bitten during the night while watching his maize crop. Ere I knew of it they had brought him into my compound in front of the bungalow. As yet he walked quite steadily, only leaning slightly on the arm of another man. There was that peculiar drowsy look in his eyes, however, as from a strong narcotic, which indicated his having been bitten for some time, and left but little room for hope now. He could still clearly tell me particulars. He had been bitten, he said on putting his foot to the ground, while moving off his charpoy in the dark, but, thinking the bite was that of a non-poisonous snake, had given no more heed to the matter, and gone to sleep again, till he was awoke by his friends coming in search of him

With some difficulty I was able to find the bite—very faint no larger than the prick from a pin, but still the unmistakable double mark of the poison fangs. He felt the poison, he said, gradually ascending the limb, and pointed to a part just above the knee, where he felt it had already reached, the limb below that being, he said, benumbed, and painless to the touch, like the foot when "asleep." I gave him the usual remedies, and kept him walking to and fro, but gradually his limbs seemed to be losing their power of voluntary motion, and his head was beginning to droop from the overpowering drowsiness that was surely gathering over him. At intervals he pointed out the poison line steadily rising higher, and was still able to answer questions clearly on being roused.

At length it seemed to be of no use torturing him further by keeping him moving about, and he was allowed to remain at rest. Shortly after this, while being supported in a sitting posture, all at once, without any premonitory sign, he gave one or two long sighs, and life ceased, about an hour after he had himself walked into the compound. There was something terribly real in this faculty of pointing out each stage of the ascending poison (as the snake-bitten patient always can) that was gradually bringing him nearer and nearer to death, with the prospect of only another hour or half-hour of life remaining in him; and yet the patient does not seem to realize this with the keenness that a looker-on does, probably from the poison benumbing at the same time the powers of the mind as well as of the body.

The Smallest Republic.

The whole territory of the state (San Marino) consists of sixteen square miles, and has a population of about 9,000 souls. The capital city, inclusive of the Borgo at its foot, has over 900 inhabitants. The army is composed of ten companies of ninety men each; but perhaps our guide forgot to reckon the reserves, for Mr. Bent says that the military force is 2,000 strong, and that half the able-bodied men of every family must be enrolled between the ages of sixteen and sixty-five, unless they are government officers, doctors, priests or students. The entire revenue of the state is less than £5,000 a year, but San Marino is a model of financial prudence, and has no public debts, lives within its income, and has even a nest egg laid by against rainy days. And although it bestows no titles on its own subjects, it swells the exchequer by the sale of orders and titles of nobility to foreigners. To avoid complications with Italy it has no printing press within its dominions. For the same reason it refrains from growing tobacco, and, buying the leaf from Italy at cost price, contents itself with manufacturing its own cigars. It possesses no penal establishments, but has made a very pleasant arrangement with its obliging neighbor. San Marino sends its crimnals to be punished in Italy, and, although that part of the arrangement is not recorded in black and white, may be said to receive monks and nuns in exchange. For the two large nunneries and four monasteries of this tiny state afford the devout, uncurtailed privileges that are no longer, it seems, to be enjoyed across the border.

Burglar Stories.

One night a dear old lady was going to bed in a remote chamber in a big house when she accidentally perceived a man hidden under the bedstead. She knelt down by the bedside, and repeated aloud the beautiful collect of the evening prayer of the Church of England. She then blew out her candle and quietly got into bed. Presently a voice sounded underneath the bed telling her not to be afraid he would do her no harm. The burglar then came out and said that this was his first offence, and that he had been driven to it by poverty. He added that the words of the collect had recalled to him the time when he was still innocent, and that if she would only forgive him he would go away quietly and never offend against the law again. The story goes on to say that the man was truly repentant and that the good lady saw him earning an honest living.

In know of one or two cases in which there has been great courage on the side of the attacked party and great cowardice on that of the burglars. In fact, this is generally the case when burglars have to deal with the police. I have a friend—a slight, delicate lady, who has shown marvelous courage in cowing a burglar. She went into her kitchen one night when the servants were out or had gone to bed, and found a man in the act of packing up all her silver plate. She resolutely locked the kitchen door, put the key in her pocket, and told him that he should not leave the room until he had placed back every article of silver where he had found it. The man obeyed her in the most abject manner, and was then allowed to sneak out of the place.—[All the Year Round.

Cattle-Ranch Speculation.

One of the most profitable businesses in the country has been the herding of cattle on the plains in the West. Up to a very recent period pasture cost the herdsman just nothing at all, for he turned the cattle loose on the unsold government lands. A four-year-old steer raised under this system cost less than four dollars, and, upon being driven to a railway station, sold for eighteen or twenty dollars. This lucrative industry has produced a race of cattle millionaires who have become as powerful as they are rich. They have been holding conventions in Chicago and St. Louis, and are asking favors of Congress. It seems that the recent large western emigration has curtailed their grazing-grounds, and in many instances they have been forced to purchase pasture which formerly cost them nothing. As the Texas cattle are benefited in health by being driven north on foot instead of being carried by railway the cattle kings ask the United States to give them a cattle trail extending from Central Texas to the Canada frontier, a distance of 1,500 miles in length by ten miles in width. This is a magnificent scheme, but the farmers in the several States and Territories interested object, as they say the cattle men would not keep within the limits of the ten miles, but would overrun the border country. It seems the cattle kings, with their armies of cowboys, have treated the settlers very badly, overruning their farms and seizing every available stream or lake of water for the use of their cattle. Many of these ranch owners are foreigners, and not a few of them sprigs of English nobility. These aliens are now monopolizing our soil by hundreds of thousands of acres. Indeed, the continued high price of meat and the profitableness of cattle-ranches have created quite a speculation in the wild lands of the West.

Tortures in Bengal Jails.

The Indian Statesman, referring to an inquiry which has been directed to be made by the Lieutenant-Governor "as to the tortures which are declared to be practised in the prisons of these provinces, particularly in the Presidency Jail, under the pretense of maintaining discipline," says: "The whole world knows the mortality that prevails in the jails of Bengal, and in particular the Presidency Jail. Now, our informants do not scruple to say that many men therein have practically been 'murdered' in the last twelve years by the repeated floggings to which they were subjected until their bodies were a mass of gangrene. Some years ago a letter in the Indian Daily News partially lifted the veil upon this prison-house, and the public heard, with indignation, of the lash being laid on 'at intervals of one minute,' to prolong the torture, and of the tail ends of the cats being fitted with contrivances to cut and tear the flesh from the body; that floggings were repeated before the wounds caused by previous lashings were healed, and that the number of corporal punishments in this jail were from thirty to sixty daily. We are quoting the very words of a long letter in the Indian Daily News of the 16th of February, 1877, and those infamous brutalities, or similar ones, are practised, we are assured, still. When a prisoner dies in hospital from these tortures the very superintendent of the jail, generally a medical officer, holds the inquest, and the verdict is one that suppresses everything that is vital in the case. Only yesterday did another gentleman, whose duties take him frequently to the jail, tell us that he had seen a hundred men at a time crowded round the hospital for treatment, and he reminded us of the fact that but three or four years ago the jail officials reduced the dietary scale of the prisoners in a way that was instantly followed by the miserable prisoners dying like so many flies in the wards."

Miners' Luck.

The death of Peter Whyte recalls the strange story of the founding of Victoria, Australia In an Australian mining camp at one of the tents sat four men—the 10th of June, 1858—talking earnestly of their future and bemoaning the past. For several months these four men had worked together in the same claim, sometimes getting barely sufficient for daily wants, sometimes not even for that. For several weeks, indeed, they had labored without any result. After a long discussion they decided to abandon the claim. Down in the mine the three looked gloomily around with a kind of sulky regret at having to leave a scene of so much useless toil, "Good-by," said one: "I'll give you a farewell blow," and raising his pick he struck the quartz, making splinters fly in all directions. His practiced eye caught a glittering speck in one of the bits at his feet. Stooping, he examined it and the place he had struck, when, with a loud exclamation, he knelt and satisfied himself that it was gold! He then commenced picking vigorously. His mates caught the meaning and followed his example. In dead silence they worked on—they had discovered a monster nugget. Then a wild, glad shout sounded in the ears of the one at the windlass, who had sunk into a half-doze, feeling probably the want of his breakfast. To his inquiry, "What is going on?" the cry came, "Wind up," and as he did so there rose to the surface a huge mass of virgin gold. When fully exposed to view the men were almost insane with joy. After watching it through the day and the long night they had it conveyed in safety to the bank. It was named the Welcome Stranger, and yielded the fortunate discoverers of it $30,000. On the site of that spot the forest and the scrub have disappeared and their place is occupied by the finest city on the celebrated gold field of Victoria.

Artificial Sea-water.

It was supposed for many years that there was some mystery in natural substances that made it impossible for man to reproduce them. Organic substances, it was supposed—that is, matter created by a living organism—could not be successfully recreated by the art of man! But this is proved to have been a mistaken notion. Urea, an animal substance, was among the first that was scientifically reproduced. Since then many other other organic substances have been recomposed by chemists and physicists. It has been believed, for instance, that artificial sea-water could not be created, and the fact that salt-water fish died in the first imitations of salt water seemed to confirm this belief. But the scientists in Berlin have reproduced a salt water that is actually superior to that of the ocean, and in which salt fish live and thrive better than in salt water brought from the ocean. Like wine, this artificial water improves with age, while the ocean water deteriorates. In the Hamburg aquarium the water has not been changed for fifteen years, and it is perfectly clear, odorless, and of the very best quality. All that is needed is to add something to make up for evaporation. The following is the receipt for making artificial sea-water: thirteen and one-quarter gallons of pure, hard well-water, forty-six and a half ounces of common salt, three and a half ounces sulphate of magnesium, five and a quarter ounces of chlorate of magnesium, and two ounces of sulphate of potassium. This mixture is allowed to stand for some time, when some live salt-water algæ adhering to stones should be added. These algæ multiply and grow quickly, and their function is to supply oxygen to the water. Some hardy animals could then be put in, and as the algæ multiply more tender ones could be added. Should the water become turbid, it should be filtered, and, to make sure of the supply of oxygen, an aerating apparatus can be used with advantage. The success in reproducing sea-water makes it possible for man to sometime get the secret of the medicinal waters which now can be taken with advantage only in the locations where they are found.

Isabella and the Earthquake.

Queen Isabella was rudely shaken by the repeated shocks of earthquake at Seville, Spain, but not seriously hurt. She had a narrow escape of being in the sauve qui peut in the theatre, where she was to have witnessed an Italian opera. But the unexpected arrival of a welcome visitor kept her at home. She was taking a cup of tea and laughing at the solemn talk of her parrot when the first oscillation took place. The bird fell down fainting from its perch, just as might a young lady. Isabella's armchair toppled over, and the cup was flung from her hand. A member of her household writes that she was not alarmed until some time after the shock, when there was a nervous reaction. When she felt the earthquake she cried out, "Why, if I were not in my own house I should fancy we were in a sinking ship." A second shock at midnight, and a third at dawn, rather upset her. Her ears were assailed by the cries of the people in the streets. She telegraphed to the King to send money at once for distribution among the greatest sufferers, and has placed the Palais de Castille at the disposal of a Spanish committee, which will give a fete there for the benefit of the victims of the earthquakes in Southern Spain. It is also proposed to set up in the ex-Queen's Paris residence an exhibition of lace, jewels, fans, art prayer books, and objets de piete belonging to the Spanish royal family. A show of this kind would be all profit.

The New Anæsthetic.

Cocoaine chloride, the new anæsthetic, which produces unconsciousness only in the locality of the body to which it is applied, is coming into active use. The swelling on General Grant's tongue, which it is feared may be cancerous, has been greatly reduced by the use of this new remedy. A physician of Vienna, Dr. Fleischl, declares that it will cure rapidly and painlessly the effects of bad habits in the excessive use of morphine and alcohol. The "patient" is deprived of the drug or the liquor, and the terrible nervous prostration which has always followed the abandonment of these stimulants is prevented by hypodermic injections of cocoaine chloride. A cure is effected in ten days. The trouble about this newest discovery is that, as soon as it is known, people, assured that they can be cured when they get too bad, will become reckless in the use of opium and liquor. The drug, however, is very expensive, and those tempted to dissipation should remember that if they spend all their money indulging in their bad habits they will have none left to spend for the cure.

The Nicaragua Canal.

Little faith is placed in Panama in the Nicaragua Canal. The experience gained in the 47 miles of work on the Panama Canal leads all practical men to foresee the great difficulties which have to be overcome in the 145 miles of the Nicaraguan Canal. One river, the Chagres, is the great obstacle to rapid advances. In the San Juan itself there is a mightier obstacle, while its numerous affluents pour millions of tons of water and debris into what is proposed shall be converted into a navigable channel. The rapids, which are so frequently spoken of as forming barriers to the success of the work, are in reality the most favorable spots for locks. It is the muddy 36 miles from the mouth of the river, or the dredging of the lake, and the cutting between that sheet of water and the shore, which combine to prevent the work being undertaken simultaneously with the easier and partially completed canal at Panama.

National Pills purify the Blood, regulate Stomach Liver and Bowels.

With umbrellas, like men, it is generally the poorest that gets left.—N. Y. Journal.

Dr. Low's worm syrup will remove Worms and cause, quicker than any other Medicine.

It has been remarked that some give according to their means, and some according to their meanness.

Destroy the worms or they may destroy the children. Use Freman's Worm Powders, they expel all kinds of worms.

A milk man who was nearly lynched for selling watery milk says the whey of transgressor is hard.—The Hatchet.

For nettle rash, Itching Piles, Ringworm Eruptions, and all skin diseases, use Prof. Low's Sulphur Soap.

"Do not marry a widower," said the old lady, "A ready made family is like a plate of cold potatoes," "Oh, I'll soon warm them," replied the damsel.

SALT RHEUM.

Salt Rheum, Pimples or Blotches can be thoroughly removed by a proper application of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate to the part, and a few doses of McGregor's Speedy Cure for impure blood. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared by McGregor & Parke. Sold at 25 cents at Hill Bro's. D. & J. 5

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed an editor, as he inspected the baby of an old newspaper friend. "If he isn't a marked copy of the old gentleman!"

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tested by years of trial and has been found the most convenient and effectual method of applying Carbolic acid. The greatest anticeptic in use for Cuts, Burns and Old Sores. Be sure you get McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold for 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 6

"You are opposed to the use of slang, then Jennie?" he said. "Well, I should twitter!" she replied, and then he knew that he must not use slang any more in her presence.—Somerville Journal.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

Said an astronomer to a bright-eyed girl, when talking of rainbows: "Did you ever see a lunar bow, Miss?" "I have seen a beau by moonlight, if that is what you mean," was the sly rejoinder.—N. Y. Independent.

Are you troubled with Sult Rheum, Rough Hands, or Old Sores of any kind that cannot be healed? Even though it be of years standing McGregor & Prrke's Carbolic Cerate will cure it. Beyond the shadow of a doubt it is the best healing compound ever known. Boils, Festerings, Frost Bites, Burns or any Skin Trouble, are alike cured by it. Sold at 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 4

"What do you think of my moustache?" asked a young man of his girl. "Oh it reminds me of a Western frontier city," was the answer. "In what respect, pray?" "Because the survey is large enough, but the settlers are straggling."—Burlington Hawkeye.

A PERFECT BEAUTY.

Perfect beauty is only attained by pure blood and good health. These acquirements give the possessor a pleasant expression a fair, clear skin, and the rosy bloom of health. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the blood and tone the entire system to a healthy action.

Marriage promotes longevity among men notwithstanding its tendency to produce premature baldness.—Boston Courier.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. J. Linton of Eugenia was summoned to appear before our J. P. on Saturday last to atone for assault made on Mr. Down on the Flesherton skating rink a few evenings ago. We understand John had to play to the tune of something over $6.00. This was an unfortunate occurrence for Mr. Linton as he is generally known as a quiet, respectable young man.

Miss Watt, who has been prostrated with a lingering illness, passed peacefully away a few days ago. Her remains were interred in Flesherton cemetery on Saturday afternoon.

A. G. Campbell, Esq., an old resident of our village, and who has just returned from the North-West, paid a brief visit to some of his friends here this week.

Mr. A. Rowe, who lives about a mile from this village, while out in the woods a few days ago, met with a painful accident by being crushed under a log while loading his sleigh, one of his knees being badly crushed.

Monday last was monthly fair day here. A few cattle changed hands, but there was not as many offered as usual, we suppose owing to the bad state of the roads to drive cattle on.

Mr. Joseph Hind, who has been prostrated for some time, is slowly recovering again.

Re-Opening.

The re-opening services of the Markdale Presbyterian church were very successfully conducted by the Rev. Mr. Scott of Owen Sound on Sabbath last. The church which has during the last two weeks undergone extensive repairs and comfortably re-seated, was filled at both morning and evening services. Mr. Scott selected for his text in the morning the 6th verse of the 87th Psalm, and in the evening 9th verse of the 19th chapter of Revelation. Both services were characterized by the marked attention of the hearers to the preacher, which was due to Mr. Scott's plain, earnest, distinct delivery which is free from all the old fashioned excited gestures.

The meeting on Monday evening, as announced, was sparsely attended, owing to the inclemency of the weather. Mr. Scott's account of his holiday rambles through England, Ireland and Scotland was both instructive and interesting, occupying the greater part of the evening. Rev. W. Casson spoke at some length on the great necessity of congregations seeing that their minister get at least one month in the year for a breathing time. He testified to the amount of good Mr. Scott derived from his holiday trip, by saying he looked twenty years younger from its effects. Rev. McLeod, Priceville, congratulated Rev. Mr. Wilson and the congregation on the handsomely furnished and comfortable interior of their church.

After a vote of thanks to the Rev. Mr. Scott, which was moved by Mr. Wm. Brown, and seconded by Mr. Anderson, the proceedings was brought to a close by Rev. W. Casson pronouncing the benediction.—COM.

The annual meeting of the County of Bruce Printers and Publishers Association was held in the Town Hall, Walkerton on Friday and Saturday last. There were present Messrs. Witlock, of the Tara Leader; Dick, Kincardine Reporter; Johnson, Port Elgin Busy Times; Stevens, Walkerton Telescope; Rittinger, Walkerton Glocke; Wesley and Lawton, Walkerton Herald; Denholm, Kincardine Standard; Pollard, Tiverton Watchman; Campbell, Wiarton Echo; Ashley, Hanover Post; Fairbairn, Teeswater News; Kay, Chesley ENTERPRISE. The officers elected for the ensuing year are:—President, J. A. Rittinger; 1st Vice Pres., W. M. Dick; 2nd Vice pres., W. S. Johnson; Secretary, J. Stevens; Treasurer, A. Denholm. The reports of officers showed the Association to be in a flourishing condition and firmly established on a durable basis. When the Association was formed the the general public had the idea that it was a combination to raise prices, but the experience of the past year has proven that the Bruce printers had no such object in view. It has been found that the prices have not been increased while there has been a great improvement in the quality of work turned out. Hence the Printers and Publishers Association is not only strong in itself but is cordially endorsed by public opinion. The June meeting is to be held at Port Elgin.—Chesley Enterprise.

The W. M. named Bros John Boland and H Reid a committee on Bills.

Grange closed in due form.

Your Committee on Temperance beg leave to report as follows: Your Committee recognize with the greatest of pleasure, the fact that prominent men and women in all moral reforms, are putting forth great exertions at the present time, to prohibit the evils arising from the use and abuse of spirituous liquors in our houses of public entertainment throughout the Dominion; and, although we may differ in our opinions in regard to the best means to be used to accomplish this great and necessary moral reform we believe it to be the duty of all good patrons to use every exertion in endeavoring to bring about some good measure for the suppression of intemperance, as well as to uphold the hands of those who are spending their time and means to bring about so beneficial a reform. As the Scott Act is now the only measure at present calculated to be beneficial in this respect, we, as a Grange and as individuals, pledge ourselves to give it our cordial support

All of which is respectifully submitted.

Moved by Sister E W Moore, seconded by Sister E Harris, that this report be adopted.—Carried.

Your Committee on Seed Grain beg leave to report as follows: The white Russian Spring Wheat still seems to be the general favorite, whilst other varieties are doing well in some localities. Such as the Flemming, Defiance and the White Fife are popular in some of the townships bordering on the Georgian Bay, but your committee would not recommend the latter varieties of seed for the Southern portions of the County as they have not so far proved a success. Barley, which is now very extensively sown, seems to be decreasing in weight and yield. Your committee believe the greatest cause of the deficiency in this kind of grain is that farmers are not as careful as they should be in procuring a change of seed. Oats have, generally speaking, not done well the past year, and it is generally admitted that the great cause of this failure can be attributed to the sowing of unsound seed. Your committee would therefore strongly recommend to the farmers the importance of changing their seed grain frequently, and to select the same from suitable locality, always taking into consideration the climate and the nature of the various soils, as for instance from heavy clay to sandy loam and vice versa is a good change and when changing from a distance, the climate from the part of the country the seed is procured should be as near in temperature as possible to that of our own; and your committee would further recommend that the members of the Grange unite with the various Agricultural Societies for the purpose of holding seed fairs, as seed grain could be conveniently changed this way.

A WISE CONCLUSION.

If you have vainly tried many remedies for rheumatism, it will be a wise conclusion to try Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It cures all painful diseases when other medicines fail.

The Three Nights.

"Where have you been?" said her sisters,
"Where have you been so long?"
"Only down by the river
To hear the blackbird's song;
Only down by the river,
And round by the castle wall,
To see the daylight fading
And the evening shadows fall."

"But why is your cheek," said her sisters,
"So very red to-day?"
The speed with which I hastened
The only cause can be
I walked too far by the river,
And the night came down at last
Before I thought of the distance;
So I hurried homeward fast."

"Where have you been?" said her sisters;
"Where have you been so late?"
"Only down by the river,
And in the castle gate;
Only down by the river,
To watch the moonlight change
The things we deem familiar Into visions weird and strange."

"But why do you look," said her sisters,
"So very pale and ill?"
"I am cold," was her only answer,
"For the night is sharp and chill,
I have stayed too long by the river,
Though it did not seem so long,
For the sky was bright and the river—
Each bright with its starry throng.

"Where can she be," said her sisters,
"So very long and late?
The merle has ceased his singing,
And sleeps beside his mate,
And the sky is dark and the river—
Each dark and drear to see;
The wind blows hard and the rain comes down
Where can your sister be?"

In vain they watched and waited,
In wonder and in pain
In vain they sought by the river,
By the castle walls in vain;—
For the maiden was gone with her lover
Away from the blackbird's song,
And away from the walk by the river,
She had known and loved so long

A Revised Edition.

Mary Mary, quite contrary,
How does your garden grow?
Do red rose and sweet mignonette
Make quite a summer show?
Twice seven days since we have met,
But it seems years ago—
Mary, Mary, so contrary,
Why do I love you so!

Mary, Mary, in your airy
Summer gown of snow,
Folding fragrant linen fair,
Through your house you go;
Full of self and full of care
Will you heed my woe?—
Mary, Mary, so contrary,
Why do I love you so!

Mary, Mary, in the dairy,
Setting pans in row,
Jingling keys and silver bells,
Marching to and fro;
Learned in all your household spells—
(Wise you are, we trow),
Tell me, Mary, still contrary,
Why do I love you so!

Ah! my Mary, comes a fairy,
Whispers soft and low,
All the sweet and sudden truth
Heart to heart must owe;
Be it joy or be it ruth,
Only this I know—
'Tis because you are contrary
That I love you so!

When The Sea Gives Up Her Dead.

I am looking back through the days and weeks
That lie in the shadowy land of yore,
An awaiting spirit stirs and speaks,
The spirit of dead years gone before.

Speaks with a murmur of mournful sighs,
In a voice that carries the sound of tears—
And lighting the lamps of its passionate eyes,
It opens the shroud of the buried years.

The wind is blowing up from the world;
The stars are shining down on the sea;
But the wind is bleak, and the night is cold,
And 'tis only of pain they speak to me.

For the wind once toyed with a silken tress,
And the stars once shone on saintly face;
And how can a faithful love grow less?
Or a new love take the old love's place.

The sea is swirling up to my feet,
Singing its monody, soft and low;
But the song of the sea is deadly sweet,
For I mind how it slew me years ago.

We had been parted I and she,
With many a hundred mile between;
And now she was coming across the sea
(Oh, the sky was blue and the waves were green)!

Coming and yet she never came!
Meeting—and yet we met no more!
She heard me not when I called her name,
Though the dead might have heard me on that shore.

Oh love, though my eyes but dimly see,
There is hope in my pathway where I tread,
That over the sea thou wilt sail to me
In the day when the sea gives up her dead.

Hearts of Old.

Ye hearts of old, ye hearts of gold,
Companions in the morning sun,
To-night I pledge you as of old,
And pay the homage you have won.

Behind the northern clouds I see
Illuminations of the night;
So through dark years shine back to me
Your happy presences of light,

Who has the power to cheer the soul
Like those we knew when life was young,
When boyhood ran from goal to goal,
And all the fields with laughter rung.

It was youth's ignorance of life
That made the days so smoothly glide;
And now, amid the clash and strife,
You, hearts of old, are deified!

Ye merry, merry hearts of old,
True mates with in the dawning light,
Desire and fancy overbold
Bring you again with me to-night.

The echoes of the hillside sound
Your voices to the vales again;
There's cheering on the old playground,
And skirmishing by bay and grain.

United States Consul Packard has requested the Mayor of Liverpool to publish the Act of Congress forbidding the landing of paupers in the United States, in order that poor people may not be deluded by ticket agents into spending their last shilling for passage to America.

Col. Burnaby, who was killed at the battle of Abu Klia, left the finished manuscript of a political novel. It is said to contain such fierce and merciless criticisms of certain political adversaries, that it is doubtful if Col. Burnaby's executors will permit the work to be published.

A special from Paris says the distress there is appalling. To provide work for the army of unemployed artizans the municipal authorities have decided upon at once carrying out several city improvements long contemplated.

In winter where one's choice of vegetables is so limited I am surprised to find how few people use beets in any other form than served with vinegar. They are exceedingly good baked for from three to four hours (they are sweeter and retain more of their flavor if baked instead of boiled for this way), then peeled, cut in slices or lengthwise and served with white sauce.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

OTTAWA, Feb.— In the House of Commons Sir Leonard Tilley laid on the table the public accounts and the Auditor-General's report.

Sir John Macdonald presented the report of the Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. Bowell laid on the table the Trade and Navigation Returns.

In reply to a question by Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir Leonard Tilley said he would lay the Superannuation Returns on the table to-morrow.

Sir Leonard Tilley gave notice of a Bill to amend the Insurance Act of 1874.

Mr. Pope gave notice of a Bill to provide for taking the census of the Northwest, and of a Bill relating to contagious diseases among cattle.

Mr. Curran moved the first reading of an Act for the distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors. Several members rose to explain the Act.

Mr. Blake—Is this the same old Bill?

Mr. Curran said it was a Bill approved of by the Boards of Trade of Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Hamilton. It embodied the views of the commercial community of Canada.

Mr. Mitchell—Does it contain any provision for the discharge of a debtor after his property is taken away?

Mr. Curran—No.

Mr. Mitchell—Then it is a one-sided affair.

Mr. Curran said the Bill aimed merely at an equitable distribution for assets. The Bill was read a first time.

The following Bills were read the first time: To limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court—Mr. Landry (Montmagny); respecting the liability of carriers by land—Mr. Coughlin; to regulate the employment of children and young persons and women in workshops, mills and factories—Mr. Bergin; to further amend the law of evidence in criminal cases—Mr. Cameron (Huron).

Mr. McMillan called attention to the fact that last session he had called for returns showing the amount of work done for the Government by the Montreal Gazette from 1878 to 1883. The Minister of Public Works had asked at the time he had made his motion that it should be made to cover the newspapers in Canada for ten years, from 1873 to 1883. It was represented that this would involve a great deal of work, but the Minister said all diligence would be used in getting it out. The return was not yet done, though it was eleven months since moved for.

Sir Hector Langevin promised to have the return ready as soon as possible.

Mr. Mitchell asked whether the returns of the stockholders of the Grand Trunk was ready. He said he asked this early so as to give no excuse for delay. (Hear, hear, and laughter)

Sir John Macdonald said the absence of the Secretary of State precluded an immediate answer.

Mr. Mitchell—I would like the hon. gentleman not to let it drift over longer than a week or so.

Sir John Macdonald, replying to Mr. Casey, said he thought the Civil Service Bill would be presented in a few days.

Mr. Blake—Is it the intention of the Government to introduce the Factory Bill.

Sir John Macdonald—That is under consideration. (Laughter)

Mr. Shakespeare—Is it the intention of the Government to introduce a measure this session restricting the immigration of Chinese into the Dominion? (Hear, hear)

Sir John Macdonald—Not until after the report of the Commission.

In reply to a question by Mr. Charlton, Sir Leonard Tilley said the net amount of the public debt of Canada on June 30 h, 1884, was $181 719 934 28, and that the increase to Dec. 31st, 1884, was $7 194 953 75 making a total of $188,914 885 05

In reply to another question by Mr. Charlton, Sir Leonard Tilley stated that of the loan of $22 500,000 which the Parliament last session authorized the Government to make to the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., the amount paid over to the company up to January 29th, 1885, was $18 591 000.

Mr. Desjardins asked whether it was the intention of the Government to accept as final the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court as to the competency of the Dominion Parliament to pass the Liquor License Act of 1883

Sir John Macdonald—A report will be obtained as to the effect of the decision on the laws of the different Provinces. It will be presented in a few days. In the meantime the Government cannot express any intentions on the subject.

Several motions were made for returns, among them being motions by Sir Richard Cartwright for returns showing the receipts and expenditures in detail up to the latest period, the exports and imports, the amount of money on deposit to the credit of the Government and the duties collected on imports. Mr. Charlton moved for a return showing particulars as to the timber licenses. Referring to a somewhat similar return last year, Mr. Charlton said that the names of the licensees were omitted. He hoped they would be supplied in this return. The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

OTTAWA.—In the Commons to-day several petitions were presented against any change in the Scott Act in the direction of more stringent prohibition.

The Speaker read a message from Earl Derby, Secretary of State for the Colonies, expressing the thanks of the Queen for the joint message of both Houses of Parliament expressing sympathy with Her Majesty on the death of the Duke of Albany.

Sir John Macdonald laid on the table the report of the commission appointed to consolidate the statutes of the Dominion.

Sir Leonard Tilley presented a Bill to amend the Act to authorize the advance of a certain sum of money to the Province of British Columbia for the construction of a graving dock and for other purposes. He explained that the existing law provided that the Government might advance money to the Provincial Governments for Provincial public works, the money to be charged to debt account. This Bill was to provide that such money should be advanced without the consent of the Local Legislature.

Mr. Blake pointed out that the Dominion Government already had the power to refuse such an application, unless backed by the Local Legislature, in any case where they deemed the concurrence of the Local Legislature necessary.

Sir John Macdonald thought it was better that the Dominion Government should not assume the responsibility of refusing or acceding to the application in such cases.

The Bill was read a first time.

In reply to Mr. Hesson, Mr. Carling stated that it was not the intention of the Government, during the present session, to propose a reduction in the rate of postage on letters to 2 cents per half-ounce.

Mr. Landry (Montmagny), in moving for Orders-in-Council and documents relating to the selection of the line for the railway between the present terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and one of the seaports of the Maritime Provinces, said there was a rumor afloat to which he desired to call the attention of the Government. It was reported that in a recent exploration from St. Charles Station on the Intercolonial to Seven Islands, the surveyors in passing through ranges five and six of Montmagny, had discovered a mountain about 400 feet high, and that the Government on being notified of this obstacle considered that the survey should cease, but that the surveyor, nevertheless, had proceeded to survey a line around the said mountain; also, that the Government had not given any order to the engineers to make an instrumental survey on that portion of the road.

Sir Hector Langevin thanked the member for the information, and said he would communicate it to the Minister of Railways.

The motion for the Orders-in-Council was carried.

The House adjourned at 4 p.m.

Saved by a Mother's Tears.

In the crowd at the Lake Shore depot last night was a big fellow wearing a fur overcoat and a broad-brimmed hat. He walked up and down the great platform with his hands in his pockets, smoking and singing, apparently in the best of humor. One of those inquisitive men always to be found near a railway train, who had been watching him for some time, finally ventured to address him.

"From the west?"

The individual in fur removed his cigar and replied, "You bet."

"Going east?"

"You bet."

The inquisitive man became interested. He was going east, too. It was eleven years since he was east of Lake Michigan, and he was going down to see the old folks in Pennsylvania.

"That ain't a marker to me," said the westerner, with great vehemence. "I went west in '49, and this is my first appearance this side of the Rocky Mountains since. I live when I'm to home in Maine, and that's where I'm going now. When I left there I was a boy of 22 or thereabouts. Do you think they will know me?" and he stroked his iron-grey beard thoughtfully.

"They will if you've got rich in the meantime," said the inquisitive man, making an effort to appear as if he did not care whether the question implied by his remarks was answered or not. He was equally surprised when his companion responded

"That's just it, stranger. I've been on the coast these 35 years. Jerusalem! but think of it—a lifetime almost. I've had more'n a thousand prospects that were considered immense. I've been chasing something, nothing, all these years. Sleeping or waking, I've seen the glitter of gold. Did you ever get that way? No, of course, you didn't. I've seen gold everywhere and yet could not find it. The mountains with their snowy peaks, the glistening ice, the sparkling frost have all filled me with wonder, avarice, greed. Everything that chose tempted me. My eyes have been strained so long, my whole being has been so absorbed, in this cursed search, that it tires me to look anywhere or at anything. I like to smoke and close my eyes and think. And yet I do not like to think. A wasted life is not pleasant for reflection. The hardships that I have endured, the things that might have been haunt me and disgust me with myself."

"Relatives down East?" inquired the man by his side, who was getting interested.

"Yes, sir, my mother; and that's what's taking me over the divide, stranger. A curious thing about that. Mighty curious. For 35 years I hardly gave the old lady a thought. She wrote frequently and I wrote when I had time, but not like I ought to have done. I was absorbed in gold hunting, when one day I received a letter from her containing her photograph. She's more'n 75 years old. It struck me like an avalanche. 'Poor old mother,' says I, and as I looked up I saw myself, wrinkled and gray, in a glass and observed, 'Poor fool boy.' Well, sir, from that moment, I lost interest in gold, quartz and placers. When I looked at the snowy peaks I saw my mother. I dreamed of her at night. Her eyes were always before me, swimming in tears as they were the day we parted. Finally I gave up, converted what little property I had into dust, and determined to go home. I don't care who knows it. Here's a '49er who has been lured from the gold country by a mother's tears. It will pay me richer dividends than the things that I have been chasing so long."—Chicago Herald.

Iron Among the Ancients.

So very few articles of iron of unquestionable antiquity have been discovered among the remains of ancient Egyptian art, while objects of bronze have been brought to light in abundance, that many have doubted whether iron had been introduced into Egypt before the time of the Ptolemies. But it is very certain that other and neighboring peoples, who never reached so high a stage of civilization as the Egyptians, knew well the manufacture and uses of iron, and it is scarcely possible that the builders of the monumental works of old Egypt should have neglected so useful a metal. Besides there are chemical reasons why the iron remains are so few and the bronze relics so many. Yet it would seem that the ancient Egyptians had a marked preference for bronze weapons, implements and ornaments.—Boston Transcript.

Every plant begins life like an animal—a consumer not a producer. Not until the young shoot rises above the soil and unfolds itself to the light of the sun, at the touch of whose rays chlorophyl is created, does real constructive vegetation begin. Then the plant's mode of life is reversed; carbon is retained and oxygen set free.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

MONDAY, Feb.— The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

The Speaker presented a legal certificate of the return of John Francis Dowling as member of the Legislature for South Renfrew.

Among the petitions presented were the following:

Mr. Morris—From the City Council of Toronto, asking for the abolition of exemptions.

Hon. A. S. Hardy—Several petitions from a large number of residents of Algoma, praying for the division of that district for electoral purposes.

Hon. C. F. Fraser introduced a Bill to amend the Division Court Act.

Also a Bill to amend the Act respecting the registering of chattel mortgages and deeds of sale.

Also a Bill to further amend the Registry Act.

The above were severally read a first and second time.

A message was received from the Lieutenant Governor, accompanied by a letter from the Marquis of Lorne, acknowledging the receipt of a congratulatory letter from the Ontario Legislature on the occasion of his retirement from the Governor-Generalship of Canada.

The Speaker read a message from the Lieutenant-Governor respecting the provision of certain sums of interim supply.

Hon. O. Mowat moved the appointment of the usual special committee to strike the standing committees—Awrey, Baxter, Creighton, Ferris, Fraser, Gibson, Hardy, Monk, Meredith, Morris, Merrick, A. M. Ross.—Carried.

Hon. O. Mowat moved the appointment of the Library Committee, as follows: Messrs. Mowat, Gibson (Hamilton), Gibson (Huron), Harcourt, Meredith, Morris, O'Connor, Ross (Middlesex), White, Wood.

On motion of Hon. A. M. Ross, the House went into Committee of Supply on the interim estimates of $350,500, needed from January 1st, 1885, to the time when the regular estimates are passed.

The motion was agreed to, passed through Committees of Supply and Ways and Means, and reported.

Hon. A. S. Hardy stated in reply to Mr. Meredith that the returns ordered last session from the Crown Lands Department were in course of preparation, he understood.

Hon. C. F. Fraser stated in reply to Mr. Meredith that the returns ordered with respect to timber limits and farming lands on the north shore of Lake Superior were of such a character, and so voluminous, that it might be two years before they were ready.

Hon. O. Mowat, in reply to Mr. Meredith, stated that several Bills were already in type, and would possibly be introduced this week.

The House adjourned at 3.45.

NOTICE OF MOTIONS.

Mr. Carnegie—That a select committee of seven members be appointed to inquire into the working of the Ontario Agricultural College and Farm (especially with regard to the financial management thereof), with power to send for persons, papers, and records, and with power to report from time to time.

Mr. Meredith—That a new writ do forthwith issue for the election of a member to fill the vacancy in the representation of the electoral district of the East Riding of Simcoe, caused by the election of Charles Drury, Esq., for that constituency having been adjudged to be void.

Mr. Balfour—Order of the House for a return of copies of all reports made to the Government by directors of joint stock road companies for the year 1884, under Section 146, Chapter 152 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by Sections 6 and 7, Chapter 24, 47 Vic.

TUESDAY, Feb.— The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

Among the petitions presented were the following:

Mr. Morris—From the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, of Toronto, for an Act to amend its Act of Incorporation.

Hon O. Mowat—From the County Council of Oxford, praying the Legislature to take steps to secure from the Dominion Government all sums granted as bonuses to Provincial Railways now declared by the Dominion authorities to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. Harcourt—Several petitions from different parts of the Province, praying the Legislature to take steps for the restoration and improvement of Niagara Falls and vicinity.

Hon. A. S. Hardy presented the report of the special committee appointed to strike the standing committees of the House.

Mr. Meredith observed that the name of a gentleman was included, who, he said, was not now a member of the House—Mr. Drury. He thought his name should not have appeared.

The report was adopted,

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Dowling was escorted into the Chamber by the Hon. A. S. Hardy and Mr. McLaughlin. He was presented to the Speaker by Mr. Hardy, who said, "I beg leave to introduce to you Dr. John Francis Dowling, the newly-elected member of this Legislature for South Renfrew, who has taken the oaths, and now claims the right to take his seat." His reception by the Speaker was the signal for loud applause of welcome, which was kept up until the new member had taken his seat.

Bills were introduced and read a first time as follows:

Mr. Waters—Respecting outlets for drainage.

Also, to amend the Municipal Act of 1883.

Also, to enable widows and unmarried women to vote for members of the Legislative Assembly.

Hon. A. S. Hardy brought down a return of the expenditure on colonization roads in 1883.

Also a return of copies of all Orders-in-Council for the sale or disposal of timber or timber berths or land in the Thunder Bay District.

Also a return showing the total number of school sections in the Province in which the Government grant has been withheld since 1880

Hon. O. Mowat, in reply to Mr. Creighton, said as long as the decision of the Supreme Court with respect to the license question stands unreversed it is the intention of the Government to acquiesce in it by abandoning their license wholesale and vested interests, provided, of course, the Dominion Government acquiesce in it; and it is too monstrous to think of their not acquiescing in a decision of the Supreme Court when they had sought it themselves.

Mr. Carnegie moved for a return showing the several lots in Haliburton and Peterboro' which have been sold, located, etc., since January, 1880.

Hon. T. B. Pardee—I desire to call the attention of the hon. member and the House to the nature of the motion. It is a motion involving a great amount of labor without being of any, or at least commensurate service to the House or the country. If the hon. member wants to get any particular information, I say he is obliged and bound to give reasons why he wants to get the information. He asks for information with respect to eleven townships in Haliburton and Peterboro' which have been sold, located, disposed of, or applied for, since the first day of January, 1880; also, the dates of said sales the persons to whom sold, the prices paid and terms of payments; also the dates of the several applications for the purchase, location and terms of location of said lots. Now, sir, I find upon inquiry that this would involve a great amount of labor, which I cannot conceive would be of any sort of use to the House. It is not my desire, neither is it the desire of the Government, to withhold any information from this House, but hon. gentlemen must see that their motions should be confined to what is reasonable and what is serviceable to the House and the country. Now if he will say any particular number of lots, or any concession, some particular sales or applications or transactions with respect to which he wants to get information, that information will be furnished. I will not say that the Government will refuse to furnish the information called for by this motion, but it is an unreasonable motion to accede to without making out a cause for it.

Mr. Carnegie consented to the question standing over until he had decided as to the lots he required information on.

Mr. Wood moved for a return showing in detail the expenditures made in the township of Huntingford by the authority of the Provincial Board of Health during the late smallpox epidemic that prevailed in that township, with the number of cases and deaths and the length of time the epidemic prevailed.

Hon. A. M. Ross asked if the hon. gentleman had no objection that he should leave discussion over till to-morrow.

The motion was allowed to stand.

Mr. Brereton moved for a return showing the number of instructors engaged in the creamery at Guelph, with the salary of each; the number of students instructed in the art of butter-making, distinguishing between those attending the college and those attending to learn the butter-making only.—Carried.

The House adjourned at 4.05.

Of Sound Mind.

A rich old fellow died, and when his estate was being settled up, his widow was called in to give some testimony regarding the will.

"Mrs. Miller," said the attorney, handing her the will, "will you be kind enough to look at the document, and tell me if it is correct as far as you know,?"

"What is it?" asked the widow.

"It is your late husband's will."

"Oh, is it? Well, it was never as extensive as that when he was alive."

"I don't mean that, madam. I want to know if you think this is the correct will."

The widow took it and began to read.

"Of course," she exclaimed, "this is his!"

"Why do you think so, madam?"

"Because it says here, 'I, James Miller, being of sound mind.' Now, that is him all over. He contended with me from the time we were married that he was of sound mind, and said he'd stick to it with his last breath, even if I did persist in saying he didn't have sense enough to put up an umbrella on a rainy day. He used to do some almighty fool things, but I'm glad to see he had a good opinion of himself to the end."

The widow's testimony was accepted as competent.—Merchant Traveler.

Lord Malmesbury's Stories.

One day when Charles Lamb was playing at whist with his friend, Basil Montagu, he said to him: "Bazil, if dirt was trumps, what hands you would hold!" Placed next this story is a saying of Sydney Smith, which is a good example of his style of humor, or drollery, as it is styled in the diary. Sydney Smith once said apropos of some smart and dashing widow, "When Mrs.—— appears in the neighborhood the whole horizon is darkened with majors." If any reader is curious to see the well-known story of the Chief-Justice and the braying-donkey put in a very concise form, he will find it set down under Sept. 13, 1854, and next it one almost as good and not so well known, of Lord Norbury and a lawyer named Parsons. These two were one day walking together when they came upon a gibbet. Lord Norbury pointed to it and said to Parsons: "Where would you be if we all had our deserts?" "Faith," said Parsons, "I should be travelling alone." O'Connell does not perhaps play so large a part as might be expected as the author, or supposed author, of good things. One saying of his however, is recorded, and it is worth quoting. Of a certain lady-Lieutenant, he remarked that "she had all the qualities of the kitchen poker without its occasional warmth."

A new horseshoe is now being made, which is in two parts, the upper designed to remain permanently upon the foot, where it will last for an indefinite time, as no wear comes upon it; the other, that which contains the corks, and which is joined to the upper in an ingenious manner. The lower halves of the shoes are interchangeable—sharp corks for icy weather and dull ones for heavy draught horses, or they may be removed entirely at night to prevent injury to the animal while in the stall.

The Deutsche Medizinal Zeitung gives an account of a series of careful experiments made in the Prussian army as to the utility of serving schnapps to soldiers in active service. After prolonged trials the army surgeons abandoned the use of spirit, and give tea or coffee in place of it.

Long Ago.

We wandered in a garden fair,
When summer sun was shining,
And laden was the balmy air
With scent of roses rich and rare
Around us intertwining.
There trilled the thrush his glorious song;
There thrilled the echoes all night long
The warbling nightingale.
You taught me all such songster said,
And in each floweret's heart you read
Some hidden tale;
You said their message I should know;
'Twas simple as an easy rhyme—
But that was once upon a time
Long ago!

We parted in a woodland glade
When the autumn winds were sighing,
In gold and russet bright arrayed
A glowing canopy displayed
The summer leaves a-dying;
And but the wind, no other sound
Than a leaf that fluttered to the ground,
And a far-off robin singing,
We heard. You guessed my thoughts and said,
"In spring, the swallows who have fled
Will back be winging;
The trees a brighter emerald show,
The rose a richer crimson glow,
Than any gleamed in this year's prime"—
All this was once upon a time
Long ago!

"What though a while we part," you cried;
"What though the wind is sighing;
The spring will autumn's frosts deride,
The summer laugh at winter-tide,
Long power to grief denying.
We part, but never say farewell;
Nor let the dead leaves to us tell
A tale of changeless sorrow;
Fair spring comes sparkling down the dell,
And in that morrow,
If still upon this world below,
We'll meet 'neath yonder spreading lime"—
You said so once upon a time
Long ago!

Perchance you have forgot all this;
'Tw's long ago
Perchance you sneer at words like bliss
And lover's woe;
Or else you are amused—as I—
To think we once swore we should die
If fate us parted;
To think we vowed so soon to meet,
And said in spring time we would greet
Or else be broken-hearted.
Strange—is it not?—to have fancied so.
You smile, no doubt, such things to know,
Or do you count it as a crime
To think of once upon a time
Long ago!

"Io Triomphe."

Frank M. Imbrue in St. Joseph Gazette

In gala barge I drifted,
When morning, golden gifted,
Her sunshine softly sifted
On smiling shore and sea;
Her handmaids coming, going,
Her waving sickles mowing,
Blossomed meadows set a-flowing,
Elixir, sweet and free.

I leant on silken pillows,
My voice rang o'er the billows,
And crooned among the willows
In their ripple haunted home;
The rosy clouds were parted,
Like petals crimson hearted,
Then close beside me darted
A bark just like my own.

A rich voice, clarion noted,
Nearer, nearer to me floated—
Old Triton fairly gloated
At the mocking triumph lay;
"I scorn the name of sorrow
Let love-lorn landsmen borrow
The snow flowers of to-morrow,
Mine wreathe the each bright to-day!"

With pulses bounding, stinging,
I listen to the singing,
And to the frail sides clinging,
I leant to catch each word.
Without a moment's warning,
This barge of my adorning,
My light weigh proudly scorning,
Sank like a wild sea bird!
* * * * *

I awoke to wild caresses,
On my face on salt sea tresses,
And I knew the love which blesses
Only once in life was mine;
The life I doomed to sadness
The heart I stung to madness,
He offered up with gladness
By right of love divine.

He told the story olden,
Fell shades by angels holden,
When from heaven's cornice golden
And girt the rosy hours,
Then outrang a prouder measure,
"Landsmen, landsmen, love is pleasure,
Earth has not so dear a treasure
As is love, this of ours?"

A Valentine.

Your gran'ma in her youth, was quite
As blithe a little maid as you,
And though her hair is snowy white,
Her eyes still have their maiden blue,
And on her cheeks, as fair as than e,
Methinks a girlish blush would glow
If you recalled the valentine
She got, ah! many years ago.

A valorous youth loved gran'ma then,
And wooed her in that auld lang syne;
And first he told his secret when
He sent the maid that valentine.
No perfumed page nor sheet of gold
Was that first hint of love he sent,
But with the secret gran'pa told—
"I love you"—gran'ma was content.

Go, ask your gran'ma, if you will,
If—though her head be bowed and gray—
If—though her feeble pulse be chill—
True love abideth not for aye;
By that quaint portrait on the wall,
That smiles upon her from above,
Methinks your gran'ma can recall
The sweet divinity of love.

Dear Elsie, here's no page of gold—
No sheet embossed with cunning art—
But here's the solemn pledge of old:
"I love you, love, with all my heart,"
And if in what I send you here
You read not all of love express'd,
Go—go to gran'ma, Elsie dear,
And she will tell you all the rest.

The Natal Day of Robert Burns.

Immortal Robin! thou commandest
Our heart of hearts to-day,
O'er all the earth thy name and worth
Our fondest feelings sway.

We call to mind the songs that bind
Our bard to us forever,
And bless the day that placed in play
The joy with which we quiver.

Through thee the land whose sacred strand
Can boast of Bruce and Wallace
Receives a glory which heroes hoary
Acknowledge without malice.

Through thee the rights and the delights
Belonging to our race,
No more despised, are recognized
By men in power and place.

"A man's a man" becomes the plan
By which we measure Kings
And "Gladstone's Bill" most surely will Give further freedom wings.

No more can "birkies" with lordly dirkies
Control the will of worth,
Nor breadth of acres make slaves or Quakers
Of men on God's free earth.

And "men to men"—(no Kaiser can
The glorious work retard)
Are fast becoming with bosoms booming
The "brothers" of the Bard.

W. MURRAY.

The township of Southampton, N. J., is deeply in debt and saw no prospect of ever recovering till the committee conceived the bright idea of turning the town hall into a roller-skating rink and charging an admission fee of 25 cents. The scheme worked like a charm and the hall is crowded nightly. There is now a prospect of the debt being removed at an early day.

FARM AND GARDEN.

[illegible] — How to Treat Frost-Bitten Fowls — Ventilate the Stables.

Summer Fallowing.

Prof. Mills, of the Agricultural College, gave an interesting address at the farmers' meeting in the county of Huron on the advantages and disadvantages of summer fallowing. He said: "Summer fallowing was one of the oldest means of cleaning and preparing the soil, especially for fall wheat. Some writers and some practical farmers had urged several strong objections against it, but there were the following strong points in its favor: 1. Its destruction of thistles. 2. The improvement in the mechanical texture of the soil. 3. The dormant mineral plant food is made available by exposure to the air. 4. By the exposure of the soil to the air the humus, or vegetable matter, is converted into nitric acid, so that the plants may use it. 5. The soil being frequently turned over, absorbs more ammonia than in any other process. Upon each of these points Mr. Mills dwelt in a thoroughly practical manner. The objections to summer fallowing were chiefly two; first, the loss of the year's crop, and, second, the loss of the nitrates by drainage. He cautioned the farmers against coming to a conclusion upon one single experiment. What was wanted was a continued experiment that would satisfy. He gave the result of an experiment on the Agricultural Farm, near London, Eng., where the same quantity of land was tested by a continued four years' sowing, and the production was 66¾ bushels, and by an alternate summer following and the production was 79 bushels. In speaking of green manuring the following four advantages were pointed out: First, enriches the soil by ash constituents from subsoil; second, adds to soil the humus from the atmosphere; third, collects soluble nitrates from soil and returns it in an insoluble state; and, fourth, greatly improves the mechanical texture of the soil."

Frost-Bitten Fowls.

Canadian Poultry Review: When the comb and wattles get frozen the frost should be removed as quickly as possible. Take snow and with the hand apply to the frozen parts, rubbing gently until all the frost is removed. Then anoint with glycerine in which a few drops of carbolic acid have been mixed. Continue this application until the parts assume their natural color or nearly so, and keep the birds in a warm place, as after being once frozen that winter they will be very easily frozen again. Care must be taken that all the frost is removed, if not, the parts are apt to fester and wither, and the points disappear.

How a Creamery Grew.

Canadians may gather a few practical hints from the following story related by the Kansas City Live Stock Journal. It describes the growth of what is now a full grown creamery: "One of our grocers concluded to try a creamery in connection with his business, and arranged his cellar for the purpose. In the cellar is a spring of clear, cool water in which he sets his milk cans. A barrel churn with a capacity for 32 gallons and a butter-worker was procured. The cans he uses are of such size that one inch of cream in the gauge will make one pound of butter. There is great difference in milk, but cream is so nearly alike in its production of butter that a given amount of it always gives the same weight of butter. Those cans were at first furnished by the creamery, but now they are bought by the farmer. The creamery owner at first agreed to give as much for an inch of cream as the stores in the town were paying for a pound of butter, but before long he found that he could buy cream at 20 cents per inch and sell his butter for 32 cents per pound, and he began giving two cents more for an inch of cream than a pound of butter bought in the market. At first the farmers were a little shy about selling their cream, but some of them began an experiment, and they found that they got more money by selling their cream than by making butter, and the churning was saved. "In a short time the creamery man had his routes all over the country and did his churning by steam. He tells me that by feeding the buttermilk to pigs he gets enough out of it to pay the man who has charge of the creamery, and now while home dairy butter is dull in Cleveland at 16 cents, he gets 25 cents easily. By making a business of butter making every operation is performed at the right time, and by mixing the cream of all the cows a uniform grade of butter is made, and all parties are benefitted."

A Suggestion.

The Cleveland Herald recommends that where it is intended to try and bring up the poor field, instead of waiting until it is ploughed, the farmer should top-dress when the ground is frozen, and let the grass have the benefit of the manure for one year. The thickening up of the sward and multiplication of roots in the soil will often furnish more plant food than the manure would have done, and the mechanical condition of the soil will be greatly improved, and the farmer then gets the natural renovating effects of the grass-roots to give the soil a start, which is nature's plan. With a good sod, the fertility of a field is assured.

Profits of Sheep Husbandry.

The Boyd Bros., five miles south of Meneken, have 540 head of sheep, mostly Merinos. These gentlemen came from Ohio, the great wool State, two years ago, and they state that sheep husbandry will be fully as profitable in this region as in Ohio. Their flock has wintered well both winters, the percentage of loss being less than in Ohio because of the dryness of the atmosphere. Comfortable sheds have been provided, and Mr. Boyd says he fed his sheep a less number of days in this country during winter than in Ohio. In that State feeding usually begins about the middle of November, while here he began the 16th of December and quit the 26th of March. The sheep gained rapidly from the time they began feeding in the spring, which is not always the case East. Boyd's sheep sheared on an average nine pounds of wool to the head, which netted 16 cents per pound. The percentage of increase is also above that in the East, which is seldom over 75 per cent. Boyd has 147 lambs from 116 ewes. Certainly money cannot be made faster in any country than in Dakota by those who go into stock raising on a moderate scale. It will pay 100 per cent. more than grain, and it is only a question of time when the farmers will see this.—Dakota Tribune.

Stable Ventilation.

The Live Stock Journal of Chicago says: "There is a great deal of cheap talk about ventilating cow houses and stock barns, but the great trouble with such buildings is an excess of ventilation. It is only making a bad matter worse to put a ventilator on a barn in which every gust of wind it lets in the stables, and manure freezes fast to the floor. If a stable is in fact made so tight that its occupants cannot get air enough to breathe, more air should, by all means, be admitted in front of them, so that they can breathe it while fresh and pure, and not let it in behind them by opening a window in their rear, as is most frequently done, to become loaded with the effluvia from their droppings before it can reach their nostrils. A stable in which air circulates so freely as to keep the temperature down is already too much ventilated. It is a good plan, in these days of cold and high winds, to look carefully round the stable to see how the automatic ventilation is carried on, with a view to applying a remedy with more boards and battens. Loss is inevitable when stock suffers with cold. It pays to keep it warm at any cost. There is nothing more economical than comfort, especially for milch cows."

Other Farm Notes.

Doors have been so far improved by a recent invention that they may be hung so as to open either way and from either end with equal facility.

The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station calls attention to the fact that in its experiments potatoes raised from large, whole seeds ripened nine days earlier than those from seed cut to single eyes.

The great secret in raising small fruits consists in keeping the ground free from weeds and grass. Their roots are more vigorous than those of vines and bushes, and they appropriate the moisture required to form fruit.

Carrots are recommended as feed for farm horses, as they save corn and give a fine gloss to the skin, besides promoting a healthful condition of the system. From 14 to 21 pounds is a liberal allowance, anything over that being apt to affect the kidneys.

A resident of Australia states that the majority of the horses there are vicious and given to the trick of buck jumping—that is, to a succession of jumps from all four to all four legs. This is chiefly due to defective breaking, which, practiced year after year, has created and cultivated hereditary vice.

Perils of the Snow-Bound in the Cascades.

Yesterday morning the Ogallala, the Oregon Short Line Pullman, passed through this city. This sleeper was the one which for twenty-three days was in the snow blockade at Hood River station. One of the victims gave an account of the privations and hardships endured by the passengers during the siege: "It would take a column to describe the horrors we suffered," he said. "Imagine a bank of snow thirty feet in height and frozen solidly, and a train containing 125 passengers snow-bound in this mass. Here we laid for twenty-three days, five of which were passed without a mouthful to eat. When provisions at last reached us they were brought by a dozen men, who packed them for some fifteen miles over the snow. Our fires and lights went out, and it was a fight to keep ourselves from freezing to death. To make matters still more horrible, the measles broke out, and we were suffering from three of the greatest terrors known to mankind. At last relief came, and the snow had become so hard that it was necessary to blast our way out. This was slow and tedious. The only thing during those five days that we had to alleviate our sufferings was an abundance of pure water. We reached Ogden at last, and were thirty days making the trip."—Laramie Boomerang.

Female Thugs in Russia.

A case recently tried before the Criminal Tribunal of Odessa has brought to light some further proofs of the diabolical tenets held by a secretly organized and fanatical Russian sect, against which several prosecutions have from time to time been instituted. This sect, which is under an oath of secrecy, appears to consist entirely of women. These female fanatics, or rather female Thugs, have become infamous under the denomination of "Angelmakers." They secretly destroy the children, generally infants at the breast, committed to their charge. As nurses, generally, and, more frequently, as caretakers of illegitimate children, they destroy their charges in any manner which promises the safest means against detection. They profess their mission is to murder for the assured salvation of the souls of their innocent victims, and at the same time to earn for themselves eternal glory. The prisoner tried was charged under the name of Rachel Ostrovskaia, but was known to the police by several aliases. She is a married woman, 28 years of age; one of her known victims being her only child. Three cases of child-murder, one by strangulation, were proved against the prisoner, who was condemned to fifteen years' hard labor. The woman appeared entirely unaffected, and when called upon by the Judge replied simply and with the utmost composure, "Do with me what you will; I am in your hands."

A Valuable Hint.

"What are you buying, now?" asked Ned Stevenson of Andrew Powell, on meeting the latter in a jewellery store.

"I am looking for some present to give my wife on her birthday. I tell you, making presents costs a heap of money."

"Why don't you do as I do? I have never failed to make my wife a present on her birthday every year for twenty-five years, and I am not out a cent thus far."

"How do you manage it?"

"It is very simple. After we were married, when her birthday came around I gave her a $20 gold piece. When my birthday came around she gave me the $20 piece back, and we have kept that up ever since, and neither of us are out a cent."

WINTER IN THE FAR WEST.

[illegible] — Completely Blocked by Ice and Snow — [illegible] Prices for Provisions — The Mining Outlook.

(Winnipeg Sun.)

Mr. W. Arnot, of Calgary, returned by the last train from the mountains, where he had gone on a visit. The journey from the first crossing of the Columbia to Calgary took eight days, on account of stoppages and snow, and Mr. Arnot states that at this season the journey cannot be accomplished any quicker. From the 20th of December to the 10th of January the road was completely blocked with snow and ice. East of the tunnel it was twenty-five feet deep. Summit Lake had overflowed the track and left eight inches of ice above the rails. Golden City was also overflowed, and if there had been any inhabitants left in it, they would have found three feet of ice in their houses. A gang of one hundred men was set to work with picks and shovels, and the road at the present time is clear through to the end of the track. Times, Mr. Arnot said, were at present very dull. A good business was done at Christmas and New Year, but since that there has been little money in circulation. The restaurants and eating houses do a lively business, but this was more due to whiskey at 50 cents a drink than meals at the same figure. Although flour was selling at $8 per sack, potatoes and beans—staple commodities—at 10 cents and 20 cents per pound respectively, beef at 20 cents and eggs at $1 25 per dozen, the cost of meals was the same as at Calgary—50 cents apiece. An enterprising trader was selling whiskey at three drinks for a dollar. But enterprise is sadly frowned down by the police. A few days back several seizures of 100 gallons apiece had been made by them. All the settlements were filled with men who had been prospecting and mining during the summer. The majority of them seemed satisfied with their season's work. There had undoubtedly been some good finds, and the men as a rule were hopeful of next season's campaign. The only mine, however, which was really being worked during the winter was one twelve miles south of Golden City. It was a good claim, soft milling ore, and was considered by all the miners in the country as being very rich. The quartz was like a sponge in appearance, and the gold particles could be seen sparkling all over it. The party was now erecting a sort of mill for crushing the ore. A number of men had gone across the Selkirks to the second crossing of the Columbia, to build a city eighty miles beyond Beaver Creek, for occupation next summer by the advancing railroad men.

The End of Bleeding Heart Yard.

An obscure and poverty-stricken nook of the city, which owes its interest, not to history, but to fiction, is about to disappear from the map of London. Bleeding Heart Yard, which Dickens peopled with his sympathetic characters, is now a desolate tract, the houses all empty, the yard deserted, but quite as dirty as of old. The name had a mystery about it which had fascinated the novelist. He himself tells how the inhabitants were quite at variance as to the source of this picturesque and suggestive nomenclature—some proudly confident in an early murder, while the more sentimental inhabitants had a beautiful legend of a broken-hearted lady, to which they clung with desperate unanimity. As sometimes happens in London archæology, the true solution was suggested by a tavern. It is curious to find publicans unconsciously discharging the duties of the Herald's College, but topography and tavern signs go often together. In Charles street, Hatton Garden, there was some years ago—and it may still exist—a public house of which the name was the "Bleeding Heart." The origin of the sign dates from before the Reformation, and related to the Roman Catholic mystery of the rosary—the Virgin's heart pierced by five swords.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Genuine Heroine.

Young Authoress—My dear, I want a heroine for my new novel. Can't you give me an idea?

Her Husband—Certainly, love. You want her to possess a combination of traits never before dreamed of, I suppose?

"That's it; that's it. But it must be a combination calculated to make a man love her to distraction."

"I see. Well, in the first place she should be literary."

"Of course."

"The author of a book?"

"Just the thing; but how shall I make her entirely different from other literary ladies?"

"Have her look over her husband's wardrobe and sew on buttons before starting any new novels."

Red Lights.

"Come in off that platform," said a conductor on a green line street car to an old bum on the front end, one cold night last week.

"Whaz mazzer wiz zu?" grumbled the bum, "I hain't hurtin' nothin."

"That's all right, but you must come in."

"I shay I won't."

"But you shall. I'll be durned if I'm going to have that nose of yours fooling all the people along the street, and making 'em run out in the cold to catch a red car. Come in I say," and he yanked him back and piled him up in the corner.

Tourists must beware how they dress at The Hague. A young English lady, who dared to wear a felt bowler hat, such as the fair sex in this country so often appear in, was positively taken off to the police station by the enlightened Dutch guardians of the peace, on the pretence that the people thought she was a male student in woman's clothes.—London Figaro.

To counteract the effect of a dose of poison accidentally administered to a man, near Beattyville, Ky., there being no emetic remedy on hand, a woman thought the nicotine found in a pipestem would answer the purpose. She broke an old stem, scraped out the inside and gave it to the patient, who died in ten minutes.

THE ANTHROPOPHAGI.

An [illegible] Tells How Cannibals Eat Their Victims.

William Churchill entertained the Silver Star Band of Hope yesterday afternoon with an interesting lecture on his personal experiences among the cannibals of southern Polynesia. The gentleman has been engaged for several years on a scientific expedition among the islands of the South Pacific, and his impressions of native life and manners are fresh and vivid. In the first part of his lecture he gave a geographical description of the islands and located the principal groups. The coral reefs, he said, were in no wise like those of the conventional geography. They are only seen at low-water mark, and are from ten to fifteen miles from the islands. The islands rise abruptly out of the water, some having perpendicular elevations of five hundred feet. The climate and luxuriance of vegetation were next described by the speaker, together with the dress of the natives, their food and houses. As regards color, the inhabitants of the Fiji Islands are copper-colored; the women are tall, willowy, and well-formed. The son of one of the kings of those regions was 6 feet 2 inches tall, and weighed 240 pounds, and was the finest specimen of physical manhood the speaker ever saw. Farther north the color of the natives was black, and in New Guinea a charcoal mark was lighter than the tint of the native skin. There are no cannibals in the Fiji group, as is commonly supposed, no man having been eaten there for six years. South of the Fiji, toward Australia, is a group of 180 islands known as the Solomon group. In these islands cannibalism is daily practiced. The speaker related an incident that happened to him on the island of Malacollo. Having landed from his schooner he approached the town, which is always built a few rods from the shore, and found a number of women seated in the largest house. He addressed them in their dialect, but they would not speak, though it is as hard for a woman to keep silence in those regions as it is in a more civilized community. The women left the house, and he followed them to the shore, where a native had just landed from his canoe. The man was followed by about two hundred others in their canoes, who carried among them a dead native. This man they had killed in a war on a neighboring tribe. The man was tied with grass ropes and carried to a public square by the women, all taking care not to touch the body. Three men then extracted the entrails from the body, while others dug a large hole in the earth. The cavities of the body were filled with heated stones; then the body was placed in the hole, and heated stones heaped on it. After a two-hours' dance and incantation the body was thought to be done to a turn, and was taken from its roasting place and carried around on sticks and introduced to each warrior. It was then placed in a sitting position, and was approached by the chief, who inquired if it had been satisfactorily treated, and as the body did not avail itself of the opportunity of expressing its gratification the priest of the town answered for it. After this ceremony the body was cut with knives of stone, used only for sacrificial purposes. The choicest morsels of the roasted flesh, according to the native taste, were the upper arms and the thighs, and these human delicacies were reserved to tickle the palate of the chief. The rest of the body was divided among the warriors, with the exception of the head, which was given to the priest, and the hands and feet, which were contemptuously handed to the women. The pieces of human flesh were all placed on banana leaves, and each man waited until all had been allotted their share. Then the toasted portions were poised simultaneously on wooden forks and deposited down the cavernous throats of the assembled cannibals, exceeding relish being shown in the feast of human flesh, though the next day most of them had the colic. The greatest care was taken not to touch the flesh with the fingers. The leaves of banana were thrown in a large fire, the wooden forks were placed in a running stream and were allowed to remain there for three days. The only men who touched the body were those who prepared it for cooking, and these were driven into the woods with stones, where they were compelled to stay for three days without eating. After this probationary period they were allowed to return, having been thought to have expiated the fault of touching the human remains.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Life's Thread was Snapped.

In the early part of last fall John Wendell, with his wife and little boy of 3 years, moved from Chico to Helltown, where he obtained steady employment in the jute mill. On Monday afternoon, while Mr. Wendell was at the mill, his wife was in the parlor at work on the sewing machine, while her child, Willie, was seated near the window, directly in front of her, looking at one of the large children's picture books. Mrs. Wendell was sewing busily on the machine, a large and heavy one, when suddenly the needle snapped. She replaced the broken needle and had again taken her seat when she noticed her child's head leaning upon the book. Going over to him, she was horrified to observe a tiny stream of blood trickling down from the bright golden hair. Little Willie was dead. The fatal needle, breaking, had been hurled through the air and had pierced the child's medulla oblongata.—Chico (Cal.) Chronicle.

Not to be Made Known.

Young husband (complainingly)—I wish we could find a cook who can make pumpkin pie such as my mother used to make.

Fashionable young wife (with surprise)—Did your mother go into the kitchen and make pie?

Young husband—Yes, and mighty good pie it was, too.

Fashionable young wife—Well, I hope you won't say anything about it in the presence of the servants.

At Elk Rapids, Mich., there are charcoal works which consume 40,000 cords of wood per annum. The smoke from this was formerly wasted, but now it is manufactured into chemicals by being blown by immense fans into a purifier, from which it eventually comes into the form of an acid that is as clear as amber. From the acid are produced acetate of lime, alcohol, tar and gas.

MARKDALE FEB. 12, 1885.

FORWARD MARCH.

Notwithstanding the depression and general cry of hard times the STANDARD has experienced a clear gain of nearly 150 subscribers over any previous year. This is indeed gratifying to us, and is also conclusive evidence of the growing popularity of the paper, and in order to still improve and continue to merit the hearty support of our patrons, as well as encourage further additions to our subscription list, we have just completed arrangements whereby we will be enabled to give from week to week a summary of the doings of both the Ontario and Dominion Parliaments now in session, also Canadian and foreign telegraphic news, &c. This will be a valuable improvement, and will doubtless be highly appreciated by the readers of the STANDARD.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—While the news of the recent fiendish attempt to blow up the Houses of Parliament in England is fresh in our minds and expressions of horror and indignation are universally heard and vows of vengeance freely uttered, I crave the liberty to give your readers a chapter of Irish History, which may be new to many and interesting to all. While I would not for one moment seek to turn aside the fury of indignation from the perpetrators of that diabolical crime; yet I would earnestly direct attention to the scource of all these troubles which afflict the British Nation, and thereby not only create a sympathy for but a desire and determination to do justice to that unhappy land which has for ages groaned under the lash of a tyranny more capricious than the once odious American Slavery and more cruel than Russian despotism.

It is taken for granted not only throughout Great Britain but also on this side the Atlantic that the crime above alluded to is justly chargeable to Irishmen and of course it must be admitted that circumstances greatly strengthen the assumption; yet in the absence of direct proof and with the knowledge that communism, with which Irishmen have not identified themselves, is rife in many parts of Europe, judgement should be suspended.

It is an invariable law of our nation that love begets love justice and equity begets like feelings and so too does cruelty and injustice beget hatred and revenge in the bosoms of those who have been cruelly and unjustly treated and this law governs the whole animal creation from the highest to the lowest rank. So too, we find that where society is in a rude and primitive state, where no law prevails, or where the law is not administered with a strict regard to justice and equity, where the strong are allowed to impose on the weak or the rich to prey upon the poor; poverty and weakness are necessarily and unavoidably driven to seek redress in the only way open to them, revenge and society elevates Judge Lynch to the throne from which justice and equity have been deposed. Need we wonder then if Irishmen feeling their weakness and poverty and knowing the might and wealth of that power which has for ages oppressed them with a cruel and bitter oppression, knowing too that all their supplications and appeals to the justice and humanity of their strong oppressors had not only been unheaded but spurned with contempt: need we wonder under such circumstances if Irishmen in their weakness and poverty should have recourse to the only form of justice within their reach viz the wild justice of revenge.

We should never forget that human nature whether savage or civilized is the same the world over. The Indians of America have always given a great deal of trouble to the United States Government because that Gov. in its dealings with the Red men set at naught the eternal laws of justice and equity which should govern nations as well as individuals.

On the other hand the British Gov. pursuing a different policy towards the Indian has found in him a faithful ally in time of war and an orderly well disposed subject in time of peace.

If history teaches anything surely here is a lesson for us."

Having said this by way of introduction I now proceed to give the promised chapter of Irish history and in doing so I do not go back to the remote past lest some one might say O! but all this has come to an end now, but I take my selection from our own times and within the memory of living men.

Some forty odd years since certain districts were in a very disturbed state and in the month of July 1843 Sir John Easthope, of London, M. P. for Leicester proprietor of the "Morning Chronicle" of that city desirous of obtaining reliable information from the scene of those disturbances determined to send a special correspondent to Ireland to report upon the subject of Irish affairs in the disturbed districts.

At this time one Alex. Somerville better known in the world of letters as the "Whistler at the plough" had attained considerable celebrity as a writer on the subject of social and economic sciences; for this gentleman Sir John Easthope sent and addressed him thus.

"Mr. Somerville, your letters from "the rural districts of England "published within the last two years "have placed the corn-law question "on new ground, entirely new ground "every one with whom I speak says "so, they are having a good effect "throughout the country * * * "Will you go to Ireland for a few "months? We want some body to "travel in that country as you have "been doing in England, looking into "and describing the minutest things. "We want to know for instance what "is the cause of agrarian disturbance "within county of Kilkenny. Within "a few years the garrison there has "been augmented over and over; "now there are additional cavalry, "artilery and infantry assembling, "besides a great increase in the Irish "constabulary, which is also an armed "force. The gaols are said to be full "prisoners, and the number implicated "in charges of murder, or as being "assessory in some degree to murder "is frightful—quite frightful—twenty "or more persons to be tried at the "ensuing Kilkenny assizes on such "charges.

"What do you think of going over "quickly and sitting in the assize "court to listen. You need not "write openly. You may take your "wife with you and appear to be on a "pleasure tour and live about Kil-"kenny for a time and send us re-"ports of what you see and hear. "Get at the truth of things. Send "me facts. How much do you want "for your expenses?"

"The amount placed at my disposal" "says Mr. Somerville "was sufficiently "liberal"

"I started next day taking my wife "with me. I arrived with some non-"political journals on which I was a "writer to send contributions for "them &c. * * * Thus I was in "receipt of ample income for the con-"flict into which I plunged at Kil-"kenny" At Kilkenny I had not "long to wait for an introduction to "the "causes of disturbance." On "the morning after arrival, being in "the Provincial Bank to get cash for "a cheque I there heard an altercation "between two well dressed men, one "called the other "villian" "liar" "and added profane oaths to the term "liar," The assailed party asked the "bank clerks to remark what had "been said and bear witness. He "also asked me, as the only other "witness there to oblige him by "carrying the fact in my recollection, "that he the sheriff of the county, her "Majesty's officer of justice had been "called "villain" and "liar" by that "person who was fast drawing the "whole county of Kilkenny into a "state of rebellion."

"Here was what I have come from "London to discover; there stood the "turbulent Landlord before me, there "stood the Sheriff of the county, who "had refused to call out cavalry and "infantry to execute this man's "vengeance on his tenantry. Pat "Ring was to have been evicted that "day. The Sheriff urged for bearance "on the ground that Ring's family "were ill of fever. The landlord "rejoined that it was all pretence, "that a combination was formed "against him. The Sheriff again "asserted that the family were ill of "fever. Then the landlord called "him the opprobrious terms already "named. The Sheriff to secure him-"self in law, sent two physicians "from the city to report on the health "of the family. As soon as I as-"certained the direction of the locality "I followed."

Walters Falls.

From Our Own Correspondent.

DEAR SIR,—Hope you will excuse me for not writing sooner. You must have greatly missed the news I suppose from our ambitious little village, however let us now try to make up for lost time.

Two weeks ago yesterday evening a tea-meeting was held in the English church. There was a goodly attendance, which was surprising, on account of the extreme severity of the night. Had the weather been at all favorable there is no doubt but that the building would have been crowded. After all had partaken of a magnificent tea, which consisted of a superabundance of the choicest and most delicious viands, the evening was enlivened by short speeches, songs, humorous stories recitations, which seemed to delight the audience and called forth the warmest applause, but the crowning event of the evening was the sale of an immense fruit cake which was cut up into pieces at 25 cents each. Wm. Isaac Seabrook was the lucky purchaser of the piece that contained a valuable gold ring.

Mr. George King ceased to be a batchelor week before last. The wedding was a very quiet one; but a grand party was given on the following Tuesday evening, to which all the notables of the village were invited. The night was most pleasantly spent and agreeably diverified by the company engaging in various innocent and exhilarating games. The visitors had all donned their best and presented a most respectable appearance. An essential difference was observable in the costume of the ladies from that of the gentlemen, in fact a complete contrast, which ought to be a sufficient rebuke to those alarmists, who infuse a vague fear into the public mind by prognosticating, that owing to the rapid approximation of the female dress to that of the male, the time is not far distant when, except in the broad glare of day, we will hardly be able to distinguish a woman from a man—a consummation devoutly to be dreaded.

The roller flour mill is very busy at present. Train's mill cannot run until the damage caused by the late disastrous flood is repaired, so that the farmers on 9th and 11th lines St. Vincent, who used to go to Meaford, have to come here.

A community, however small and insignificant, whose members are all of one way of thinking, I believe can hardly be found. The remark is applicable to this place. Mr. Wm. McQuaker dissents altogether from the doctrine of the eternal fitness of things and theory of compensation. He thinks it is bad enough to be forced into this brief and miserable existence without our knowledge or consent, but to make a fuss over it, or glory in it, as if some great boon had been conferred on us, is infinitely worse; and he views, with supreme contempt, the frantic struggle for the attainment of wealth, power and distinction, in which so many of the human race are engaged. It is to be hoped that the above gentleman's views are confined to himself, as they seem too absurd to be entertained by any one.

Dr. McLellan is putting up a new building on one of his village lots. It was first intended, I heard, for a blacksmith shop; now that report is contradicted. Hard to say what it will end in. Can't be a kirk or a mill anyway.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The funeral sermon of Mrs. Thos. Robinson was preached on Sabbath evening last by Rev. T. J. Snowdon. The service was very impressive.

Immense quantities of wood are being teamed in, but the prospects of sale are not bright.

The contract for the building of the new school house has been awarded to Messrs. Marshall & Moran. Messrs. Cornwall & Large of your village were in Dundalk last Saturday, but their tender was considerably higher than the one accepted. The ratepayers are called together for Saturday next to vote supplies. When completed Dundalk will have school buildings that will be second to none in the County.

Proton feels relieved by the statement of the Attorney-General, that no legislation will be enacted this session with reference to the new County of Palmerston.

It is well that person who prophesied a mild winter does not live here. Wherever he is his reputation as a weather prophet is below par.

Scott Act matters very quiet.

Mr. Irish is at work at his planing factory, and expects to have it in operation early in spring.

WORTH $25.00.

HOW TO GET IT.

"A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases" by Dr. B. J. Kendall. This is a book of nearly 100 pages, profusely illustrated, giving symptoms of, as well as treatment for the various diseases common to the horse. Some of our subscribers who received this book a year ago, have assured us that it has been worth to them in twelve months, enough to pay for the STANDARD 25 years, and yet it is given as a premium with the STANDARD to every new subscriber who pays $1.00 in advance for the paper.

We had several new subscribers the past week from a distance, and can yet supply others, send us $1 by mail or otherwise and you will receive the book by return mail and the STANDARD twelve months. Address Standard Office, Markdale.

Markdale Roller Mills.

The subscriber begs leave to announce to the farmers of the surrounding country that he is turning out flour equal to any other roller mill.

No more waiting while the grist is being ground.

The following is the scale of exchange:—

Wheat Weighing	62 lbs.	40 lbs.	Flour.
" "	61 "	39 "	"
" "	60 "	38 "	"
" "	59 "	37 "	"
" "	58 "	36 "	"
" "	57 "	35 "	"

with offal in proportion to amount of flour.

I find the average weight of new wheat to be 60 lbs. to the bushel, and the most of it, if properly cleaned, would weigh 61 or 62 to the bushel.

Communications and Memorials—Messrs. Frost, Cameron, Gamey, Reid and McKenny—Frost, chairman.

Report adopted.

A committee, composed of the Reeves of Bentinck, Collingwood, Proton, Normanby, and Deputies of Keppel and Egremont, were appointed to enquire into the sufficiency of the Treasurer's security, and report to the Council.

Moved by Mr. Christoe, seconded by Mr. Davis, that Dr. Jemieson and Messrs. Gamey, McNicol, Frost and mover be appointed a special committee to examine and report on the work performed by the Board of Examiners of the County of Grey—their duties and qualifications as set forth in the School Act—said committee to report at this session—Carried.

By-law 331, to appoint County Auditors, was introduced, read first and second times, and filled up in committee with the names of Robert Edgar, on the nomination of the Warden, and John Albery, on behalf of the Council.

The Reeve of Artemesia introduced By-law No. 332 to rscind By-law No. 30, appointing County Solicitor, and enacting that upon the Council requiring advice upon any legal point when signified by motion, the Warden shall obtain the same from any legal gentleman so named in the said motion.

The By-law was read first and second times.

The Council adjourned till 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The By law appointing County Auditors was read a third time and passed.

Mr. V. Lang moved, sec. by Mr. Messenger, that the Warden be authorized to employ a competent party to copy evidence taken before his honor Judge Macpherson, relative to appeal re valuation, in order that same may be printed in conformity with resolution passed at December session—lost.

By-law No. 333 to appoint High School Trustee, was introduced, read a first and second times and filled up in committee of the whole with the name of R. A. Stark.

Moved by Mr. Hewgill, seconded by Mr. Campbell, that the judgment in the Appeal case be printed in the January minutes—carried.

Mr. Christoe presented report No. 1 of County Property, stating that while they felt the importance and apparent necessity for a building to afford sufficient accomodation for the several officers of the County, together with a room for His Honor. Judge Macpherson, termed the Judge's Chambers, yet hesitated to advise the Council in the matter.

The report was considered in committee and passed without amendment.

Moved by Mr. Frost, seconded by Mr. Gilray, the County Property Committee be instructed to ascertain the requirements for increased office and Court Room accommodation, and to employ some competent architect to make an estimate and prepare plans, and report upon same at the June session—carried.

The Warden read accounts from Thos. Gorden and H. DeLaMatter for services as examiners.

The Council went into committee of the whole on By-law No. 332, rescinding by-law appointing County Solicitor, which was passed in committee; and afterwards on motion adopted, and ordered to be signed, sealed and engrossed on the minutes.

The Council adjourned till 7 p. m.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The Warden read School Inspector's report for South Grey; also a communication from W. Heap relative to patent dry earth closets.

Mr. McKenny presented report No. 1 of Finance Committee, recommending 1st, the payment of certain accounts; 2nd, that the Treasurer's annual statement of non-resident land fund [illegible] be printed in the minutes; 3rd, that relating to a communication from the County of Oxford, delegates be appointed in conjunction with them to urge upon the Dominion Government the recoupment of moneys to each municipality which have granted aid by bonuses, to such railways as have been declared by Acts of Dominion to be for the general advantage of Canada—Dr. Christoe, James Bowes, and D. McNicol to be such delegates; 4th, that in regard to communications from Ontario Rifle Association that no grant be made.

Mr. Frost presented report of special committee appointed to revise the Standing Rules and Regulations of the Council.

The Report was received, and a by law to carry them into effect was passed.

The Council adjourned till 2 o'clock Friday afternoon.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

By-law No. 334, respecting Standing Rules, on motion, was read a third time and passed

Mr. V. Lang read report of Printing Committee, recommending payment of accounts for printing December minutes, and for advertising Entrance Examination. Report adopted.

By law No. 333, appointing R. A. Stark High School Trustee, was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. McNaught, seconded by Mr. Agnew, 500 copies of Standing Rules, with index, were ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. Read, read report No. 1 of Education Committee, recommending payment of T. Gordon's account, 14 days at $5 per day. and H. DeLaMatter's account, 14 days at $3 per day, for services at High School Entrance Examination.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report—Mr. Agnew in the chair.

Dr. Christoe asked the chairman of the Education Committee to show by what authority $5 per day was charged, or to be paid.

Mr. Read said the committee had carefully considered the report, and from examining the statutes had come to the conclusion that Inspectors were entitled to $5 per day according to law.

Dr. Christoe contended that according to the High School Act Mr. Gordon was a Town Inspector, and if so, he could not claim a sixpence from the Council. It was very strange that he should be paid $5 and Mr. DeLaMatter only $3.

Mr. Read answered that Town Inspectors were entitled to $5 per day according to law, and it was strange that it should be less, if the School was in connection with the County. The committee had also made a calculation in respect to the time charged, and considering the number of candidates examined, and the number of questions to be looked into, had come to the conclusion that the time was by no means excessive.

The Warden referred to the very extensive experience of Mr. Gordon in municipal law, and said he would not put in a charge that he was not fairly entitled to.

Several other Councillors referred to the matter, after which, on motion of Dr. Christoe, seconded by Mr. Frost, the report was amended by inserting $3 per day instead of $5—the balance, if on enquiry found correct., to be paid in the June session

The report as amended was adopted.

Dr. Christoe introduced by-law No. 335 to confirm certain by-laws of Artemesia and Euphrasia to close up the dispose of an original allowance for road on boundary line between those townships, which was read first and second times.

Mr. Clark read report of Road and Bridge Committee, stating that in reference to petition from ratepayers of Bentinck to aid in building a bridge on county line in connection with Bruce, they could not recommend it, as it was their opinion that townships should build bridges on both county and township lines, in conjunction with the other municipalities. Report adopted.

Mr. Frost read report of Committee on Communications and Memorials, reporting several communications as having been considered; but could not recommend action except on a communication from Carleton in reference to necessary additional accommodation for idiotic or insane persons, in regard to which they would recommend that the Clerk prepare a memorial and have the same duly forwarded to the Legislature.

On motion of Mr. Gilray, seconded by A. Campbell, the Warden was requested to sign and forward a memorial to the Legislature, setting forth that under the School Law, the formation and alteration of U. S. Sections were in an unsatisfactory condition—particularly in the power of one municipality to withdraw the part territory without consent of the other: and asking that in such cases the County Council, or some other tribunal, be allowed to adjudicate in the matter.

The Council adjourned till 9 o'clock, Saturday morning.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Mr. McKenny read report No. 2 of Finance, recommending a grant of $20 to the Prisoners' Aid Society, and the payment of some stationary accounts. Report adopted.

Mr. Read read report No. 2 of Education Committee, stating they had receive School Inspector's report for South Grey and thought it advisable that all Inspector's reports should be presented at the January session, so as to appear together in the minutes; and further, that the Inspectors present to each Board of School Trustees the standing of said school, in order that it may be read at annual meeting. Report adopted.

By-law No. 335 was read a third time and passed.

Mr. V. Lang presented report of committee appointed to enquire into sufficiency of Treasurer's bonds, reporting good and responsible sureties for $50,000, and Treasurer personally for $50,000; but recommended that a new bond be accepted from the Treasurer for the whole amount, in which the sureties be jointly and severally bound for the same. Report adopted.

The Warden read a communication from Thos. Gordon, relative to the fact that exception had been taken to holding examinations at Durham for High School. The Department had given its sanction to examinations there, if examiners concurred. He asked opinion of Council, as similar examinations might be asked for in East Grey.

The report on Treasurer's securities was ordered to be received and adopted.

Mr. Christoe presented report of special committee on matters relating to School Inspection and School Inspectors. In regard to the visits of School Inspectors, as these were paid for by the Government, the committee thought that the extra allowance of $135 to each Inspector by the Council was both unreasonable and indefensible, and recommended that it cease at once. The committee asked further time to report on a number of other questions.

After a desultory discussion in regard to High School Examinations, Entrance Examinations and Inspectors' fees, the report was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Frost, seconded by Mr. Fawcett, that the communication of Thos. Gordon, Esq., be received and fyled—the course pursued and referred to therein being approved of by this Council—carried.

Moved by Mr. Agnew, seconded by Mr. Jamieson, that the June session of the County Council be held in the Town of Meaford.

Moved in amendment by V. Lang, seconded by Mr. Robertson, that when this Council adjourns, it stands adjourned till Tuesday, 23rd June, at 7 p. m.

In speaking of his motion, the Reeve of Meaford gave a most cordial invitation to the Council to hold the June session there, and referred in glowing terms to the hospitality of the people of Meaford, and the pleasure it would give them to have such a body of intelligent men visit them.

The motion at first appeared to be looked upon favorably by the majority of the Council, and some pleasantries were indulged in respecting the hospitality that would be accorded the Council, and respecting the intelligence of that body—one gentleman saying that if the Council met at Meaford, that town would have the largest number of intelligent men in it that it ever had; but it was pointed out by two or three members that in regard to repairs or alterations referred to in report of County Property Committee it would be almost a necessity to meet in Owen Sound.

This latter consideration seemed to decide two or three wavering votes: and the amendment, being put, was carried by 19 to 18. The Council then adjourned to meet in Owen Sound on the 23rd of June, at 7 p. m.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA

Shot by a Beautiful Young Lady.

FIVE SHOTS FIRED AT HIM.

Not Dangerously Hurt—His Ante-mortem Statement.

A last (Monday) night's New York despatch says: At twelve minutes past 5 o'clock this afternoon, as O Donovan Rossa was passing in front of the Stewart building, on the corner of Broadway and Chambers street, he was approached by a handsome young lady, dressed in plain clothes. She wore spectacles and had the appearance of an intellectual-looking school teacher. She drew a five-barrelled revolver from her dress pocket, and, levelling it at him fired one shot. Rossa threw his hands above his head

AND CRIED, "I'M SHOT."

He then fell heavily to the sidewalk. The woman fired the remaining bullets in her pistol at the prostrate man, and calmly and unconcernedly walked off with the smoking revolver in her hand. She was followed by a large crowd, while still a larger mob surrounded the wounded dynamiter. City Marshal James McAuley, in the absence of the policemen, saw the revolver in the woman's hand and arrested her. She was conducted to the Twenty-sixth Precinct Station House in the City Hall. Her imperturbable gravity and coolness of demeanor were remarkable when arraigned at the Sergeant's desk. McAuley handed the revolver, a small calibre five-shooter, to the Sergeant, and said he found the woman brandishing the weapon on the street. A citizen who entered the police station with the prisoner said she had just shot a man on Chambers street. "Do you know the man?" asked Sergeant Cass, turning to the woman.

"YES, I SHOT O'DONOVAN ROSSA," said the prisoner, with a slight English accent. She looked very demure and pretty as she stood at the bar, and betrayed no excitement whatever. She gave her name as Yeslet Dudley, and said she was a native of England and a hospital nurse by occupation. She described herself as a widow 24 years of age, but she does not appear to be over 18. A number of questions were put to her while in the Police Station, but she preserved a dignified silence. The woman was locked up, and all the reporters were denied admission for the present. She did not appear to be insane. She answered all questions deliberately and with some degree of caution. She

DECLINES TO DIVULGE THE CAUSE of the shooting, but it is presumed to have occurred through Rossa's dynamite schemes. As soon as the woman ceased firing Rossa got up on his feet, with the assistance of a bystander, and started back for his office. He was prevailed upon to go to the Chambers Street Hospital instead. He walked all the way, nearly a quarter of a mile. There it was found that only one bullet had pierced his body. It entered his back directly below the left shoulder blade. The physician at once began to probe for the ball. The wound is not considered dangerous. When Pat Joyce, in O'Donovan's office, was notified of the shooting he was surprised, as his chief had left the office only ten minutes before. He at once locked up the office and went to the hospital.

ROSSA'S CONDITION.

At 8.30 the wounded man was resting easily, and said he was hopeful of pulling through all right. Captain Phelan, who is still guarded by policemen, when informed of the particulars of the shooting, smiled grimly, but refused to say anything on the subject.

ROSSA'S STATEMENT.

To a reporter Rossa said: "It was a premeditated affair, and this woman was simply the engine by which the dastardly act was accomplished. She had no private revenge to gratify. No relative of hers had been injured in the English explosions. It is the work of the English Government, whose policy has always been to assassinate men they could not otherwise reach. She is the agent of the British Minister or somebody else. This woman came to me and said that she was Irish, but that her husband did not sympathize with the cause of Ireland. She was rabid in her views on dynamite. She said the London explosions were no good, and wanted a horrible sacrifice of life to strike terror to the hearts of Ireland's enemies. I told her I was not engaged in that business, and I received no money for such purposes, but only to help the Irish cause. She reiterated that thousands of lives should be sacrificed in London. I had been to see my printer at 4 o'clock when I started out to meet her. She wanted me to sign a receipt for money. The receipt contained the word dynamite, and I declined to sign it and put the paper in my pocket and walked out with her. She is nothing more or less than the agent of the British Government employed to assassinate me."

THE WOMAN'S IDENTITY.

About 9 o'clock Mrs. Dudley asked about the condition of Rossa, and seemed sorry when she heard he was still alive. A number of persons called to see her, but she positively refused to be interviewed. She discarded her steel-bowed spectacles, which, according to Joyce, were used as a disguise. On the 22d January Mrs. Dudley called at the Home for Unemployed Women, 60 Clinton street, and secured accommodations, giving as a reference Dr. Thomas. The matron of the Home was so favorably impressed with the woman that she allowed her to remain, and Mrs. Dudley occupied a room jointly with two young ladies. Her only luggage was a valise, which she never unpacked, because, as she remarked, she might be called suddenly to attend some patient. She told the matron she had been married, and had two children, but that her husband and children had died abroad. Her father, she remarked, had been engaged in the British cavalry service. She had acted as a trained nurse in the hospitals of London and Paris, and she said she had diplomas from institutions of that kind, but the matron never examined them, though she showed them to other young ladies in the house. "She was an accomplished woman," continued the matron, "and her manners and speech betokened a thoroughbred English woman of keen mind and bright perceptions.

ANTE-MORTEM STATEMENT.

The following ante-mortem statement was made by O'Donovan Rossa to-night at the hospital, before Coroner Kennedy:

"On Saturday, January 31st, about 4 p.m., I received a letter at my office, No. 12 Chambers street. The message was in writing, and was delivered by a messenger boy. The note stated a lady wished to see me, that she was interested in the Irish cause and desired to assist it. She did not care to go to my office and remain waiting there until I came. She only would ask for ten minutes' time. The boy told me that the lady was at the telegraph office in the Stewart building, corner of Broadway and Chambers street. I went with him and met her. I told her it would be as well to go to some hotel, as the telegraph office was no place to talk in. We came out and went to Sweeney's Hotel. We went into the ladies' parlor, and she said she would be able to give considerable money if anything good was done. She then said she would call Monday, February 2nd, at 4 o'clock. To-day she sent another message to my office and I went to the telegraph office, and there I met the lady. She showed me paper which I was to sign. She then suggested that we go to some other place. We walked down Chambers street to Broadway, when the woman stepped back and fired two or three shots at me. One of the balls entered my back. (Signed) "JEREMIAH O'DON VAN ROSSA"

J. Pierrepont Edwards, British Consul, when informed of the details of the shooting, asked the condition of this wretch (referring to Rossa). Being told that he would probably recover. Edwards ejaculated, "Then he will become a greater hero than ever." He added: "It is unfortunate that he should have been shot by an Englishwoman, but I think the poor lady must be demented. I have never seen her that I can recall, and I know nothing of her."

A TERRIBLE ATLANTIC VOYAGE.

The Steamer St. Simon Bravely Battles Against Great Odds.

(N. Y. World.)

The French line steamer St. Simon arrived yesterday from Havre after a tempestuous voyage lasting sixteen days. From the third day out until Sandy Hook was reached continuous heavy gales and high head seas were encountered. On Jan. 27 h last a storm, which the officers of the vessel say was a regular cyclone, was encountered. Suddenly a loud crash was heard on deck and everybody jumped from the table badly frightened. The officer of the deck soon after entered the cabin and advised everybody to remain below.

"The smoking saloon has just been carried away," said the officer, "don't know how soon the other deck-houses will go."

Just then the ship gave a sudden lurch, and nearly every person was thrown down. The officers found it difficult to prevent a panic, but eventually calmed the passengers. The storm lasted two days, during which time no one on board slept, nor could they eat. When the storm moderated the deck of the St. Simon looked a complete wreck. One of the life-boats was smashed, the smoking-saloon gone and the deck covered with bits of wood and boards from the splintered deck-houses and rails. When the vessel entered port yesterday she was covered with ice and showed plainly the rough experience she had gone through.

Unperfected English.

There is published in Germany a newspaper printed in English for the benefit of those visitors "who the language of Germans speak not." The Hour, which makes the following extract from the sheet, recommends its pages as containing a rare literary treat for the eye of the stranger in that land. It certainly conveys some idea of the difficulties foreigners have in wrestling with the English language:

"Hunting Sport.—'Great sensation!'—'Great sensation!' in this season made the invention of an Cartridge, called, Brandpatrone for Lancaster-or Centralfire-Guns,; while by the now existing Cartridges the inflammation was done from the under part, where by the shot result by Lancaster-Guns was often uncertain, has the Manufactor succeedet in putting an brass pin into the Cartridge, which leads the Stichflamme of the percussion cap into the abowe powdermass direct under the stopper, which there starlike in it sprenkled, there through will explode momently all the powder inside the Cartridge, which affectuate such a sharp shot, that, if skilled in hunting, the animal falls like killed by thunderstruck; all the chaseing of the half death wild by the Dog, or beating to death by the driver is not necessary by using this new patent Cartridge; then the Pub ic will have a more delicate looking Game, because the knokles wont be burst all through the flesh; and the unnecessary cruelty to the animal will fall quite away. The export to the continent is at present very significant, especial to Russia, where the use the largest tuber to kill the beast of prey."

The Best Part of Both Countries.

It amuses one to hear Canada described as an Arctic region by American newspapers, which seem to forget that a large portion of the United States has a climate very similar to that which sometimes holds high carnival in the Dominion. Iowa is as cold as Ontario; so is Michigan and Wisconsin. Minnesota discounts Quebec, and Illinois and Nebraska are not as salubrious as New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The effects produced by the respective climates of Dakota and Manitoba are much the same, and as for Montana and Oregon, the snowfall in either is generally heavier than in the British possessions to the north. The "Arctic" regions of the United States really comprise the most progressive and healthiest portion of the Union. "Arctic" Canada is also healthy and progressive, and it is not too cold to live in—as many wealthy Americans have recently found out.—Canadian-American.

A very simple contrivance—but at the same time one very valuable—is being placed in the switches, frogs and guards of the Old Colony Railroad. It consists of a piece of hard wood so shaped and bolted to a rail as to prevent a person's foot from getting caught in the groove when on the track. Accidents of that kind are of daily occurrence.

THE DYNAMITARDS.

A Supposed Important Arrest in London —Various to Guard the Cities.

A last (Saturday) evening's London cable says: A man was arrested at the central station of the Midland Railway in Derby to day with dynamite in his possession. He is being held on a charge of conspiracy. Being arraigned the man gave his name as Newbold. He declined to give his history for the past month, and as the request of the police, who claim to be on the track of strong incriminating evidence, he was remanded. Letters were produced which had been mailed in the south of England threatening that Derby Town Hall would be blown up. The prisoner admitted that the handwriting on the envelopes was his. The letters were read. They described a plot for the destruction by dynamite of the Town Hall and a bank in an adjoining county. Newbold, when asked to explain away this evidence, said he could not, although he insisted that he was innocent. He said he had replies to several advertisements at about the time of the dates upon the envelopes, and said the envelopes must have fallen into bad hands and been again used, and in this way come into possession of the police. The prisoner is about 29 years of age, and gave the name of Philip Newbold. The Chief Constable declared that the detectives possessed in a complete state other evidence against Newbold of a more serious and circumstantial character. Newbold's remand was until February 7th.

It is stated the police force have discovered among Newbold's papers documents revealing a dynamite plot of considerable magnitude. During the proceedings to-day the prisoner was much agitated. At the time of his arrest, Newbold was employed in the Derby shops of the Midland Railway and regularly wore the ordinary clothes of a workingman. Derby Town Hall has been placed under special police protection. Orders have been sent from London to search all suspicious persons travelling over the road. Goodman was released this afternoon, the police after thoroughly investigating the case became convinced he was innocent.

It is believed the Government meditates using the marines to guard the city as was done in Dublin a year ago.

A last (Tuesday) night's London cable says: The Queen has expressed a desire to contribute a sum sufficient to supplement and make effective any reward the Government may decide to offer for the arrest and conviction of dynamiters. It is believed the result will be the organization of a national fund for the object suggested.

The police this evening made another important arrest in connection with the recent dynamite explosions. The prisoner had been pursued for several days, and was run down this afternoon. It is believed he was an accomplice of Cunningham. The brown box which was purchased in Whitechapel and substituted for Cunningham's brown trunk in his Prescott street lodgings, and which mysteriously disappeared immediately after the explosion, was found in possession of the man arrested this evening. The prisoner was discovered hiding in Whitechapel not far from the lodgings last occupied by Cunningham. It is said the police found in prisoner's possession other evidences of a very important nature, and all necessary means of establishing his identity. He will be arraigned to-morrow.

It is stated that several persons have identified Cunningham as the man who was seen in the immediate vicinity of each of the recent underground railway explosions directly after their occurrence.

The police have obtained special information which will probably warrant an indictment against Cunningham for personally operating the dynamite which caused the explosion near Gower street railway station. The guard on the train and the sergeant of police who examined the passengers have identified Cunningham as one of three men who were suspected of having caused the explosion.

The officials of the Clerkenwell Prison, where Cunningham and Goodyear are confined, and the Scotland Yard detectives were thrown into a state of great excitement to-day by the receipt of fresh information that a formidable attempt will be made to rescue the prisoners by destroying the buildings. The structure was immediately placed under a guard of special constables. An extra force of detectives have been detailed to patrol the streets leading from Clerkenwell to the Bow Street Police Court.

Workingmen's Wives.

Pittsburg Chronicle: "It is not the workingmen I pity so much in these times of universal depression as the wives. The wives that plan and provide for immediate needs—who make one dollar go as far as two or three went in prosperous times, are more to be pitied than the men," said a close observer, discussing the condition of the country. There is much truth in the remark. While workingmen attend meetings, and vent their dissatisfaction in various methods, their wives, meantime patiently confronting the inevitable, proceed to make the most of the situation, and, by dint of invention, patience and untiring labor, material deemed insignificant or almost worthless by their husbands is made to serve purposes unsuspected and frequently not appreciated by the breadwinners. It is surprising what thrifty, self-denying housewives achieve with limited means; and all the world knows that many merchants and manufacturers' large fortunes are founded upon the wise management of economical wives.

When Paddy Ryan lost his first fight with Sullivan, without, apparently, making half an effort to win it, the people of Troy, N. Y., went back on him very badly. One man, whose name was Ryan, though no relative of the pugilist, applied to the Supreme Court for permission to change his name. He has called himself Sullivan ever since. Now he wants to change his name again, and as a lawyer has told him that he can alter his name as often as he likes without consulting any court about it, he is informing all his friends that he is Mr. Ryan once more.

The Siamese make wedding presents, but they never give an odd number of articles, for the reason, they say, that one cannot stand without a partner, three means enmity, and five sickness. On the other hand, two signifies "strong and welcome," four "laughter," six "binding together by love," and eight "we resemble each other in likes and dispositions."

THE TRIAL OF CUNNINGHAM.

History of the Alleged Dynamiter—The Statement of Irish Employees.

A last (Monday) night's London cable says: Poland's notification that the Government would receive the petition of changing the charge against Cunningham so that the result of conviction might be execution instead of imprisonment, caused a commotion among the spectators. The declaration was at once construed into an admission by the Crown that Cunningham was the most important prisoner yet arrested for dynamite crimes. This impression was confirmed by the extraordinary precautions taken by the Government to prevent escape or rescue. He was conveyed from his cell in Clerkenwell to Bow Street Court in a strong van. Cunningham was the only prisoner within the van, but several armed constables accompanied him. On each side of the driver was an armed policeman, and officers with exposed revolvers stood upon the steps. The conveyance was driven slowly to allow the armed escort to keep alongside, and enable the detectives who followed on the sidewalks to be near in case of emergency.

In his address, Poland said Cunningham was 23 years of age, and was a dock laborer. He was not alone in the work of causing the explosion at the Tower, but he was in league with others whom the Government hoped soon to have in custody. The prisoner had lived in the United States several years. He arrived in England last November. He came aboard the steamship Adriatic and landed at Liverpool. He took up his quarters there in a small hotel at No. 31 Robert street. When he left there he came to London. The Government was not prepared to say just how Cunningham had employed himself during the interval between his arrival in London and the date of the explosion. That was as yet unnecessary. But it could be proven that the prisoner on the 23d or 24th of December was at Broad streets railway station with a large trunk. The trunk was of American manufacture as would be shown later. Besides the trunk the prisoner had a bag. He left both at the station over night, and next day took them away. In the meantime he secured lodgings at 30 Prescott street, Whitechapel. For these lodgings he engaged to pay five shillings a week. It was thither the prisoner had the trunk and bag removed. While the prisoner lived in Prescott street the trunk mysteriously disappeared. Some time after its disappearance Cunningham changed his lodgings, and took rooms in Scarboro' street. It would be shown that the prisoner began loitering about the Tower after his removal from Prescott street, and that he visited the Tower buildings a few days before the explosion. The prisoner's counsel are Quilliam and Nordon, of Liverpool.

Inquiry at the docks of the Morgan Steamship Line to-day developed the fact that Tim Cunningham is employed there. Since the arrest of Cunningham, the London dynamiter, he has stated to his fellow-workmen that the prisoner is his son. At the company's office it was said the son of Tim had been employed on the docks some time ago, and that he lived with his father. The father admitted having a 15-year-old son, but denied having ever said prisoner in London was his son. The old man's manner was not confidence-inspiring. The foreman of the Pennsylvania freight depot said he had employed over a year ago a man whose name he believed was James Cunningham.

Very few persons were admitted to the court-room. Before the commencement of the proceedings a number of witnesses were assembled for the purpose of identifying the prisoner as the man they had seen engaged in suspicious movements just before the explosions. Cunningham was placed in a crowd, but three of the witnesses, one of whom was a woman, the other two being constables, had no difficulty in singling him out. The cabman who had given information about the transfer of the trunk was unable to identify Cunningham. Cunningham was remanded for a week.

Mr. Poland said in his address one of the worst effects of the panic produced by the recent outrages was that it caused so many employers to play right into the hands of the dynamiters. Some firms in London, others in Leeds, and others in Sheffield were dismissing all their Irish employees. The very fact that detectives were employed to watch establishments wherein large numbers of persons of Irish birth were employed proved so irritating to the owners of the concerns that to escape from it they naturally resorted to the only means of relief at their command—the wholesale discharge of their Irish employees. One of the largest publishing houses in London on Saturday last had dismissed from their employ every person of Irish birth.

Dr. Dupree, adviser of the Government on chemical subjects, testified that he had examined the detonator found in Cunningham's baggage. It was a copper tube, stamped with an eagle, and contained eleven and a-half grains of mixture, composed of chloride of potassium and fulminate of mercury. A fuse had apparently been fixed to the detonator, as the hole in the tube indicated some such attachment.

During the examination Cunningham stated that when he resided in the United States, he lived in Franklin street, New York, and worked as a laborer of the Morgan Steamship Line Docks, and as freight handler in the Pennsylvania Railroad depot.

Different Ways of Looking at It.

Two servant girls are enjoying their holiday out, and come to a halt before the showcase of a dealer in antiquities to admire the lamps and lustres.

"Which of those chandeliers would you have for your house if you were rich?" said one.

"I'd have that lovely bronze one there with the eighteen lamps."

"I'd prefer that one," responds her companion, pointing to a plain brass pendant with three lights.

"Why?"

"Because it would be so much less trouble to clean it."—From the French.

NEW AGE OF SOCIALISTS.

Opposing Riot in New York Among the Adherents of the Faith—Murderous Attack on the Police—Rioters Arrested.

A last (Monday) night's New York despatch says: Two thousand persons gathered at a Socialist meeting to-night in Cosmopolis Hall, in Avenue A, in the German quarter. It was rumored previous to the meeting that trouble would be caused by Justus Schwab and Herr Most, aided by a number of their adherents, who intended to capture and control the proceedings. The less radical element of the party, headed by editor Schevitsch, of the Volks Zeitung, were determined to hold the extremists in check. A voluminous circular, printed in English and German, denunciatory of violence and Irish dynamite outrages, had been widely circulated by the Schevitsch faction, but it excited the derision of the Schwab-Most crowd, who, in return, issued a flaming incendiary appeal, applauding the dynamiters, and threatening woe to England.

Police Captain McCullogh, of the 17th precinct, attended the meeting with a posse of men. Schevitsch called the assembly to order, and the radical opponents objected in such a way that a tumult ensued, in which chairs, clubs and revolvers figured. Captain McCullogh commanded silence, and forced his way to the platform, followed by his men. Schwab saw him, and shouted, "It is the police! Kill the——!" The infuriated mob turned upon the officers and Capt. McCullogh was struck on the head with a chair and knocked down. He regained his feet, and at the point of their revolvers the police kept the mob at bay. The Socialists then wanted to resume their deliberations, and supplemented their demands by drawing clubs, knives and pistols.

Captain McCullogh was reinforced in a little while by thirty policemen. This enraged the crowd still further, and they again attacked the police, who responded with their clubs, and the rioters were badly punished. Many heads were cracked. With the exception of Officer Rost, who was slightly cut in the face, and a few bruises sustained by Captain McCullogh, none of the policemen were injured. Peter Brown, one of the rioters, had his leg broken, and had to be sent to the hospital.

Justus Schwab was the only man arrested. He skulked away before the riot was over, but Captain McCullogh found him in his saloon on First street. He submitted quietly to arrest. Bail was refused and he was locked up. After the fight a pistol, a dynamite bomb and several short black clubs were found in the hall. W. S. Rosenberg, Secretary of the International Workers' Association, said Schwab had asked O'Donovan Rossa to send a gang of his dynamiters to break up the meeting.

Coldness of Ice.

The question has been discussed in the Farmers' Club at the Cooper Institute, New York, whether there are relative degrees of cold in ice or no. The discussion commenced by a talk about the best manner of building an ice house. Dr. T. S. Lambert, who was present, incidentally said that ice was much colder in Maine and would last longer than ice taken from the Hudson River. Some of the farmers grew warm over this discussion, and expressed astonishment to hear it asserted that one piece of ice was colder than another. Dr. Lambert answered the disbelievers, and said that he felt sorry that "such ignorance had been shown at the Farmers' Club. Why, at Boston, when a cargo of ice was received from Maine, the large dealers had an agent test it with a thermometer, and if its temperature was above 20° above zero, the ice was rejected as an unsafe investment, because at any temperature above that it would melt rapidly. The temperature of ice ranged in Maine from zero to 15° above, and on the Hudson River it was frequently cut and put into houses when just below the freezing point." "If you want cold ice," the speaker said, "don't cut it when its temperature is near the freezing point, but wait until a cold snap comes." By actual experiment it had been shown that a piece of Maine ice would make water colder than a piece from Rockland Lake. The doctor relates that when he gave this information to a neighbor of his he was so grateful that he offered him $5, and he was ready to receive that amount from each member of the Farmers' Club. The audience remained skeptical, and a voice shouted: "If I could believe all the doctor had said I would be willing to give him the $5."

A Remedy For Indigestion.

Salisbury steak appears to be giving remarkably good results as a diet for people troubled with weak or disordered digestion, but who require the supporting power of animal food. The manner of preparing it is described by Dr. Hepburn in The Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter. The surface of a round steak is chopped with a dull knife, the object being not to cut but to pound the meat. As the meat pulp comes to the top it is scraped off, while the tough and fibrous portion gradually reaches the bottom of the trough. The pulp is then made into cakes and lightly and quickly broiled, so as to leave it almost raw inside. The diet is sometimes used exclusively in chronic cases, and as a rule no drugs are employed with it except tonics.

CURRENT TOPICS.

One after another, says the Milwaukee Wisconsin, the flouring mills of Minneapolis are putting in steam plants to supplement their water power in times of low water, and to substitute that power in times of no water at all. The water power wealth of Minneapolis, as an adjunct always to be relied upon, seems to have hopelessly collapsed. Had there been no reckless and criminal denudation of forests at the head-waters of the Mississippi, it is not in the least probable that this unwelcome story would now be told.

Gustave Petitpierre, a man of singular and original character, who died recently in Geneva was possessed by the desire to invent a writing equally suitable for all languages. Unigraphy was his passion and his dream; he saw in it a first step toward the establishment of the universal language foretold by the prophets. He had accumulated on these subjects a great variety of notes, which his friends who shared in his ideas often urged him to publish; but he was never sufficiently satisfied with the completeness of his work to comply with the request.

In a recent lecture on the germs of disease, Dr. Sternberg said that the strips of flannel saturated with carbolic acid hung up in the sick room, and the chlorine saucer placed under the bed, are wholly valueless in arresting the progress of pestilence. Such methods do harm, he thinks, by leading people to neglect the far more important measure of admitting an abundance of fresh air, which sweeps away the germs. Many antiseptics and deodorizers are valueless for the destruction of germs. For this purpose he recommends the liquor of the chlorinate of soda.

In Edinburgh the death rate for 1884 was but 19 per 1 000 of population. In the New Town it was 16 02, in the Old Town 22 81, and in the Southern Suburbs 14.77. The statistics are considered interesting by sanitarians from the fact that the New Town has modern sanitary appliances which are wanting in the Old Town and are comparatively less necessary in the more widely diffused population of the Southern Suburbs. The birth rate for the year was 30 per 1,000. The percentage of deaths from zymotic diseases was 12 18; about one half were due to whooping cough.

Some horrible discoveries have recently been made in San Francisco. Abandoned mothers and foundling asylum nurses are known to have sold many babies to the Chinese, and the infamous traffic is said to be on the increase. The average price paid is $60 apiece. Only girls are bought and white blonde babies command a premium. The newspapers have entered on a crusade against the practice of mothers giving and selling their illegitimate babies to the Chinese. One theory is that these female children are purchased by Chinese speculators and sent to China, where they are raised until 12 years old when they are sold to rich Chinamen for large sums to be placed in their harems.

On a certain street in Denver is a stone mansion which, with its grounds, cost nearly $1,000,000. Directly opposite, on a vacant lot, is a tent, boarded up inside as far as the angle of the roof. The back end of it is pierced with a stove pipe, and in the front end are a door and window. In the window hangs a curtain of costly lace, and in the tent is a piano of exquisite tone. The tent itself did not cost over $20. The piano, upholstery and furniture inside are said to have cost over $3,000. The owner planted his tent here over twenty-five years ago, and is one of the moderately successful Colorado miners, being worth about $50 000. He prefers his tent to any dwelling-house, and says he would not exchange it for Windsor Castle.

Gen. Gordon is a great smoker, and is amply provided with tobacco. He has two palaces at Khartoum, and a gun in position on the flat roof of each of them. At sunrise daily he mounts to the roof, and makes a careful survey of the whole country with his telescope, and marks any changes which may have taken place in the enemy's position. If nothing unusual has happened, and there are no signs of any movement on the part of the Mahdi's men, he retires into his quarters and sleeps the greater part of the day. He rises before sunset, and after darkness has set in he starts for the ramparts, which he perambulates all night, seeing that the sentries are all properly posted and on the alert, and cheering the troops by his conversation and example.

The London Lancet is glad to be able to give a satisfactory account of the health of Mr. Gladstone. "The disorder of his health," it says, "consisting chiefly of slight catarrh and lumbago with sleeplessness, is only too easily explained by the late prevalence of east winds, following the exhausting work of the summer holidays and the autumn session, and coinciding with an anxious and complicated state of public affairs. It is not the first time that such attacks, occurring in similar circumstances, have shown that even Mr. Gladstone's powers have their limits. Happily, his ailments have promptly yielded to apt remedies and to comparative rest, and there is a fair prospect that, without public inconvenience, his health may be soon fully restored."

A recent cablegram from London says that a white trousseau is being prepared for Princess Beatrice. She believes in the Blarney stone, and has ordered several Irish poplin dresses from a Dublin firm which hastens to tell the world of fashion that one especial dress will be entirely in ivory white, of Oriental design, interwoven with golden threads. Another will be of cardinal, rivalling the richest Lyons velvet. A third is to be of sky blue, closely covered with sprays of forget-me-nots. But such beautiful dresses will not convert Mr. Labouchere, who has just announced that he will challenge a division when the question of Princess Beatrice's allowance comes before the House of Commons. It may interest club men to know, as the fancy dress ball season is on, that the dress most affected in London is a dress coat of red satin, lined with white satin, worn with an embroidered white silk vest and black silk trousers.

The railway sleeper of the future will be built of steel, ... costly to be used for that purpose. Already in Europe, a mild steel of excellent quality can be made at a low cost from otherwise worthless ores. Though the first cost is greater than that of wooden sleepers, their durability makes them in the end the cheaper article. The Iron Age thus shows wherein the advantage lies: "It must not be forgotten that the cost of the laying and relaying of wooden sleepers represents in the maintenance of railways an item almost equal to the original outlay for the sleepers themselves, even without taking into account the inconvenience of having to break up the line every now and then. Supposing an old steel sleeper to cost five times as much as an old wooden one, and a new steel sleeper to cost double, there would be a clear gain of 25 per cent. in laying down a purely metallic plant."

Some of the British peers are very wealthy, as for instance the new Duke of Buccleuch. The entailed estates in Scotland to which he has just succeeded extend to upwards of 450,000 acres, and include the magnificent seats of Bowhill, Drumlanrig Castle and Dalkeith Palace. The present annual rental is about £170 000, which is at least 20 per cent. less than the returns of ten years ago. The Duke also comes into the Boughton estates, in Northants, near Kettering, and he gets a property in Warwickshire, near Rugby, the two now being worth about £28 000 a year. The Duke's piers at Granton bring in £10,000 a year, his minerals and quarries are worth nearly as much, and he owns valuable urban property in Midlothian. The Duke will receive about £500 000 from his father's personal estate. His income, therefore, will be about £270 000, on which pittance even a Duke can live handsomely.

A STEADY DOG-MEAT DIET.

Residents of Newark, N.J., Who Profess That it is Fine Eating.

Dog-meat is becoming a favorite article of food in Newark, writes a correspondent of the New York World, if the statements of two or three gentlemen who have killed and eaten their dogs may be believed. So far the sale of this domestic flesh has been confined to private parties, but if the health authorities do not interfere it is feared that dog-meat will soon become one of the staple items on the butchers' stalls. A German file-maker, living on Bank street, began the movement looking toward the introduction of a new and cheaper meat among the poor. A neighbor had a large dog whose nightly barking much disturbed the not too amiable German. Catching the dog a day or two ago, he cut its throat, hung it up to bleed, and, after skinning it, cut the meat into roasting pieces and chops, after the most approved style of serving lamb. Several of the neighbors knew of the occurrence, but as the German smacked his lips and said the dish was a palatable and thoroughly wholesome one, they saw no reason to interfere.

No one watched the experiment with greater interest than Carl Goericke, a Swiss, living in the rear of No. 235 Bank street. Goericke watched the German narrowly, saw that the meat did not kill him and didn't even make him ill, so he determined to follow in his friend's footsteps. Another friend named Gembrole was equally anxious to eat dog, so Monday night he came to Bank street dragging an unwilling black-and-white cur by a dirty string. The poor brute seemed to know that its last hour had come, and set up a howling and barking that brought half a dozen occupants of houses near by to their doors. But in spite of his vocal protest the dog—somebody's pet—was hurried into the house, the last house he ever entered. Half an hour later Gembrole was seen hurrying away without the dog and with the shoulders of what looked like a little lamb thrown over his shoulders. Nothing was ever seen of the poor little black-and-white dog, but the next day skin, black and white, was stretched in Goericke's window to dry, and part of the carcase of a strange animal was hanging near the skin.

It was the bed-room window from which the strange carcase swung, but the neighbors did not mind this for two or three days. Then the queer carcase could be smelled even more plainly than it was seen, and so a protest was raised, not so much against eating dog as exposing it. The Board of Health was notified yesterday, and Secretary Wallace referred the case to Meat Inspector Dr. Runge, with power to act. Goericke denied that the Board of Health had anything to do with his food, and wanted to know by what authority dog-meat was pronounced unwholesome. Still he did not want to fight the entire city of Newark, so he would submit. The meat inspector started out to find some of the dog-eaters, and at the corner of Springfield and South Orange streets found Gembrole at work. From him it was learned that a portion of the dressed hog was stored at No. 105 Howard street, and the inspector arrived just as the animal was being prepared for the table. The hide had been sent away to be tanned. The dog was Gembrole's property, he had not stolen it, and he could not see in what he had done wrong.

Inspector Runge fastened a "condemned" tag on the carcase and ordered the owner to carry it to the night scavenger, who was to dispose of it. There is much talk of the case among the poorer people, who fear that butcher-shops may place dog meat on sale under the name of mutton, and they say it is almost impossible to tell the difference, even after eating it.

That was a chivalrous idea advanced by a speaker in a Boston woman's suffrage meeting—that women should receive no wages, "because men were created to take care of the women;" but an opponent retorted that it would be "a deadly cold day" for a good many men in Massachusetts, not to mention their wives and daughters, if wages earned by women should suddenly cease.

TWO ... HEROES.

Who Took ... Streets ... and Came Out Ahead.

(Cooley's (Norwich, Conn.) Weekly.)

"If there were any gentlemen in this car," exclaimed a saucy little woman with black eyes and of lady-like appearance, in a street car the other day, "they would not allow this brute of a drunkard to annoy me. I'd like to be his wife for half an hour, I'd dress him down!"

Cowed by her justifiable anger, the genteel, well-dressed debauchee went out upon the platform. The little lady quickly sprang to the door, braced herself against it, and cried out, "Now come in if you can!" And he did not come in.

The habit of independence should be cultivated whenever possible, and exercised whenever necessary for the maintenance of personal rights. It requires a deal of pluck for a woman to do this, but it pays every time. We were forcibly impressed with this fact by a conversation had last week with Mrs. S. A. Clark, of East Granby, Conn.

Many a woman, pursued by a revengeful foe, will appreciate what she says.

For over ten years, on every possible occasion, and chiefly when she was least on her guard, a mysterious enemy made covert assaults upon her.

An open foe, she says, she could meet; but an ambushed enemy was horribly exasperating. She called to her aid the wisest and most discreet friends she had.

She expended all the money she could spare to detect and disarm him. But she could not succeed and was worried to distraction.

A daughter residing in Iowa was sent for to comfort her in her anxiety. When she learned what her mother had suffered, with true Western pluck, she told her that she must take courage, do as she told her, and she would triumph over her foe. For ten long years she had been annoyed, and at last backache, headache, irritability, spinal weakness, hot head, cold hands and feet told her that the effect was getting fatal. Her health and spirits finally broke down under the strain, and in 1875 she suffered unutterable tortures for several months from inflammation of the bladder. In 1878, renal hemorrhage and gravel, with frequent attacks of chills and fever, overcame her. Her sufferings, she says, surpassed description. Finally her stomach refused all solid food, and for a month she lived on a teacupful of milk three times a day. Nervous prostration ensued. Sleep was impossible. Walking was out of the question, and in despair of relief, she took to her bed expecting to die. She tried every reputable school of physicians, who agreed that she had a combination of desperate diseases common to women in middle life. While treating one the others grew worse.

Six weeks from the time she took her daughter's advice and dismissed her expensive and useless professional attendants, she resumed her place at the table, and from that day to this has been in sound and satisfactory health, which she attributes entirely to the use of warner's safe cure. All her ailments were caused by inaction of the kidneys and a poisoned state of the blood produced by that inaction. This was her secret enemy.

"If I were rich," she exclaimed to the reporter, "I would give that preparation to every suffering woman, for I am certain from my own bitter experience that renal disorders and poisoned blood are the source of the many constitutional complaints to which women are subject."

Mrs. Clark is a very estimable lady, who is to be congratulated on having so effectually routed an enemy which for so many years implacably and pitilessly pursued her. If other ladies would take the same course they would not be subject to these secret foes.

A Dublin Street Scene.

The general excitement which has so long been prevalent in Ireland seems to extend even to animals of an ordinarily peaceable nature, says the St. James' Gazette. At Dublin, on the last day of the old year, a cow which was being driven through the streets become so infuriated at the sight of its Saxon oppressors that it tossed a little boy and smashed his nose. An inspector and six constables, armed with revolvers, promptly pursued the animal, firing random shots at it. This only irritated the cow, and went on to knock down one man, tossed another, upset a pony and trap, and make a general clearance of the fish-market. It would seem that the police had by this time discharged all their bullets. One of them, however, had sufficient presence of mind to sieze the exasperated beast by the tail and hold on grimly until a certain Mr. Jameson, a member of the Irish rifle team, came upon the scene with his rifle and succeeded in killing the cow at the third shot. The drover in charge declared that the animal was not to his knowledge "wicked or wild;" and he is remanded on bail that the truth of this defence may be investigated.

Church of England Census.

The returns received by the Endowment Fund Committee from the different parishes of the Diocese of Niagara show the population of adult worshippers to be about 9,200. Many of the clergymen at the recent meeting of the Synod declared that the returns were inaccurate, inasmuch as the term "adult worshipper" was understood differently by different of the clergymen in making up the returns; some including persons of 17 years, others of 18 years, still others counting only those who had been confirmed, and some including only the males of their congregations. It was considered that complete returns would show a larger number than the figure given above.

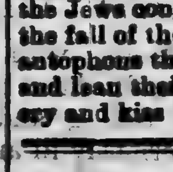
"Over and Over Again."

Repetition is sometimes the only way to impress a truth upon the mind. Accordingly take notice that Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," (the original Little Liver Pill) continue to be wonderfully effective in cases of sick and nervous headache, constipation, indigestion, rush of blood to the head, cold extremities, and of all ailments arising from obstruction of the bodily functions. Their action is thorough yet gentle, and the ingredients being entirely vegetable, they can be taken with impunity into the most delicate stomach. All druggists.

Divorces are becoming fashionable in Scotland. Last year eighty-nine petitions were granted, being the largest number on record. The highest number of decrees in any previous year was eighty one in 1880. The average number for the ten years before 1876 was only thirty-five.

A Certain Remedy for Corns.

This is the universal testimony and expressed by everyone who has used Putnam's Corn Extractor. Thousands in Canada have used it with gratifying results and if you will take the trouble to ask any druggist he will give you the names of many persons of your acquaintance who have been radically cured of the worst kind of corns. Sold everywhere. Safe, sure, painless, and vegetable in composition. Try it. It never fails. Take no substitute. Many of them are positively dangerous. Use Putnam's Corn Extractor.



Mr. W. D. Howells apparently regards the word "purple" in the familiar phrase, "purple and fine linen," as an adjective qualifying "linen." In the latest instalment of his cleverly written novel, "The Rise of Silas Lapham," he makes one of the characters, an educated gentleman, speak of "people whose houses are rich and whose linen is purple and fine."

There is but one clean spot in the whole Jewish district of Jerusalem. It is the old temple land at the western wall of Haram, 160 feet in length and 10 feet wide. It is the place where the Jews perform their lamentations. There are always a few pilgrims there. On Friday night most of the Jews congregate there to mourn over the fall of the holy city. In long Hebrew antiphons they bewail the departed glory, and lean their heads against the walls and cry and kiss the stones.

It will cure entirely the worst form of Female Complaints, all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will dissolve and expel Tumors from the Uterus in an early stage of development. The tendency to Cancerous Humors there is checked very speedily by its use.

It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headache, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Depression and Indigestion.

That feeling of Bearing Down, causing Pain, Weight and Backache, is always permanently cured by its use.

It will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws that govern the female system.

☞ Its purpose is SOLELY for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does ALL it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.

For the cure of Kidney Complaints in either sex this remedy is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at Lynn, Mass. Price $1. SERIOUSLY ILL.

A person suffering with pain and heat over the small of the back, with a weak weary feeling and frequent headaches, is seriously ill and should look out for kidney disease. Burdock Blood Bitters regulate the kidneys, blood and liver, as well as the stomach and bowels.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS purify the Blood, regulate Stomach Liver and Bowels.

New York had a million dollar fire last week.

DR. LOW'S WORM SYRUP will remove Worms and cause, quicker than any other Medicine.

The Montreal Witness has issued a very attractive Carnival number. It is sold at ten cents and is well worth the money.

DESTROY THE WORMS or they may destroy the children. Use Freman's Worm Powders, they expel all kinds of worms.

A rich deposit of copper ore has been discovered near Calabogie, about two miles from the Kingston and Pembroke railway.

FOR NETTLE RASH, Itching Piles, Ringworm Eruptions, and all skin diseases, use Prof. Low's Sulphur Soap.

A young man named John Arnold was shot in the head and fatally wounded last Tuesday at Thornhill by supposed burglars.

SALT RHEUM.

Salt Rheum, Pimples or Blotches can be thoroughly removed by a proper application of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate to the part, and a few doses of McGregor's Speedy Cure for impure blood. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared by McGregor & Parke. Sold at 25 cents at Hill Bro's. D. & J. 5

A lamp exploded in the store of Messrs. Skelton Decatur & Co. last week destroying some $95 worth of ready-made clothing.—Free Press.

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tested by years of trial and has been found the most convenient and effectual method of applying Carbolic acid. The greatest anticeptic in use for Cuts, Burns and Old Sores. Be sure you get McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold for 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 6

The London detectives are confident that they can prove Cunningham not only to have caused the explosion in the White Tower, but also to be connected with the outrage at Gower street railway station.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

WINDSOR, Feb. 4.—W. C. Wilkinson, reeve of Amherstburg, Ont., and Thomas Plant, reeve of Midstone, died last night, the former of hemorrhage of the lungs and the latter of chronic diarrhœa. Both were highly respected in Essex county.

Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Hands, or Old Sores of any kind that cannot be healed? Even though it be of years standing McGregor & Prrke's Carbolic Cerate will cure it. Beyond the shadow of a doubt it is the best healing compound ever known. Boils, Festerings, Frost Bites, Burns or any Skin Trouble, are alike cured by it. Sold at 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 4

A PERFECT BEAUTY.

Perfect beauty is only attained by pure blood and good health. These acquirements give the possessor a pleasant expression a fair, clear skin, and the rosy bloom of health. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the blood and tone the entire system to a healthy action.

The 19th of March has been fixed as the date or voting on the Scott Act in the city of St. Thomas and the counties of Elgin and Laimbton, Ontario, and the country of Missisquoi, Quebec.

A DOUBLE PURPOSE.

The popular remedy, Hagyard's Yellow Oil, is used both internally and externally, for aches, pains, colds, croup, rheumatism, deafness and diseases of an inflammatory nature.

The jury at the inquest on the body of the young man Arnold, shot at Thornhill, on Tuesday, brought in a verdict of "wilful murder" against James Stewart, and of feloniously aiding and abeting against J. G. Wesley.

A SAFE INVESTMENT.

Investing twenty-five cents for a bottle of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, the best throat and lung healer known. Cures coughs, bronchitis, asthma and all pulmonary complaints.

GENUINE PRESENTATION GOODS.

The elegant Gold Watch and chain presented to Miss Rorke, by Mr. W. J. McFarland was purchased from W. A. Brown, Jeweller, Markdale. This is the best place in the county to procure goods suitable for presents.

The annual meeting of the S. Grey Agricultural Society was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday, Jan. 21st, when the following officers were appointed:—James Edge, President; James Murdock, 1st Vice President; H. J. Chapter of Irish History.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—Before entering on the story of Ring's sufferings Mr. Somerville gives a brief description of the country as seen by him, July 1843. "Three of the rivers of Ireland, the "Barrow the Nove and the Suir, after "devious courses through valleys unsurpassed in beauty and fertility in "any country where summers are "green and harvests yellow, unite "together and form the vast breadth "of water that sweeps majestically to "the sea abreast of Waterford. It "advances to Tipperary, we go "westward, taking the river which "branches on the left, the Suir; if "going eastward or north-east into "the county of Carlow, enjoying by "the way the borders of Wexford and "and Kilkenny, we keep to the right-"hand river, the Barrow, and if "advancing into the heart of Kilkenny, "we take the banks of the Nove.

"The Nove is a river of clear water, "of a size similiar to the tweed at "Kelso, the clyde at Glasgow, the "Thames at Oxford, the Trent at Newark. In conducting the reader up "the Nove, I will not waste his time "further than to let him see that he "is in Ireland. If we look only at "the noble trees which overshadow "the road and occasionaly conceal the "river; and again at the gentle "eminences, now wooded, now crown-"ed with corn, luxuriant and green,—"eminences that give beauty and "variety to our journey, we see what "is met with in the river valleys of "England, and which, when seen in "England, call forth as many praises "and visitors. Looking narrowly at "the soil and its products, we may "conclude we are in Britain; save, "indeed, that the fertility of soil and "the luxuriance of crops surpass what "we have hithertoo seen, except in "the finest districts of Scotland or "Eengland. * * * * * * It is "already evident that in beauty and "variety of landscape, fertility of soil, "and luxuriance of crops, there is "everything to be pleased with. But "amid this beauty and fertelity, there "is what there never was in any other "country of the world. How is it "that we see a field of eight or ten "acres, or sometimes three or four "fields together of as many acres "each, lying without a crop save the "rank weeds, while others around are "cultivated and full of beautiful "promise for the coming harvest? "How is it that we see houses in "ruins, the substantial stone walls "(for here are no mud cabins, all are "good stone-and-mortar houses)—"how is it that these are roofless and "deserted, while the stone and mortar "of the walls tell that decay had "never taken hold of them, that their "age was not more than from twelve "to twenty years? How is it that in "some nook of the road, under shelter "of a tree or beneath a hedge, a "family of six or seven or more per-"sons, from the aged grandmother to "the sucking infant, are sitting "houseless and hopless, and yet "within half an hour's journey of the "spot where they were born, and of "land a lease of which was their legal "inheritance? Why do we meet on "every mile of road, constables with "carbines, bayonets, and ball-cartri-"dge? How is it, that, with so much "mineral wealth, Kilkenny has no "trading communication with the "sea,—neither by river, which is "navigable half way between the "town and Waterford, nor by canal, "nor by railway? (Now there is a "railway to Waterford.) Why, in a "district so rich above ground and "below, occupying one of the finest "positions evey occupied by an inland "town, has Kilkenny no trade? Why "do able-bodied men assemble each "morning by sunrise from the country "many miles round, in the market "place, to the number of hundreds, "and go home again unemployed and "penniless and hungry, though will-"ing and eager to work at sixpence a "day? Why do the streets resound "with the hoofs of cavalry and mount-"ed police? the barracks with the "ceaseless din of drilling and of "mounting gurads? Why are town "houses fortified for troops that the "barricks cannot contain, and the "barracks loop-holed for defence, and "provided with ammunition and "stores as if for a siege? Let some "recent occurrences of agrarian "outrage" reply.

"Patrick Ring of Bennet's Bridge "held three small fields, about eighteen "acres. He had a lease of thirty-one "years and his own life. He succeed-"ed his father in the occupancy of "the farm, who had been on the estate "many years. Ring's mother, an "aged woman, bordering on eighty, "was born on the farm so long held "by her husband and son. Thus there "was a strong attachment to the place. "Previous to the accession of the pre-"sent landlord, in 1839-40, they had "been on the best of terms with those "to whom they paid their rent; "and having the land at a moderate "rate, they had never fallen into "arrears. But the ejection of Patrick "Ring and many more was resolved "upon.

"As he owed no rent, and no possible "reason for getting rid of him as a "tenant could be assigned, nor was "ever offered until long after proceed-"ings had begun, a bold stroke was "requisite, and was struck. The "lease specified a certain day in May "and in November as that on which "the half-yearly rent became due. "Those days had been strictly adhered "to, and no one knew this better than "the landlord. But in 1841 he ob-"tained a warrant of distraint, and "seized on Ring on the 6th of March "for rent alleged to be due on the 25th. "It might have been a hard enough "misfortune to be distrained on "the day following that of the "rent being due in any case, especially "in spring, when the cattle and "implements of labor, as also the "seed-corn and potatoes, the articles "distrained, were required for the "duties of seed time. But when such "a distraint was made on such articles "so indispensable in their uses even "for a day, to say nothing of weeks, "and no rent nor debt of any kind "owing, the case was peculiarly a hard "one.

"Ring entered a replevin with the "sheriff, that is, gave security that he "would pay the rent, if rent were due, "as soon as a trial at quarter-session "or assizes could be had, that he "might in the meantime get the use "of the property upon which the "distraint lay. At the trial he proved "by his lease that he owed nothing,—"that no rent was dew until May But "before that was done, May had com-"menced, the rent was due. He "paid it punctually, and proceeded "against the landlord for damages, "or rather for the costs to which he "had been exposed at the trial. This, "being opposed occupied much "time; and before it was "settled the landlord once more "distrained for rent, alleged to "be due on the 29th of September. "Again Ring replevined, and proved "his rent day to be in November and "May and not in September and "March. The case of the costs and "second trespass came to trial in "respect of both a jury and a judge "had certified twice by their decision "that the tenant was right and the "landlord wrong.

"The damages awarded were very "moderate, £12 and costs; but the "tenant looked on the verdict as chiefly "important in setting as he thought, "the validity of his lease and the "period of his, rent days at rest. That "the damages were too moderate as "regarded the landlord was manifest "from the fact that he again distrain-"ed in March for rent not due until "May. He now, it being seed time "took a more effectual way of crippling "the tenant than before. He seized "on the farm property, of which the "manure pile was in his eyes the "most important. He had it without "legal sale carried to his own farm "yard, even to the rakings and "sweepings of the road and the yard "near which it lay. This he did that "Ring might have no manure for his "potato ground, knowing that the "crop of such land would not easily "afford the rent, and that, when no "rent was for the coming, an ejectment "would follow. Other things, a "plough and a horse and some "furniture, were sold, and Ring was "once more involved in litigation. "These were bought with his own "money, save the dung heap which "the landlord would not give him a "chance of buying in, and thus Ring "was obliged to pay his rent before "it was due, with all the expenses of "a distraint and sale—the most "expensively conducted of any dis-"traints and sales under the British "Crown. He thought to recover "damages but he was not able to pay "his rent in addition to all this when "it became due.

CONDENSED REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING HELD AT MARKDALE ON THURSDAY, JAN. 29TH, 1885

Committee on Municipal Law beg leave to report as follows: That they would still adhere to the reduction of County Councils, as recommended by the Executive Committee at the July session which has been duly transmitted to the Provincial Treasurer by our Secretary, for the consideration of Parliament; and your Committee would strongly entertain the hope that the Government will be enabled during the present session to bring before Parliament some acceptable measure to mitigate the evil complained of.

REPORT ON HORTICULTURE.

To the Worthy Master and Members assembled in Grey Division Grange:

Your Committee on Horticulture beg to report as follows: 1st, that they cannot do better than reiterate their report of July last, especially as to the pleasure and profit of small fruit culture, With our climate so well adapted for fruit culture there is no reason why any patron should not have abundance of small fruit from January to December; in the summer in their natural form; in the winter either in the form of canned or evaporated fruit. It must be borne in mind that it is not necessary in preserving small fruit to use a very considerable quantity of sugar. Nearly all our small fruits may be dried or sealed up from the air and thus preserved for years. Your committee would recommend that any patron who has not already planted small fruits to do so. Your committee looks forward to the establishment of canning factories in our towns and villages which will give a great impetus to small fruit growing—an occupation at once light, profitable and pleasant. To be successful in fruit growing, a careful selection of varieties is absolutely necessary, and so much depends on this, that no planter should ever depend on agents recommendations, as many agents and dealers in nursery stock have very limited experience as growers. Every planter should consult experienced growers in his own locality, or as near it as possible. Then plant and cultivate well, especially for a few years. He should prune himself, as even though he may have limited experience he can always prune better than his cows can. Your committee are pleased to be able to report the growing favor of our fine hardy Golden Russet in the European market. Last fall the average price of Canadian Golden Russets was fully five shillings sterling per barrel more than other winter varieties, and dealers in England informed your committee that the market cannot be gluted with Golden Russets. Indeed Canadian apples are far more popular and command higher prices in Britain than those grown in any other country. The family orchard should embrace a considerable number of varieties, ripening at different seasons, while those growing fruit for the market should confine their selection to a very limited number.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. BOND.

Great Preparations for the Suppression of the Rebellion.

TEN THOUSAND INDIAN TROOPS TO BE SENT.

General Earle's Column to Advance on Berber—The March of the Royal Irish—Italy's Assistance—The Voyageurs' Return—No Word Yet From Gordon—Another Fight Imminent

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: The Canadian voyageurs who left Cairo on the 5th inst. are expected to arrive here on the 18th. They will leave Queenstown on the 20th by the Allan line for Halifax, and will reach home about the 1st of March. There is some talk about giving the brave fellows, of whom all the officers with whom they were brought into contact are so praiseful, some kind of public reception on their arrival in this country.

THE PLAN OF ATTACK.

The War Office maintains the utmost reticence regarding the plans and movements of Wolseley. Cairo telegrams received to-day report that a council of war has been held at which General Stephenson advised the retreat of the troops from Metamneh on Korti and a concentration of the entire force towards Berber, and after the capture of Berber that the arrival of the expedition coming to Suakim be awaited before making an advance on Khartoum. Military authorities estimate that this plan involves a delay in the advance upon Khartoum until the autumn. The hot weather which begins next month will make it impossible for the English forces to stand the marches.

The Cabinet meeting to-day was prolonged. Messengers were despatched every few minutes between Downing street and the War Office and the Admiralty. Telegrams were received at short intervals from Wolseley. In these Wolseley expresses the belief that the entrenched garrisons at Abu Klea and Gubat are not endangered, although the continued absence of news concerning Beresford's attempt to relieve Sir Charles Wilson causes anxiety.

It is rumoured an order has been telegraphed to Wolseley to ascertain if possible, before taking decisive action, whether Gordon is dead or alive. If he discovers he still lives, he is instructed to try to terminate the campaign without further fighting. This instruction is thought to imply a desire on the part of the Government to secure the release of Gordon and his companions, by means of a ransom.

After the Cabinet council this afternoon there was a long conference between the Secretary of War, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It is stated that arrangements were made for despatching 8,000 troops to Egypt in the quickest practicable manner to reinforce Wolseley.

The War Office and Admiralty have issued a number of important orders looking to the relief of the troops in the Soudan. It is reported an army corps of 10,000 men will be sent to Khartoum via Abyssinia, accompanied by a seige train.

GEN. GORDON'S STRUGGLE.

When on the road to Khartoum, Col. Wilson was told by natives that Gordon had been fighting hard fifteen days. On his return several natives reported that Gordon and all the Coptic troops who had stood by him had been captured and put to death. Later on several Shagiyeh men came aboard and said Gen. Gordon, Consul Nicoli, 50 Greeks, and some soldiers, when pressed to desperation, shut themselves up in the Catholic Church, whither they had removed a quantity of ammunition and provisions.

THE SITUATION AT GUBAT.

Advices from Gubat, Feb. 1st, state that Gen. Stewart's men have been placed on three-quarter rations. Shendy and Metamma are occasionally shelled by steamers. Troops were busily clearing the ground in front of the camp, and were at work in an adjoining village. The main earthworks erected for the protection of the camp from the river front had been greatly strengthened. Several men who were wounded in desert battles had died. The remainder of the Royal Artillery and Naval Brigade with ten guns, including one Gardner, had arrived. A convoy had been sent back to Gakdul Wells for more stores. Nearly every night the pickets exchanged shots with the Arabs. It is stated that Wilson has on the island where he was stranded 250 refugees he found along the banks of the Nile. The troops at Gubat are in good spirits. The Mahdi has threatened to attack the camp with overwhelming forces.

AT WOLSELEY'S HEADQUARTERS.

A despatch from Wolseley's headquarters states that a courier accompanied by an escort, now on their way across the Bayuda desert, are expected to arrive at Korti to-night. The courier conveys report of Beresford's attempt to rescue Wilson and his party. Late advices from Gubat show that the camp daily sends out foraging parties. These patrol the Nile on steamers and take whatever forage and cattle they can procure. Whenever the owners of the supplies appear they are paid for them.

General Newdigate is mentioned as likely to command the Soudan expedition now being organized.

Gen. Wolseley late this afternoon was still without definite news of Gordon's fate. He had sent further spies to Khartoum with the promise that they would be liberally rewarded if they could definitely ascertain whether Gordon was dead or alive.

The Royal Irish Regiment, escorting 120 wounded from Gubat, arrived safely at Gakdul on the 5th inst.

It is believed a brigade of the Guards will be ordered to Egypt. No tidings was received at the War Office up to midnight concerning Gordon or Wilson.

TURKISH RESISTANCE.

A fleet of Turkish vessels of war have been ordered to prepare for sea within a month. This is interpreted to mean a fixed determination on the part of Turkey to oppose Italy's encroachment on the Red Sea littoral of Egypt, and to prevent any aggressive movement by Italy in North Africa.

The War Office reports that no troops can be spared from Ireland.

THE CAMPAIGN TO GO ON.

The Observer this morning says Wolseley asked for specific orders as to what he should do in the event of Gordon being found dead. After an animated and prolonged discussion the Cabinet replied that the campaign should be prosecuted until the rebellion was suppressed. Another Cabinet Council will be held to-morrow.

THE MAHDI'S INTENTIONS.

Sheikh Gemal-ed-Din, a well-known Mohammedan agent now in Paris, thinks Gordon is still alive, but if dead he fell while fighting the rebels. The Mahdi, he says, would respect Gordon as a prisoner, and might be willing to open negotiations to exchange Gordon for Arabi Pasha, whom the Madhi honors as a true servant in the cause of Mahomet. The Mahdi might make a partial peace with England, but never a permanent peace. He would refuse to accept the title of Viceroy or any other title from the Khedive or Sultan, but would remain the Mahdi. He aimed at the conquest of the Soudan, and hoped a rising would take place in Arabia against the Turks.

TREACHEROUS PASHAS.

The War Office authorities have had a special wire laid into the office connecting with the Falmouth terminus of the Eastern Telegraph Company's cables in order to have direct communication with Wolseley. Advices received to-night from the British camp near Metemma, dated February 1st, say: It is reported that previous to the fall of Khartoum the Mahdi sent Gordon a uniform and informed him that Khartoum was in the Mahdi's power. Gordon frequently tried to make arrangements for the departure of himself and comrades. The latter became disheartened over the non-arrival of the British, and anger and mistrust were rampant. The two pashas who betrayed the city were formerly slaves whom Gordon made pashas. There has been a further fall of the Nile of three feet at Gubat and navigation is dangerous.

A JOURNALISTIC OPINION.

The Army and Navy Gazette considers it would be insane to reduce the number of European soldiers at the garrisons in Hindustan at present. It says if General Earle succeeds in reaching Berber he can hold the place and fortify it in such a way as to be able to await the advance from Suakim, and in the meantime drive Osman Digna from his present control of the route between Suakim and Berber. From Berber, General Earle, by controlling the line of march from Suakim, would command a better base of supplies than is now possessed by the English troops in the Soudan.

EXPLANATION TO THE PORTE.

Granville to-day categorically informed Tehme Pasha, the Turkish envoy, that the English Government intended, for political and financial reasons, to evacuate Egypt, but that it was impossible to specify the exact period for withdrawal. The Government would not permit withdrawal without some reward for England's sacrifice. He said the proposed Turkish expedition to Suakim was inopportune, and assured Tehme Pasha the Sultan's sovereignty over Egypt would be respected. Granville counsels the Porte not to raise a question with Italy in connection with the annexation of Beilul. He held that Italy's commercial interests in Assab compelled her to extend her authority over the adjacent districts.

PREPARING FOR AN ATTACK.

News from Gubat dated the 3rd instant states that the rebels are preparing for another active encounter. Loopholes are being made in the outside of the houses at Metemneh, and the enemy's videttes maintain an active lookout, fearing the British attack on the town. A recent convoy met a thousand rebel cavalry and infantry three miles from Gakdul. The rebels were shelled and dispersed. The convoy was unhurt. A light camel corps has arrived at Gubat. The Mahdi is drawing immense quantities of supplies from the Merawi district.

TWENTY THOUSAND INDIAN TROOPS WANTED

Sir Evelyn Baring, British Consul General, has telegraphed the Government advising the despatch of 20,000 Indian troops for service in Egypt.

THE MAHDI'S COUNSEL.

The Arabic journal Mubashir says the Mahdi's Council of War consists of the Ameers of El Rasher, El Aisgumer, El Obeid and Tendelm. All war plans are formed by the Ameer of El Rasher. The Prophet's soldiers are paid every Friday by the Mahdi's uncle. Provisions for the army are under the care of the Ameer of El Aisgumer. Seventy-four Dervishes act as prayer reciters for the camp. Eight hundred women and many children are with the Prophet's camp.

Premier Depretis, and Ricoti, Minister of War, are resolved that Italy shall enter upon a course of energetic action in Egypt in concert with England.

In the Chamber of Deputies to-day, Mancini, Minister of Foreign Affairs, replying to numerous questions, said it was inopportune as yet to explain Italy's position toward England.

Most of the Cabinet Ministers, and a majority of the deputies are in favor of Mancini's proposal that the Italian troops now in Egypt or on their way thither be allowed to assist the British in holding the Soudan and Red Sea littoral. The only difficulty is on the score of expense. If England would guarantee the cost of the Italian expedition there would be no doubt of the cordial co-operation of the two countries in defeating the Mahdi and Osman. It is not believed that Italy will ask England to foot the bills.

The Government is prepared to send 35,000 troops to the Soudan. All political parties express warm sympathy with England and the strongest desire for close alliance. Italian statesmen now see an opportunity for Italy to assert herself as one of the first powers of Europe.

DISCUSSING THE SITUATION.

England hitherto has not asked that the Italian Government should co-operate with her in the Soudan. Frequent conferences have been held between the British Ambassador and Mancini, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, but nothing definite has been agreed upon. Maglini, the Minister of Finance, opposes the expedition upon the ground that the treasury is already overburdened, but the majority of the members of Parliament support it and urge that it be carried forward on a grand scale. Fanfulla, the Ministerial organ, says: "We will not wait for England to ask our help, but will give it without bargaining. We do not wish the hesitation on our part to appear as a speculation. It is said the Italians are Machiavellian. This is a noble way of being so." Diritto says: "Italy cannot permit England to be defeated. It is Italy's duty to assist and extricate the English Cabinet from its present difficulty. The Italian forces, if promptly employed, will be able to open the Suakim and Berber route and secure Wolseley's line of communication. Public opinion will applaud Italy's prompt, energetic and resolute support. England has always been Italy's friend." Riforma, the Ministerial organ, says: "England is a friend who has rendered us great services and never asked us for a man or a penny. It is our duty and to our interest to unite with her." Resegna says: "No troops will be sent to the Soudan by Italy unless under a formal treaty providing for an offensive and defensive alliance and guaranteeing Italy English aid in the event of war with any maritime Power."

Wolseley telegraphs to-day from Korti as follows: The advance guard of Earle's column, consisting of a squadron of cavalry under command of Col. Buller, surprised a large body of the Monessir tribe, under Wadgamz, the murderer of Col. Stewart, encamped at Shakoob Wells. The cavalry charged the encampment, and the enemy fled in every direction, leaving behind thirty men killed a large number of camels and cattle and many Remington rifles. Buller captured six prisoners.

Great activity prevails at Chatham, Woolwich and Aldershot. Preparations for sending reinforcements to Egypt are being rapidly pushed. The Twentieth Hussars, Third Battalion of the Rifle Brigade, now at Aldershot, a battalion of Scotch Fusiliers, a battalion of Coldstream Guards and a squadron of the Fifth Lancers have been ordered to proceed at once to Suakim. Three battalions of Guards and four battalions of infantry, including two from Malta and two from Gibraltar, have been ordered to Egypt. Two battalions of infantry and a regiment of cavalry have been ordered from India to Egypt. The nine battalions of troops ordered from England, Malta, Gibraltar and India are sent at the request of Wolseley. The Guards will leave England at the end of the present week. Two battalions of English infantry in Lower Egypt will proceed immediately to the Soudan. It is stated that the nine battalions after reaching Suakim will open the road between Suakim and Berber, and attempt to form a junction with the British forces on the Nile.

CRAZED BY GRIEF.

A Bereaved Husband on a Storm-Beaten Island Calling the Name of the Loved and Lost.

A sad romance is connected with the strange apparition seen by a fisherman while sailing out of Booth Bay harbor yesterday morning, says a despatch from Bath, Me. Near the mouth of the harbor lies Squirrel Island, in summer a fashionable resort, but in winter a bleak and desolate spot, inhabited only by the lonesome man who is left in charge of the hotel and cottage. Yesterday was one of the coldest of the winter. As the fisherman went by the island he saw a man standing on the rocky shore shouting at the top of his voice. His cries could barely be heard above the booming of the surf, which beats against the ledge with great fury. Coming nearer, the fisherman saw the stranger was a handsome fellow not over 30 years of age. Thinking he was in distress and needed aid, the fisherman approached within hailing distance. As soon as he could make himself heard, he shouted to the man on the rock, but received for reply, only the anguished cry, "Josie! Josie! Josie!" repeated again and again. Realizing then that the young man was crazy, the fisherman put back to shore and summoned aid. The young man was kindly cared for, and to-day his sad history became known. It is a most pitiful story. He is a graduate of Williams College, and became a journalist in New York. Subsequently he concluded to be a lawyer, and was admitted as a student in the office of one of the leading legal firms in New York. He has a fortune inherited from an uncle who died worth $2,000,000. A year ago he became engaged to Miss Josie Perkins, living in Lewiston. She was a fine musician and artist. He and his affianced spent all last summer together at Squirrel Island. In October she was suddenly prostrated and died after an illness of six days. She died at noon. At 10 o'clock the same forenoon they were married, at her earnest request. She said but a few words after the wedding ring was put on her finger, and in two hours the bridegroom was a widower. Since that day the young man has been failing bodily and mentally, and his grief has been something terrible. He went to New York, but had to return, and spent the most of his time at his wife's grave. Finally he chartered a steamer at Bath, took a box of fuel and a supply of provisions and went to Squirrel Island. He remained three days on the island, and it was he whom the fisherman saw standing on the rock where the spray splashed over him, and crying, "Josie!" as if he expected an answering voice to issue from the waves. His friends fear he is incurably insane. His condition is critical.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Not in a Hurry.

Texas Siftings: Judge Wakefield, of Waco, has a son of whom the judge is very proud. He thinks the boy has a judicial mind, and will grow up to be a great jurist. The boy is, however, very lazy. A few days ago the judge said: "My dear boy, why don't you study more industriously? I want you to become a famous jurist. You have not touched your books to-day." "I am not going to study any to-day," responded the indolent boy, "I don't see that it makes much difference, pa, whether I become a famous jurist a few days sooner or a few days later."

Of the four hundred ministers who on the 18th May, 1843, walked in the historical procession from the Assembly to Tanfield Hall, in Edinburgh, it is said only a few now survive. Dr. Beith, of Stirling, is 88; Mr. Dewar, of Fochabers, the last of the Strathbogie heroes, is 88; Dr. Mackay, of Inverness, is older; and Mr. Waters, of Burghead, is 94.

The theatrical sensation of to-day in London is an intimation from St. Stephen's Review "that on his return Lord Garmoyle and Miss Fortescue will be married, notwithstanding the lawsuit."

Stories of Mr. Gladstone.

About thirty years ago several haulers were employed in carrying the iron from Reynolds to Queen's Ferry. Among the number was one William Griffiths, who is still alive. This man, when going down Tinkersdale one day with his load of iron, was accosted by a stranger, who chatted very freely with him. Among other questions, the stranger asked how much he got per ton for carrying the iron. "Six-and-sixpence," said the carter. "What weight have you on the cart?" "About a ton and a half." "And what do you pay for gates?" "Eighteen pence." "How much does it cost to keep the mare?" "Thirteen shillings a week." Presently they reached the foot of the Mill-hill. "How are you going to get up this hill?" asked the stranger. "Oh, I mun get me shuder and push up here?" "I'll help you a bit," said he, and at once put his shoulder to the cart and pushed up the hill well. When they reached the top the hauler said, "You an' me's been as good as a chain horse." "Well, well," said the stranger, "I don't know how the horse's legs are, but mine ache very much indeed. I suppose you can manage now?" "Yes, thank you," said the hauler, and, wishing good day, they separated. As soon as the stranger was gone, a tradesman asked Griffiths if he knew who had been helping him. "No," said he, "he's a perfect stranger to me." "That was Mr. Gladstone," said the tradesman. "Mr. Gladstone," responded the hauler; "I dun know what he'll think o' me, then, for I never sur'd him, nor nothin'. I thought he was some farmer."

Northop, like most other important villages, has its carrier. This man visits Chester once or twice a week, and carries all manner of good for the inhabitants of the districts through which he passes. On one occasion he brought a barrel of beer from Chester for a farmer living in Moor lane, the entrance to which is close to one of Mr. Gladstone's lodges. Arriving at this spot, he stopped his horse, and was wondering how he could manage to get the barrel lowered, for he was to leave it by the lodge, as the farmer had agreed to fetch it from there himself. At this moment up came Mr. Gladstone, with his axe upon his shoulder. "Hey, old comrade," said he, "come and give us a hand with this barrel." Without any hesitation the Premier assisted him to lower it to the ground. "Now, old fellow," said the carrier, "if thou'll come up into the village I'll pay for a pint o' the best for thee." "No, thank you. You are welcome to my assistance," said Mr. Gladstone, and walked away towards the castle smiling. A villager, who was standing a little way off, then came up to the carrier, and asked him if he knew who had been helping him. "No," was the reply. "Why," said the villager, "that was Mr. Gladstone!" "What a fool I be," said the carrier; "but he's a good old chap. He helped me, and thou knows he done it so willing like."

At the Hawarden Flower Show of 1884 the Premier was seen arming about the castle grounds, where the show is annually held, a fat old carrier woman, whom he humorously introduced to the visitors as "Lady Margaret." This notable personage, Margaret Hughes, the carrier woman, was at one of the feasts given in honor of Mr. W. H. Gladstone's marriage, and, as is usual at such gatherings, toasts were introduced. It fell to Margaret's lot to propose the Premier's health. Springing to her feet, she, in her very homely, yet appropriate terms, made her proposition. Mr. Gladstone, responding, thanked them all for their good wishes, more especially "Lady Margaret," as he called her—the mention of which caused roars of laughter. The title has clung to her from that day to this, and letters are often addressed to her bearing that title. On one occasion she said to the Premier, "Oh, sir, why do you not come and live with us always, where everybody thinks so much of you, instead of going up to London and bothering yourself with those fellows who will never let you alone? Why not settle down here in your beautiful house and enjoy yourself?" "Well," said Mr. Gladstone, "let me put you a question. Why should you not sell your horse and cart, and give up troubling yourself about this going to and from Chester?" "Eh, but," she answered, "that is my work, and I think if I gave it up I should die." "And the other," said Mr. Gladstone, "is my work, and I must do it the best way I can."

Mrs. Gladstone was going out for a walk. She had got a short distance from the castle when a party of visitors met her. "I say, is the old gentleman at home?" said one of them. "Yes," said Mrs. Gladstone. "We want to see him," said he. "Follow me," was her reply, "I'll take you to him." She led the way to the front door, and called out, "William, you're wanted." "By golly," whispered one of them, "she must be his wife!"

A new symphonic poem, called "Eroica," by Anton Rubinstein, is to be performed at Leipsic.

Raphael Joseffy goes to London this summer under the management of C. A. Chizzola.

In the Receuil de Medecine Veterinaire Dr. Cagny calls attention to the indiscriminate use of the tincture of arnica for horses. He says that it is often employed in considerable quantities for petty strains and bruises, and is kept in contact with the affected surfaces until they are swollen, heated, and often blistered, thus greatly aggravating the original trouble. He also cites cases in which erysipelas has been induced in men from an overuse of this irritating remedy.

The injurious effect produced by illuminating gas is due, according to Grube's researches, not to the continuance of its action, but to its concentration, or the percentage of it in the air. It is asserted that air containing five parts in ten thousand can be breathed by men and animals for hours, and even days, without any injury to the health; from seven to eight parts in ten thousand cause indisposition; twenty parts produce difficult breathing, loss of power and uncertainty of motion; with twenty to forty parts drowsiness begins, and, when there is still more carbonic oxide in the air, the poisoning is attended with violent symptoms; brain and spinal column are especially affected, cramps seize the victim, yet he may recover if brought quickly into fresh air. Breathing air heavily charged with carbonic oxide for a long time may likewise cause death.

THE BOY'S PROFESSION.

Let Him Follow the Natural Bent of His Mind and He will Succeed.

Pittsburg Dispatch: Parents often make grave mistakes by choosing professions for their sons without reference to their fitness. The man who has risen from poverty or the lower levels of business life to comparative wealth does not care to have his sons pass through all that he experienced. It is not necessary that they should. Let them profit by his hard-earned knowledge. Some men do not seem to know how to make this knowledge available for their sons. Instead of endowing them with a knowledge of how to make money and how to use it to the best advantage, they give them all they want of it. Boys instinctively know how to spend money.

Some of the most noted spendthrifts and total wrecks are the sons of men who made their fortunes by hard work and the closest economy. Through a desire to see their sons enjoy the fruits of their labor they made gentlemen of them instead of business men.

A boy with a decided taste or aptness for any calling is easily disposed of. It is the one with no special genius who is hard to fix. Such a one is usually a good all-round scholar, can make a sled, tinker a sewing machine, play the piano, make a passable drawing, dance well, write a fair essay—in short do almost anything tolerably well.

Now, what is to be done with such a chap? He does not play the fiddle well enough to make a good living fiddling; his sketches are not strong enough to guarantee success as an artist; his pen is scarcely trenchant enough to justify making an editor of him; his skill as a tinker does not indicate any mechanical genius—in short, the surface indications are in a manner useless, none of them being strong enough to warrant an investment. What is to be done with him?

If he has no money and has to make his own way in the world, perhaps the best thing is to pay strict attention to his habits and his morals and let him go. Being forced to earn his own bread, he will very soon find a niche in which he is comparatively comfortable.

However, if he is so situated that he does not have to work for a living, it is not probable that he will do much skirmishing, but wait contentedly for something to turn up. He knows the dinner-bell will ring and the tailor be paid all the same, whether he works or not. If there is no way by which he can be dumped out into the world and made to feel that his existence depends upon his own efforts, the next best thing, probably, is to assist him in choosing a trade or a profession and then put him at it in earnest, keep him down to it until he shows signs of positively liking or disliking it, and let him be governed accordingly.

The country is full of doctors, lawyers and preachers, who are such because it was not known what else to make of them, and a sorry lot they are.

It is a clear waste of raw material to try to make a lawyer out of a born mechanic, a doctor out of a natural artist, or a business man out of the stuff intended for a dancing master. While it may not be clear waste to make either out of a mixed stick, the chances are the result will never be considered a great success.

Well-formed habits and good morals constitute the best start a jack-of-all-trades can have. With these there is but little danger of his going to the bad, even if he does not make a great hit in life. Without these he is just as liable to go down the hill as up, to sink as to swim.

The worst mistake made by parents are when they pay no attention to the surface indications, and set their sons up in professions because they want to see them there. Some do this when they are morally certain the place is not suited to them. Failure in such cases is inevitable.

HOW TO GET SICK.—Expose yourself day and night; eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know how to get well, which is answered in three words—Take Hop Bitters!

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

A very serious epidemic of measles has broken out at Cardiff. All the Sunday schools in the district are closed. In the district of Grangetown, where there are 748 houses, and a population of 4,675, there have been 1,120 cases and 56 deaths, while out of the 748 houses, 373 have been infected.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Hickey, in moving that it was expedient that recognition should be made by the Dominion Government of the volunteers of 1837-8, said that some persons might question the justice of the cause in which the volunteers fought, but they were fighting for the Crown, and it was not for them to ask the reason why. He intimated that a suitable compensation might take the form of grants of Northwest land.

Sir John Macdonald said the disturbances were long past. They took place before the Dominion was formed, and the claim of the volunteers was upon the Governments of the different Provinces.

Mr. Blake agreed in the view of the last speaker, and said that the Province of Ontario had already taken this view. The Government of the Hon. Sandfield Macdonald had compensated Montgomery for the burning of his barn by the volunteers. (Laughter.)

Sir John Macdonald suggested that the motion be withdrawn and the mover consented.

Mr. Mackenzie moved for a statement showing the several amounts collected by the Dominion Government for lands sold or leased within the bounds and limits of the western part of Ontario as determined by the decision of the Privy Council against the claim of the Dominion Government.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Dawson, in moving for the return of the customs collected in Algoma for the last six months of 1884, called attention to the increase in those receipts and in the population and shipping of Algoma as showing that people could do as well in Algoma as in the Provinces of the Northwest.

Mr. Blake said there was one thing which the hon. gentleman had omitted to state, and that was where Algoma was. The hon. gentleman did not seem to know last session. (Laughter.)

Mr. Dawson—I shall be happy to give the hon. gentleman any agricultural information of that kind. Algoma, as I understand it, and there was a special Act defining the electoral district, extends from the French River on the east to somewhere about Rat Portage on the west and from the great lakes to Hudson Bay. (Cheers and laughter.) The motion was carried and the House adjourned.

The following public Bills were presented and read a first time:

A Bill respecting International ferries—Mr. Patterson (Essex.)

A Bill to amend the law relating to contagious diseases among cattle—Mr. Pope.

Sir Leonard Tilley presented a Bill relating to the Consolidated Insurance Act of 1877, explaining that it was the same Bill as was introduced by the Government last session. The Bill was read a first time.

Mr. Pope presented a Bill to provide for the taking of a census of the Northwest Territories and Manitoba.

Sir Richard Cartwright—Will the Government take a census de jure or de facto, counting the people who are there or those who ought to be there, as in the last census?

Mr. Pope—From our experience the census will be taken in the same way as formerly. The Bill was read a first time.

Mr. Charlton presented a Bill to promote the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, by prohibiting Sunday excursions, which was read a first time.

Sir John Macdonald moved without comment for the appointment of a special committee made up of members on both sides of the House, to take into consideration and report on the alleged necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of bankruptcy or insolvency, giving adequate protection against undue preferences.

Mr. Blake—Does not the hon. gentleman desire to explain this resolution?

Sir John Macdonald said he thought he had explained sufficiently on a previous occasion. He referred to the requests by members of the Boards of Trade in Canada and the Chambers of Commerce in England, that there should be an insolvency law. Commercial men, however, were not united in favor of such a law, and outside of commercial circles opinions seemed to be rather adverse. This committee was appointed to investigate the whole question and assist Parliament to come to a decision on the question.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Mills asked whether it was the intention of the Government to propose any legislation, or to invite Parliament to ask for Imperial legislation, to define the boundary of the Province of Ontario upon the north and west.

Sir John Macdonald—It is not the intention to propose any legislation. The question whether it is necessary to ask for Imperial legislation is now under the earnest consideration of the Government.

Mr. McMullen asked whether any, and if so, what sum or sums of money have been paid to J. A. Wilkinson by the Government of the Dominion from the first day of January, 1884, to February, 1885. If paid—for what purpose or services, and where?

Mr. Pope said that so far as he knew no money had been paid to Mr. Wilkinson, except by the Department of Railways and Canals. The sums paid were $69 on 1st February, 1884, and $262 on the 23rd May, 1884, these sums being paid for salary and expenses as land valuator.

In reply to Mr. Edgar, Mr. Chapleau said no correspondence had taken place between the High Commissioner and the Government on the subject of Imperial Federation. The Government, however, had received copies of the resolutions passed at the conference on Imperial Federation held in London during the past year.

Mr. Cameron (Middlesex) asked—Is it the intention of the Government to introduce any legislation this session affecting benevolent or friendly societies?

Sir Leonard Tilley said the only legislation on this subject was the Insurance Bill now before the House.

Mr. Mills, on moving for copies of all Orders in Council, Imperial, Canadian or Provincial, in the hands of the Government and not already laid before Parliament relating to the disputed boundaries of Ontario, pointed out that the report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the boundary case referred only to a portion of the boundary of the disputed territory. It was stated that the Privy Council would ask for Imperial legislation to confirm the boundaries so far as the report touched them, but it was important to know what the Dominion Government proposed to do in this matter. It was in his opinion most desirable that this dispute should be settled soon and settled once for all.

Sir John Macdonald said that he quite agreed that this dispute should be settled early and for ever. These papers would be brought down. The motion was carried.

Mr. Jackson, in moving for a return showing the dredges, tugs and dumping scows built in the United States for the Government of Canada during the years 1883 and 1884, called attention to the expenditure of $130,000 within the last two years in procuring these vessels from a Lockport, N.Y., firm. He contrasted this action with the cry of the gentlemen opposite, "Canada for the Canadians," by which they had obtained power.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Blake moved for a statement showing the estimated receipts for each year in respect of each class of public property, on which A. M. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior, based his estimate of $68,000,000, which he said would be received by the Government from the sales and leases, etc., of land in the Northwest from January, 1883, to December, 1891. He referred to the report of the Minister of the Interior, which had just reached him, to show that the receipts so far were less than two millions, and that for the succeeding years of the period it would require an average of $8,000,000 a year from this time forward to make up the amount estimated. He thought it would be interesting to have the data on which the estimate was based.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Mulock moved for copies of all minutes of Council not already laid before the Parliament, relating to the so called Fishery Question, from the 1st of July, 1867, up to the time of the signing of the Washington Treaty. He read extracts from papers already brought down to show that most important documents were indicated as existing which were not before the Parliament. He called attention to some statements in documents leading to the conclusion that had not monetary compensation been asked for a Reciprocity Treaty would propably have been the result of the cession of the rights under the Fishery Clauses.

Yachting.

The London Field says: "Some of the New York papers make merry over the idea of the vaunted British racing cutter going to sea under a trysail, and declare that their owners dare not live on board. If the writers had an opportunity of seeing the owners on board such beautiful vessels, say, as Marjorie and Wendur, and the luxurious comforts they enjoy in the way of cabin accommodation, they would very much modify their opinions as to the British racing machines. It is true that the Cambria and Dauntless raced across the ocean with their big spars, and Cambria's boom was 64 feet; mainmast, deck to hounds, 62 feet, and bowsprit, 41 feet outside. The Fleetwing, Henrietta and Vesta came across before the westerly gales in the winter of 1861 under big spars, and no doubt the British racing cutters could do the same, although they might often have to stow their booms, and would probably require a new sail to race with on arrival. Among other notions derogatory to the British cutters is one that their lead keels will drop off, and that if they get hit by a big sea they will crumple up like matchwood. Of course a lead keel may drop, although, so far as our knowledge goes, it has only happened yet when fastened with iron bolts; and a yacht may be 'crumpled up' just as ships are; but let us hope that these anticipations are founded rather on a lack of knowledge of what the British cutter is like than an intimate acquaintance with her."

Skating.

Hugh J. McCormick, of St. John, N. B., challenges any man in America to skate him any distance from one to three miles, stakes $100 to $200 a side. The challenge remains open for five days.

WHELPLEY'S WONDERFUL SPEED.

We were in error on Saturday as to Axel Paulsen's record for a mile. It was 3 26 2-5 instead of 2 26 2 5. The best authenticated record was the English record of 3 minutes, but Whelpley wiped out all of Paulsen's records up to five miles at one fell swoop and would give the Swede over a mile start in the distance above. Josh Ward was the referee and W. B. Curtis, of the Spirit of the Times, was timekeeper.

The Turf.

The Ottawa winter trotting meeting came to a close on Saturday. There was a good attendance and the track was in excellent condition. In the five mile race there were five entries, but only four started. Mile End Boy came in first, Louis F. second, North Star third and Nellie S. fourth. In the consolation race Moneymaker won by three strait heats, Jennie second and Joe L. third.

At the Montreal meeting in celebration of General Stewart's victory in the Soudan desert, Rev. Dr. Stevenson is reported to have said:—

He was a minister of the gospel, and the gospel told him to love his enemies. He was sorry that English and French blood had been shed, and that more would need to be shed. He was sorry for the poor deluded rebels who were slain and would be slain, but they could not afford to let the great ends of humanity sink and die, even though the vindication of its cause march over his body and the body of each one present.

We would not have expected such rank Jingoism from a minister of the gospel of peace and good-will toward all men. The language is certainly not in the spirit of the Founder of Christianity, who denied the right of His followers to advance His kingdom on earth by means of the sword. Besides, the reverend gentleman is astray in his facts. The Soudanese who are in arms against the British may be poor and deluded. They have been made poor through the unfairly levied taxation by their Egyptian invaders. They may be deluded in their religious beliefs, but we have yet to learn that any religious sect has been converted to Christianity by the influence of the sword. Whatever they are, these men are not rebels. The British Government does not claim ownership of the Soudan; look at it in whatever light we may, the False Prophet can only regard the British troops as invaders of the homes of his people. Let Dr. Stevenson put himself in the place of these Arabs, and see how he would like it.

[illegible] Account of the Attack on Mr. [illegible] Cowardly Affair.

A last Saturday's New York despatch says: The examination into the stabbing of Capt. Phelan by Richard Short began this afternoon. There was quite a large attendance of Irish Nationalists, members of the Fenian Brotherhood, dynamiters and others. When Phelan appeared and Short had been led to the bar, Short's counsel asked if Phelan had been searched. The judge replied he supposed he had, but directed a police sergeant to examine him. The sergeant put his hand in among the bandages supporting Phelan's left arm and pulled out a five-chambered Colt's revolver with a long barrel. There was quite a sensation in court when the revolver was discovered. Short laughed nervously, but seemed relieved. The case was adjourned for a week at the request of Short's counsel. The newest development in the case is a specific charge made by the Rossa side that Phelan has been in the pay of the British Government at least seven years past.

Phelan gave to a reporter to-day a succinct account of the trap into which he was led and its consequences. He says: "My visit here was to confront my accusers, who were calling me informer and traitor. John Kearney wrote me and I came on. I went to Kearney's saloon. We had a long chat, and I thought I had satisfied John of my loyalty, and said the next best thing was to go and see Rossa. We went to Rossa's office. He was out. John introduced a man named Roach. We were the only three in the room. Seated at a desk in Rossa's private office was a person that looked like a countryman. I proposed to Kearney that we go out and return again. He objected, saying Rossa would not be long. I had my legs stretched out under the table, so that under any circumstances I could not get up as quickly as if sitting upright. Rocky Mountain O'Brien was scarcely two or three seconds out of the room when a man rushed into the room and attacked me. He hissed out, 'You ——— ———.' I saw the gleaming blade descending, and moving my body to one side I threw up my hand to ward off the blow aimed for my heart. My arm fell by my side, and again down came the bloody weapon. I moved again, but the blade caught me in the breast above my heart. Had I not moved that stab would have finished me. Short was a demon. He cut and slashed in all directions. I closed with my assassin and forced my way to the door and into the hallway. Instead of coming to my assistance Kearney and Roach, in the most cowardly manner, got the table between us and them, and the moment an opportunity presented itself they fled from the room. When Short and I got into the passage way he stabbed me in the back three times. I succeeded in gaining the steps, but he was after me and stabbed me three times in the head. His blows fell short or he would have pierced my skull at every blow. All this time I was growing weak from loss of blood. I staggered towards the entrance in a half conscious state, and when I got to the steps I swooned. It was like a dream. I could hear voices all round me but was unable to speak."

The Poor Millionaires.

The fact is that when a millionaire fails, it by no means follows that every dollar has been swept away. It is generally the case that he or his wife saves something out of the wreck. As an illustration of this I am reminded of an interview I had not long ago with a gentleman who said, alluding to his failure several years previous:

"I came down to Wall street one day worth $3,000,000. When I went home at night I was penniless."

"What! absolutely penniless?"

"Well, practically so; to be sure, I saved my seat in the Stock Exchange and about $60,000 in cash, but what did that amount to? From an income of $150 000 per year I was obliged to live on $6,000."

To a majority of people such an income would seem princely, but to this gentleman it meant poverty. It has been said that in New York no man is so poor as he who has a yearly income of $10,000.—N. Y. World.

Sir Herbert Maxwell, M. P., announces that in the new British Parliament there will be introduced a scheme of national insurance, or a compulsory system by which the State shall become to all the adult inhabitants of the country a great friendly society. The sum of £10, to be paid by each individual by the time he reaches 21 years of age, would enable the national club to guarantee 8s. per week to any one disabled by sickness, and a further payment of 4s. to every man over 70 years of age. With respect to criminals, they they should not be allowed out of prison until they had worked out their insurance. This scheme, which is now in actual trial in Germany, would of course take the place of the friendly societies that already exist in Great Britain. These are most varied in their operations—some like the Oddfellows and Free Gardeners—extending their relief during the lifetime of a member, provided he keeps in good standing, while others collect so much every week, pay sick or disabled members out of the proceeds, and declare a dividend of what remains every year. This last-mentioned system of insurance is very popular in Great Britain, and has to a limited extent been introduced into Canada. These benefit societies are almost all confined to town or cities, and it is rarely that the agricultural classes have any system of sick or benefit societies. The proposed law would embrace all classes, and would enable the farm laborers, as well as the workpeople in the city, to meet the demands of sickness and old age with something like an assurance that they would not have to depend on the charity of others. There would be difficulties in the way of efficiently carrying out the scheme, and the expense of administration might be so large that it would necessitate the expenditure of a large sum of public money. Perhaps in the details of the scheme, it may be shown to be otherwise; but unless it is, the Government may deem it prudent to let the workingmen continue to manage their own sick and benefit societies. They perform all the labor connected with the collection and distribution of the funds on a labor of love, and thus save a great deal of expense.

[illegible] Against Cunningham and [illegible]

A last (Monday) night's London cable says: At the examination of Cunningham and Burton, the alleged dynamiters, in Bow Street Police Court to-day, Mr. Poland said as far as the case against the prisoners was in its infancy. The police were hard and successfully at work, and were daily obtaining more information about the conspiracy, in the carrying out of which Cunningham and his colleagues were instruments. The Crown would prove the headquarters of the conspiracy was in America. The prisoners had come from America, bringing dynamite of the Atlas brand. Cunningham, continued Mr. Poland, had been in England before he came to England in May, 1884, and was here when the Scotland Yard explosions occurred and dynamite was found placed against the Nelson column. Burton was in England from March until September, 1884. In July or August he was in St. Bartholomew's hospital ill. He returned to America in September. The explosions at Gower street station occurred on January 2nd. A short time after Burton and Cunningham arrived. The train which arrived at the station at the time of the explosion started from Aldgate, and both the prisoners lived but a short distance from Aldgate. It would be shown the men were on the train and were active in causing the explosion.

Miss Cannon, the proprietress of the lodging house, 30 Great Prescott street, testified when the prisoner first came to her house he brought a brown bag and a large brown trunk, both of which he carried up-stairs himself. He informed her the trunk was not his but belonged to a friend and he was going to buy a smaller one. He shortly afterward returned with a smaller brown box and the brown trunk was not seen again, although she could not tell how it was taken away. He had no visitors and received no letters nor wrote any.

The widow who keeps the lodging house, 32 Scarborough street, testified that Cunningham hired a room January 14th. He gave no reference, but said he came from 40 (not 36) Prescott street. He had a brown box and bag. He usually went out about 9 o'clock in the morning and returned at 6 in the evening. On the morning of the explosion he went out, taking nothing with him. He returned between 12 and 1 o'clock and was in his room two or three minutes. He then left the house and she did not see him again until she was requested to go to the police station that evening. He gave his name as Dalton.

Miss Cannon was recalled, and closely cross-examined by Mr. Quilliam. She got mixed up as to the color of the box or trunk alleged to have mysteriously disappeared from Cunningham's room at her house, and began to waver in her testimony. When questioned as to whether the box taken to 32 Scarborough street was not the only one Cunningham had while lodging at her house, she broke down and refused to swear to the identity of the trunk found in Burton's possession, as being the one she alleged Cunningham had at her place. Miss Cannon was considered one of the Crown's most important witnesses. Her refusal to swear to the identity of the trunk caused the prosecution considerable disappointment.

Emma Harvey, the landlady in Turner's road, testified that Burton engaged a room in her house on January 10th. He brought with him a Gladstone bag. Afterwards he said he had obtained work, and was going to bring a trunk to his room. He did not state where he got the trunk. Detective Roper testified that he saw Burton and Cunningham conversing together on January 10th in High street, Aldgate. Burton denied this, and declared he never saw Cunningham before he entered the dock to-day. Burton said he went to America in September on the Alaska. The brown trunk, brown box and Gladstone bag were produced, the police having traced and secured them all. Their exhibition produced a mild sensation. Colman Bacon, being shown the trunk, swore it was the exact size, color and shape of the one he took to the Prescott street house. Crosbie, the cabman who carried Burton from the railway station to the lodgings in Turner's road, testified that the trunk was the same he took from the Prescott street house for Burton on his journey. Crosbie said he stopped for the trunk about 10 30 at night on January 12th. Burton denied Crosbie's statement, repeating his own former story, and said the trip to Turner's road was made at 7 o'clock in the evening. Crosbie denied this, and said he could prove he was home at that hour. Mrs. Whitteridge, the landlady of a lodging house in Mitre Square, Aldgate, testified that Burton took rooms in her house January 26th, and remained there a week. Afterwards he visited her. She had seen him frequently previous to this and between March and September, 1884. He called upon her in the afternoon of the day of the explosion, on January 24th.

Before asking for a remand for the prisoners Mr. Poland reiterated the statement that the charge against the prisoners was high treason, a capital crime, for firing the Tower of London by the explosion of dynamite. It was, he said, a curious fact that the dock laborer Cunningham and the carpenter Burton had been able to afford frequent trips between America and England, their visits to England coinciding with the times of the explosion at the Carlton Club and elsewhere. The complicity of the prisoners was becoming daily more clear. Dr. Dupre, the Government chemist, has declared that the detonator found by the detectives among Cunningham's effects could not be bought at retail, and would not cause an explosion without dynamite. The prisoners were remanded until next Monday, when testimony will be brought to convict them of complicity in the Gower street explosion.

Cunningham, it is said, has two sisters in the United States. One of these lives in Brooklyn and the other is employed in a hygiene hotel in New York city. He has three other sisters, two of whom are married, and all of whom are living in Ireland, where their mother resides. In New York Cunningham worked for a man named Driscoll. Burton has no relations in America so far as known. It has been discovered that he visited the Parliament buildings last summer, and visited the Tower when he arrived in London last January.

The Dark Spot in the Dark Country Where the Soudanese are Engaged.

That portion of the African Continent known as the Soudan was, till recent years, a blank on the map. More has been learned of it during the past seven years than was known for 2,000 years before. To the ancients it was known as Nigritia, or the Country of the Blacks. Soudan is an Arabic word, with the same meaning.—In its largest sense, it embraces all the great stretch of territory lying between the sixth and fifteenth parallels north latitude, and extending from the Nile province of Egypt on the east to Senegambia on the Atlantic coast. It covers an area of nearly a million and a half square miles, and is supposed to contain from fifty to seventy-five millions of people. So little is yet known of this vast region that the general features of some portions only can be indicated. It is known to be peopled with dense tribes and to possess inexhaustible natural resources. The inhabitants are of negro race, with many Arabs, Moors and Berbers. Several of the tribes are far advanced in the ways of civilized life, and are industrious and hospitable. In many parts of the territory, especially the eastern portion, the Arabs are very influential. Mohammedanism has penetrated among most of the tribes and nations, in many places mixed up with their own fetishism and idolatry. Human sacrifices prevail among some of the western tribes. The climate is everywhere characterized by extreme heat and moisture. The natural products comprise mostly all kinds of tropical fruits, and the chief cultivated crops are maize, wheat, rice, beans, tobacco, cotton, indigo and various vegetables. Domestic animals are extensively raised, including several breeds of horses and cattle, as well as goats, sheep, asses and poultry. The honey made by wild bees forms an important article of native traffic. The external trade is carried on mostly by means of caravans. Khartoum is the connecting link between this vast, densely populated, and almost unexplored country and what is known as the Soudan proper. This latter embraces Nubia, or Upper Egypt, Kordofan, Sennaar, and other provinces on both sides of the Nile. This country is estimated by Sir Samuel Baker to contain about a million of inhabitants. It was conquered by Mehemet Ali in 1821, and has since been ruled by thievish pashas, who robbed the inhabitants and protected the slave traffic. This portion of the country is mostly inhabited by Arab tribes, brave, warlike and fierce, who live by raising flocks and selling slaves. These Arabs are the people who are now making all the trouble in the Soudan. They did not contest the nominal rule of Egypt so long as it did not interfere with the slave trade; but in 1874 Sir Samuel Baker and Gen. Gordon were sent by the then Khedive, Ismail Pasha, to break up the slave trade, and after great efforts succeeded in making it an unprofitable and dangerous business for a time. On their withdrawal from the Nile pashalics of the Soudan the Arabs resumed the slave traffic as before. They are now afraid that in case the English control the Soudan the slave trade will be abolished, and that they must again go back to their ancestral occupation of tending flocks and robbing caravans. The horrors of the slave traffic of the Soudan are enough to appal the minds of civilized people. The French Catholic missionaries in Khartoum estimate that a million of people are captured every year and sold into slavery. These slaves supply the entire Orient. They are captured by chiefs and powerful native rulers, who make periodic raids unexpectedly on some of the weaker tribes, surround the villages and seize the inhabitants. They are mostly brought to Khartoum, which has hitherto been the great slave mart. They are marched in immense gangs and when the weaker among them drop on the way, they are killed by a spear thrust from their Arab drivers. Sometimes as many as 50 per cent. of them are said to die on the long desert marches. It is said that the Mahdi himself has accumulated great wealth by slave barter.

HORRIBLE CRUELTY.

A Number of Young Men Put an Old Man to Frightful Torture.

A Winnipeg despatch says: At Portage la Prairie lives an old cripple known as the "Hon. Dr." McFarlane. He is given to drink. The other day while he was inebriated a number of young brutes amused themselves by lighting matches and placing them on the back of his hands, while the sulphur was burning—by this barbarous torture blistering the helpless man's hands in a most horrible manner, and causing him to groan with pain. But not satisfied with the demoniacal and savage amusement, they placed old McFarlane on the floor and sat upon his maimed leg, with the idea of straightening it. This disgusting performance was so painful that McFarlane yelled with agony. His cries attracted the attention of a person—a woman, it is said—who hastily went to ascertain the cause, and who, seeing what was going on, made the men "desist" their inhuman cruelty. A couple of arrests have been made. A policeman is said to have been a passive observer of the barbarous sport. McFarlane is over 70 years of age, and his leg is terribly bent. The attempt to straighten it resulted in a painful rupture.

Sir Andrew Clark and the Duke of Westminster have at once testified their friendship for old Gladstone, and inaugurated a new custom by sending cheques for one hundred pounds as young Gladstone's wedding present.

Miss Clara Louise Kellogg has cancelled her engagements. On Friday her physician gave a certificate that on account of illness she has been obliged to desist from singing for the present and by his advice has gone to New York.

Some of the English Bishops work hard, Thus, for instance, during 1884 Dr. Thorold, the Bishop of Rochester, received 9,074 letters, preached 107 sermons, delivered 199 addresses, confirmed 11,067 catechumens, attended 79 committee meetings and 37 public meetings, consecrated 8 churches, opened 5 mission buildings, ordained 44 deacons and 44 priests and presided at 6 ruridecanal conferences.

It may be very easy not to bear false witness in court, but not easy to avoid detraction in conversation; very easy not to be drunk, but hard to be sober.

OUR PLANING FACTORY.

We dropped into Grant & Co's steam planing mill and sash and door factory one day this week, and were taken by surprise at the hum of machinery on all sides, together with the number of hands employed in the various departments. The ordinary work of planing, sash and door making and furniture manufacturing is being carried on, while Mr. E. S. Mabee, the energetic agent for patent rack lifters, has a gang manufacturing 500 load lifters for shipment to the front counties. Mr. Mabee expects as soon as this order is complete, to commence another lot, the same number. This gives the factory the appearance of enterprise and activity not usual at this season of the year.

Letter from Southern States.

THE CLIMATE, PRODUCTIONS, AND INDUSTRIES DESCRIBED.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—In commencing this letter I might state that before leaving Markdale I promised to write to a great many, and by your kind permission I will write to all through the widely circulated STANDARD. En route to Cincinnati the scenery is grand and picturesque. Cincinnati, the boss city of Ohio, with a population of 400,000, is situated on the North side of the River Ohio in a pocket among the hills. The hills around it are many times higher. The city has so far out-grown this valley that the surrounding hills are utilized for parks and private residences. These suburbs are reached by various "inclined plans." The street cars are drawn up these by stationery engines at the top, and vice versa The city is pushing out beyond the river on the Kentucky side, taking in the cities of Covington and New Port. Cincinnati is noted for its beautiful private residences. The finest mansion belongs to John Schillitoe, who owns the largest store in the city, size 300 feet square and 6 stories high. He sells nine million dollars worth of goods annually. A suspension and two other bri[illegible] the river here. The furniture fac[illegible] is said to be the largest in America. New Port also boasts of the largest watch case manufactory in America. Some prominent and wealthy relatives of Mr. Quinlin's of Glenelg, reside here. The soil on the way to Louisville is good, free from stone, and gives growth to tobacco, sweet potatoes, corn, wheat, fruit, blue grass. etc. Louisville, with a population of 200,000, is situated in Kentucky on the South bank of the Ohio River, 110 miles below Cincinnati. With the exception of New Orleans it is the largest Southern city. It is packed full of people going to and from the exposition. There is a rich harvest being reaped by the railroads centering here and the City Street Car Co. Cave Hill Cemetery is the pride of the city, being well kept, and contains many magnificent monuments. None are admitted without a ticket from the office. I paid an interesting visit to the glass works here. In one place I saw about 300 persons around furnaces blowing bottles of all dimensions. The operator dips his tube into the melted glass and takes up sufficient to make a bottle: he first blows it to nearly the size wanted then places it inside a mould and blows again forcing it to the required size. It is then cut off, the neck shaped, and boys carry them away to ovens where they are baked to render them more durable. The wages are high, but dearly earned, as it is said to be very unhealthy work. About one-third of the population are German speaking people. Henry Clay, a very prominent lawyer, and grandson of the great Kentuckian Senator, was shot by Andy Wepler in the latters saloon last September. Louisville has four medical colleges. A few miles south of here is the celebrated blue grass regions where the world famed trotting horses are raised. Ordinary farming land sells for $150 per acre. Kentucky is noted for first prize whiskey. Passing southward through Noshville, Tennessee, to Montgomery, Alabama, one surprise after another greets the eye of the traveller as the train speeds on its way. Not unfrequently scenes of desolation meet the eye On enquiring the cause of this from a fellow traveller, who seemed to be an old timer in these parts, answered, "This, my friend, was caused by the war." Here and there are immense forests of pine and spruce. The resin is gathered by climbing the trees and scaring them round from top to bottom. The soil is rock and sandy. As you near Florida, you can detect a vast change in the atmosphere and foliage. All nature seems to be putting on a new dress. Jacksonville is the elysium of the invalids and tourists, the home of the orange and bonanna, the abode of the sweet potato and mosquito. Florida is a new state and is rapidly filling up. It possesses a salubrious climate, receiving breezes from every side. Florida summer heat would force a Canadian to carry a refrigerator around with him to keep himself from spoiling. A good many think that Canada is a place where the mercury remains frozen, and the natives make ice-cream by placing it in the sun. Many Canadians have exchanged their snow and ice for blue skies, sunshine, and a country clad in freshest green. St. John River stands unrivalled in tropical scenery: by its banks grow side by side the magnolia and cypress, the live oak with its festoons of drooping moss, while near the waters edge the scrub palmetto flourish beneath whose shade the alligator sleeps his drowsy sleep. About 30 miles up the St. John we reach warm sulphur springs—called the Springs of Youth. H. B. Stowe resides at Manderin. The weather is warm, the evenings delightfully cool, while the air is filled with sweetest melody by the mocking bird and other birds of sweetest song. Passing nearly due west, we arrived in New Orleans to take in the exposition. With the exception of New Orleans the old slave states appear to have shown a great deficiency of the energy necessary to the creation of large cities or varied manufactures. A word about the exposition. In farming machinery there is everything imaginable with many new and ingenious devices tending towards that perfection which will surely be reached some day if invention continues the rapid strides it is now making. The show of bananas, pine-apples, oranges, lemons, pome-granates, etc., from Florida is grand. The trees have been dug up and brought with the fruit still on them to show the rankness of vegetation. Everything is exhibited in the most novel and interesting way by blending together the rough frontier life and the highest grades of civilization. In a place like this where the best from every clime is arrayed in such rich style the eye becomes accustomed to it and loses much of its interest, and it is only by placing the rough and uncouth side by side with the grand that the over-powering contrast is appreciated. New Orleans, population 350,000, situated on a bend of the Mississippi, 110 miles from its mouth. It is the greatest cotton port in the world. It has also an extensive trade in sugar, molasses, tobacco, etc. Owing to the prevalence of yellow fever during summer months most of the residences of the wealthy are out of the city. Most of the people are burried in vaults, as the land around inundated frequently. Vaults cost from $20 to $500 each. We have June weather here.

Yours faithfully,
P. J. MCCASEY,
Formerly of the Revere House,
Markdale, Ont.

New Orleans, Jan. 26th, 1885.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The entertainment given in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening the 11th inst., by Mde. C. C. Rossiter and Chas. Kelly, under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. society here may be justly termed a grand entertainment. Although the evening was very inclement, the Hall was comfortably filled, altho' not over half the tickets were collected at the door that was sold previously. For nearly three hours the large audience was delighted with the programme. Mde. Rossiter proved herself a thorough musician. Her selections on the concertina and piano brought forth loud applause. As a reciter she is very effective, her voice being pleasant, her manner easy and agreeable. Mr. Kelly with an exceedingly fine bass voice sang exceedingly well and was loudly and frequently enchored. Mr. Kelly has a powerful and musical voice which he manages with ease and grace. His solo, "Alone in the desert," was well rendered and received with loud applause. But the treat of the evening was Mr. Kelly's guitar solo, "Spanish Retreat." The enchore that followed was no ordinary one. Altogether the entertainment was a decided success.

The Literary and Musical entertainment given in the school house of School Section No. 8, on Friday evening last, under the efficient management of Miss Inkster, teacher, was in every respect, both in point of programme and finances, a complete success. The house was crowded full. A number of recitations and dialogues were given by the children of the school. Among those from a distance who took part in the programme were Miss Drummond, Mr. and Miss Inkster who sang some choice selections; Mr. Chant, G. Allister and W. Thompson each recitings; Miss Milne, Miss Jack and Mr. J. Blackburn each a recitation; Rev. Mr. Chadwick an address; also a humorous speech from Mr. Robert Gordon; a duet by Rev. D'Arpent and Miss Drummond caused a good deal of mirth. Mr. Henry Meldrum occupied the chair in a pleasing manner. Miss Inkster is to be congratulated upon her success in her enterprise as the proceeds are to be applied in procuring prizes for her pupils in the school.

Rev. Mr. H. S. Matthews, chairman of the Bracebridge district and who was formerly a pastor on this circuit, preached in the Methodist church here Sabbath morning last. In the evening the Rev. Mr. McDowell held the memorial service of the late deceased Miss Watt.

Meaford Head.

From our own correspondent.

The difficulty in connection with the Sabbath School here has been satisfactorily settled for the present. The annual anniversary of the school will be held in the Wesley church on Tuesday, the 3rd of March, when the usual programme, consisting of dialogues, recitations, readings and speeches will be carried out.

The social held at the residence of Mr. Thomas Boland last Friday was well attended.

Miss Kate Leckie, a former resident of this place, is here on a visit. She has been living in Chicago for some time past.

Miss Minnie Hutchinson has returned home from King where she has been on a visit to her friends.

Mr. J Brodie started on Monday last for Wingham to attend a meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West.

Mr. J. Weber has a large gang of men and teams busy delivering shingle timber at the Eclipse Saw-mill.

Mr. J. McGee's credit sale was not a success, The day was very cold and stormy. Mr. McGee was the largest purchaser himself, which did not add very much to the success of the business.

There was a hop at the residence of Mr. J. Davis last week, better known as the Baswood. There was a full house and lots of fun.

Holland Centre.

From our Reporter.

This place has done more business the present winter than any season in its history H. Foster pays cash for all kinds of grain and gives fair prices thus drawing a constantly increasing trad.

Mr L. Anderson has purchased a lot and is erecting a building for a steam shingle mil. He will remove his machinery from 40 side road and expects to have it running by the 1st April. F. Kempt will have a carpenter shop in the same building.

R. Bailey's pump business is quiet just now, but he expects a fair trade when the weather moderates.

C. Price has done an increased business since removing to his new and commodious premises.

Thos. J. Spears has now a comfortable and spacious blacksmith shop, and doing a fair share of the trade. He also had an addition to his family recently.

W. G. Dunbar is also doing a steady business in carriage making and blacksmithing.

M. Smith of the grist mill has done an increased business this season.

Lilburn Bros. have a large stock of logs in and expect to do a rattling business the coming summer.

Mr. Young the tailor, continues to turn out clothing a genuine fit every time.

Jas. Ireton, shoemaker, is prepared to boot the biggest man in the township. He says the cold weather does not wear the boots fast enough.

Mr. Hargrave, harness maker, has pulled up stakes and left.

F. Kempt lost a good cow last week.

"Queens" Hotel still caters to the wants of the travelling public in a satisfactory manner.

A Williamson is preparing for a big summer's work putting up load lifters.

Miss Blades can make and trim a ladies headress just right.

S. Watson is now very ill.

Large quantities of very excellent wood is being delivered at the station.

D. Trelford, section boss, has his section in good trim; leaving out the heavy drifts.

Mr. Stevenson, latest station agent, is very corteous and also deligent in business. Hope he may stop here, as we have had a great number of changes in the past.

Leo Pereira is about as good a blow as ever, that's about all.

Mr. Hewlston is rushing the washing machine business.

Mr. J. P. Marshall, dentist, visits Markdale regularly on the 1st and 3rd Wednesday in each month. He is a good dentist, and his business here is constantly growing. Rooms at the Markdale House.

D. K. Preston has been appointed assessor for Osprey for the current year. Mr. Preston is a man of sterling worth and undoubted practical common sense and will doubtless make a first class assessor.

A large arrival of good fresh Japan and Young Hyson Teas at J. R. Trimble's. These teas are without exception the finest line ever brought to Markdale. Every tea drinker should call and get samples.

Mr. Jas. Sproule now occupies the premises vacated by Alex. Kay, as a Sewing Machine Store. Mr. Sproule is doing a rushing business in machines and will continue selling on the road as well as at home.

R. J. Sproule's great Annual Clearing Sale commences on Saturday, the 21st inst., when great bargains will be given in all winter and spring goods.

All who intend to purshase Watches, clocks or other goods in my line, will secure discounts of cash from now until the 14th March. That will be a material advantage to every purchaser. W. A. Brown, Jeweller. Markdale.

We regret to learn that Mr. Martain Burton of the firm of Burton Bros, who was nearly killed in Markdale a year ago while loading timber, has recently had his leg broken. This is the fourth time a similar accident has happened him.

Grand Prize.—To the lady making the largest purchases for cash at R. J. Sproule's Clearing Sale, on Saturday, the 21st inst., he will present a lady's beautiful Astracan Fur Cap, sold for $4.50.

June Summers,—Mr. Still, photographer, who J. Hamilton had a week last December, will be here a short time in March. There was a tremendous rush while he was here in December, and all were highly pleased with his work, which was indeed of a high order. Further notice will be given as to the exact date of his arrival.

A fine team.—Mr. Alex. Mercer, Jr., sold his fine team of bays last Saturday, to Mr. R. Gordon of Woodford for $260.00. This team is rising five years and has carried off first prizes wherever shown as a general purpose team. Mr. Mercer intends purchasing again and we hope he may be as successful in future as in the past.

J. R. Trimble begs to advise his numerous customers that he has secured the premises he now occupies for a short time longer in order to clear out his large stock. He has special offerings in all lines of goods to cash purchasers. The goods must and will be sold. Those in want of good cheap goods would do well to call and examine goods and compare prices before purchasing elsewhere.

A Social in aid of the Presbyterian church, will be held at the residence of Mr. Isaac Brown, Glenelg, to morrow evening (Friday). Teams will leave the village about 7 o'clock. Admission 15 cents.

Note:—Some unprincipaled person or persons have raised the rumour that there will be a dance. We beg to assure the public that there will be no such thing.

A youth called at the drug store here last week and wanted a copper's worth of pennies; Gus (the clerk) thought in vain of a thousand and one drugs and chemicals for that name, and at last concluded there must be a mistake somewhere. The thought occurred to him that it might be a penny's worth of coppers (copperas) the lad wanted, and enquired of him, when the boy quickly replied, yes, that's it.

An entertainment was given in the Orange Hall, Berkeley, on Monday evening, under the direction of the Ladies Aid of Christ church, Markdale A very enjoyable programme, consisting of readings, recitations, songs and dialogues, was delivered by members of the church, choir and friends. A good crowd was in attendance. Three loads went from Markdale. The entertainment was closed by a short address from the Rev. J. Ward, who offered very many thanks to the members of the Orange Lodge for the loan of the Hall, and to Mrs. Lund who kindly lent them her organ, after which all sang the national anthum.—Com.

The social held last Friday evening at the residence of Mr. Thos. Boland, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid of the Markdale Methodist Church and in aid of the new church building fund, was largely attended and a very enjoyable time was spent. During the evening a program was prepared. Mr. Thos. Kells appointed as chairman and half an hour profitably spent in this way, the following taking part: Miss Henry, Instrumental music; Miss Jimby, Recitation; Miss Mason, Song; C. W. Rutledge, Recitation; W. A. Brown, Reading; Mrs. Casson, a Reading; J. A. Smith, Reading; and Mr. Marshall, a Song. A very pleasant evening's enjoyment broke up at 11 o'clock. Receipts $15. The society hereby express their gratitude to Mr. and Mrs. Boland for their hospitality.

On Saturday afternoon Captain Abbie presented the Kingston Salvation Army with colors.

Hon. John Costigan is soon to be presented with a testimonial of an elaborate nature by the civil servants of Ottawa, who are of the same creed and nationality as himself.

A verdict of "manslaughter by misadventure" against Secord, who owns a toboggan slide at Ottawa, and who put a plank at the foot thereof which caused the death of the young man Poulin, was given on Saturday.

The senior and junior Conservative Associations of Winnipeg held meetings on Saturday night and resolved to disband to form one association, which shall chose a candidate. The Old Guard have been working hard and are pretty confident that their man, Howell, will be chosen.

John Marwood, an old man who has had charge of the London smallpox hospital for some years, but who was discharged recently for drunkenness, was found dead in his bed at the hospital on Saturday morning. Old age and dissipation are the causes assigned.

The steamship Wilmington, which sailed from San Francisco for Victoria, B. C., eleven days ago with passengers and freight, has not been heard from. She ought to have made the voyage in four days. The steamer Empire, which arrived from San Francisco last night, saw nothing of her, and it is feared she has gone to the bottom.

On Thursday evening the trunk of Mr. Carl Strom, a boarder in the Anglo-American Hotel, Belleville, was broken into and articles to the value of $65 were stolen. The thief sold a fur cap, which he stole, to a merchant in town and showed the other articles, freely offering them for sale. He went on Saturday morning to Cobourg and the facts were made known to the police, who telephoned thither and found that he had been arrested there whilst attempting a job of sneak-thieving in an hotel.

It is expected that the Congo Conference will close its session next Saturday.

Dr. Von Bulow is making a professional tour through Russia.

Yokohama advices state that the gunpowder works near Canton exploded on Dec. 22nd and killed 250 employees.

A private telegram from Lisbon asserts positively that Portugal occupied the Lower Congo on February 1st, and that the natives made no protest.

It is reported that Portugal desisted from hoisting her flag at the mouth of the Congo river owing to the emphatic protest of the commander of a British gunboat.

The Social Democrats have introduced a Bill into the German Reichstag, regulating the hours of labor, and prohibiting the employment of children under 14 years of age.

The French operations in Formosa continue in the direction of the Keelung mines. The European killed on the Chinese side during the recent fighting is believed to have been an Englishman.

A statement was read in the various Catholic churches in Manchester yesterday denouncing dynamiters as violaters of the laws of God and the Church, and as neither true patriots nor true Catholics.

The Queen is in great spirits as she is immersed in preparing the programme for her youngest daughter's wedding, and she enjoys a wedding more than anything else in the world. The Princess Beatrice is to get the largest part of her mamma's private property.

A scare was caused last evening in Berwick-on-Tweed by the discovery in a tavern of a package containing 75 pounds of dynamite, addressed to an unknown person and marked "To be called for." The package has not yet been claimed. The police are searching for the consignee.

The latest proposal for the assistance of the poor is the establishment of a huge monts de piete in the several quarters of London and to check the extortion of pawnbrokers, who become enormously rich with suspicious rapidity. The profits of the shareholders are limited to 5 per cent.

The Conference of the Society of French Cooks suggests the remark that Paris cooking has greatly deteriorated owing to the haste of French restauranteurs to get rich, and the consequent substitution in their kitchens of the oven for the spit, frying pan and gridiron, and of coal for fuel instead of wood.

The Prince of Wales has shown his characteristically keen sense of the necessity for even royalty to cultivate the democracy in this age by ordering his son's first appearance at a boy's refuge in the most squalid part of London. The young Prince was as shy and nervous as any of his juvenile audience.

Her Majesty is expected to leave Osborne in the course of a week or ten days, when she will return to Windsor, where she will remain about a fortnight, after which it is expected she will visit the continent, and be in Cannes on the 28th March, the anniversary of the death of the Duke of Albany.

Sir Edward Malet, K.C.B., the British Ambassador at Berlin and delegate to the Congo Conference, is expected to arrive in London next week. He will be married at the end of the month to Lady Ela Russell, daughter of the Duke of Bedford. The bride-elect is 31 years of age and Sir Edward is approaching 48.

The progress of the Salvation Army enthusiasm was marked this week by the departure from England of a famous university cricketer, a famous university oarsman, and a couple of ex-dragoons for a mission in the interior of China. Meantime there has been one of the periodic epidemics of brutal murders in England.

The Cologne Gazette, alluding to the [illegible] tribute paid by Germany to England for the transportation of transoceanic goods, amounting to thirty-five million dollars annually, says it is well for the Germans to recollect that while they are fostering their own merchant marine, the Empire pays England about half a million marks daily for the business which Germans might do themselves.

The German flag has been hoisted on the river Dolbreck, in the vicinity of the French possessions. Senegambia advices from the West African coast state that Bethany has been placed under German protection. Bethany includes the territory extending twenty miles inland, which had been ceded to Herr Luderitz.

The Ahwoona tribe, natives of the Gold Coast at Dahomey, recently made an attack on the English port and settlement at Quittah. The attack was repulsed by the police after a sharp fight. Three white men were killed. Capt. Campbell was dangerously wounded. Three hundred natives were killed on both sides.

Mr. Thomas Power O'Connor, M.P. for Galway, addressed a large meeting of Irish Nationalists yesterday at Dalkey, near Dublin. He gave a significant one to the feelings of the Parnellites regarding the fall of Khartoum by saying that General Gordon had as little right to be in Khartoum as Earl Spencer has to be in Dublin.

Admiral Courbet telegraphs from Kelung as follows: "Fifteen hundred Chinese attacked our new position on Saturday night. They were repulsed and left 200 dead upon the field, including an European officer and several mandarins. Our loss was one killed and one wounded. The enemy's loss since Jan. 25th has been 700 killed and wounded."

It is stated in Court circles that a marriage has been arranged between Prince Edward, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, who came of age on the 8th ult., and Princess Clementine, the youngest daughter of King Leopold. The princess is a charming little girl, of amiable disposition, whose education has been attended to with great care. As she will not be 15 till the 30th of June next, the marriage will not take place for some time.

The movement for paying members of Parliament has been transferred from Ireland to England, and is making fair progress among English artisans. A writer in one of the magazines proposes that the State should occupy a now vacant plot of ground near the House of Parliament, and erect thereon a series of free flats for necessitous legislators. Several journals ridicule the whole business, and Punch summarizes it by a paraphrase of the epigram of the third Napoleon into "L'Empire c' est le pay."

The Jews in Tangiers have forwarded to the Anglo Jewish Association a mass of evidence concerning the recent outrages against the Jews by the Moors. Demnut, the Governor, it is said, ordered a venerable rabbi, 94 years of age, to receive 980 lashes for some trivial offence. The rabbi is now dying from the effects of this torture. Women, young and old, were ravished, children murdered in their mothers' arms. The agents sent by the Sultan to inquire into the atrocities accepted bribes, and reported falsely. The Anglo-Jewish Association is urged to secure the intercession of Granville.

Another account of the fatal bayonetting at Woolwich Arsenal says a private soldier on guard duty last night saw a man advancing toward his post, and commanded him to halt and give the counter-sign. The stranger neither halted nor replied, but attempted to walk past the guard line. The sentinel thereupon plunged his bayonet into the man's body, killing him instantly. The account of the occurrence reached London to-day, and was exaggerated into a sensational report that dynamiters had been at work. An investigation shows the man killed was a soldier and a comrade of the sentinel whom he tried to annoy by a silly practical joke.

An organization, to be known as the National Independent Association, has been formed in London. Its objects include the upholding of the privileges of the Throne. The Sovereign, however, to live in England, Ireland and Scotland alternately; the promotion of national or home trading before resorting to the formation of foreign alliances; free trade in articles of food only; an increase of the British fleet in order to afford better protection to commerce, and an effort to promote an alliance with the United States, having for its sole object the repulsion of any attempt by a foreign foe to invade any English-speaking country. The latter clause has attracted a great deal of attention, and the idea of such an alliance or confederation between the English-speaking people of the world evidently pleases the popular fancy in London.

The total cost of the Greely relief expedition was $759,000.

Estelle Wheeler began a suit for divorce some time ago against Jas. H. Wheeler, of Rome, N.Y., charging that he had violated the marriage vow. Wheeler admitted infidelity, but declared Estelle had condoned the offence. The latter has filed an affidavit denying the allegation and making additional charges against Wheeler.

The financial statement of the New Orleans Exposition submitted to President Arthur shows a deficiency of $319,000. Congress is asked for further assistance to carry the exposition through. Work has been suspended on unfinished buildings, and it is understood the awards in some departments remain unpaid owing to financial embarrassment. The demand for space for exhibits continues. All available room is now occupied.

Frank Abner, 15 years old, has been jailed, charged with murdering his grandmother, Mrs. Ross, near Rock Creek, Ill. On Monday evening he went to the woods to play with an older boy, to whom he expressed apprehension that his grandmother would whip him for neglecting his work. "If she says anything to you knock her on the head," said his companion. Mrs. Ross administered a reprimand, but did not whip the truant, who went to bed early and with muttered threats. At midnight he got up and buried an axe in his grandmother's brains, killing her instantly.

At a joint meeting of Committees on Transportation representing the Receivers and Shipping Association and Chicago Board of Trade at Chicago yesterday, R. H. Fleming called attention to the exorbitant rates charged for transferring [illegible] at Buffalo compared with a number of Canadian ports. The question was lengthily discussed, and Fleming was delegated to inquire into the Bill on the subject pending in the New York Legislature, with a view to memorializing that body to secure a reduction.

During a riot at Eureka, Cal., on Saturday night between Chinese, a stray bullet killed David Kendall, a member of the City Council, and another severely wounded a boy. The news created such intense excitement that a mass meeting was called, to which over a thousand citizens responded. Resolutions of indignation were adopted, and a committee was appointed to notify the Chinese that they must all leave the city. Citizens visited each Chinese house and compelled them to pack up their effects, then marched them to a warehouse, where they imprisoned them awaiting the departure of a steamer for San Francisco. At a second mass meeting, attended by 1 000 yesterday, a standing committee was appointed and empowered to prevent any Chinese locating there in future.

THE CANADIAN MILITIA.

Annual Report of the Minister—Important Recommendations of the Major-General.

The report of the Minister of Militia and Defence was laid on the table of the Commons yesterday. The report of the Deputy Minister shows that the total rounds of ammunition packed and ready for issue at the Government cartridge factory at Quebec is 1,816,570. The condemned ammunition from the Imperial stores was converted into blank ammunition, 300,000 rounds. The number of pensions paid to veterans of the war of 1812-15 was for 1884, 464. The detail of expenditure in the Department for 1884 was $989 498 out of an available $1,051,583. The expenditure for militia pensions was $27,268, and the number of pensioners on the list was 684, there being 595 of these veterans of 1812-15, 15 new militia pensioners, 5 Lower Canada militia pensioners and 56 Upper Canada militia pensioners. Major-General Middleton in his report upon the state of the militia recommends that the strength of the force be reduced, so as to enable every battery of artillery, regiment of cavalry and battalion of infantry, both rural and city, to be called out for drill every year, and that the period of drill be extended from twelve to sixteen days to rural if not for city corps also. The present Kilmarnock cap, he thinks, should be abolished, and a helmet substituted, because almost the whole of the militia drill is carried on during hot weather, and the cap is utterly unsuited for heat. The question of improved arms and accoutrements should, General Middleton suggests, be reconsidered, and he says that, from what he has seen of the Dominion Militia, he has formed a high opinion of the force. Two additional infantry schools are said to be urgently required, one at Winnipeg, and one at London, Ont.

A Curiosity of Child-Naming in Japan.

Old-fashioned people in many districts in Japan, to whose families death has made frequent visits, still resort, in their anxiety to prolong the lives of their children to the custom of bestowing upon their offspring names ordinarily given to infants of the opposite sex. Probably the superstition is more widely prevalent than foreigners would suppose, but it is only when some incident or story in connection with its observance is reported in the vernacular papers that the majority become aware of the existence of the old custom. A Tokio paper tells a story in point. Some time ago a man named Kano, living at Kameicho, Nibonbashi, Tokio, received the intimation from the authorities that his eldest son Bunnosuke—a name always applied to males—having attained military age, steps should at once be taken with a view to the young man undergoing medical examination prior to actual enlistment. Kano lost no time in going to the ward office and explaining that Bunnosuke was his daughter though registered as a male since 1872, in which year the census system was altered. The authorities, however, in whose mind frequent and more or less ingenious schemes to evade conscription had given rise to a condition of pure skepticism on this point, did not scruple to order an examination to be conducted at Kano's house. The result, of course, proved the statement made by the father, who, on being questioned, said that, having lost two daughters both about one year old, he had been driven to this expedient to keep the third alive. It may be presumed that its success, as evinced in his daughter's attainment of "military age," will tend, at any rate among his neighbors, to the revival of a custom, which, whatever its inconveniences, is not without suggestive interest. Greater men than Kano have laid schemes, far deeper than his simple artifice, to circumvent the grim visitor, and for the most part they have failed.—Japan Mail.

A Scotch Joke.

One evening, in the principal gold-mining camp in the Transvaal, nine or ten years ago, a man, partially intoxicated and supposed to be actuated by jealousy, attempted suicide. He first took morphia; but this not proving strong enough, he tried to hang himself. He was prevented and handed over to the sheriff, to be kept in safe custody for the night, and to be tried before the acting gold commissioner (a shrewd and solemn Scot) the next morning. As there was no law to have prevented him from committing suicide if he thought fit, but it being desirable to punish him in some way, it was decided to bring a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct against him. To this the prisoner pleaded guilty, whereupon the acting gold commissioner, without a ghost of a smile, delivered the following extraordinary judgment: "Mr. ——, I shall fine ye twa punds for your drunkenness; but I'll give ye to understand that I ken vera weel what ye attempted to dae, and, had ye succeeded in your attempt, your punishment would have been vera much more severe than it is!"—London Spectator.

—The word knickerbocker, which Washington Irving took in vain, means marble-baker. Marbles for the boys to play with were formerly baked out of clay. A gingerbread baker was called koekebakker. Snei-dec, which we hear so often pronounced, was the word for Mr. Taylor, and Roosebrume, which appears to be a true Dutch name, meant a rose crown or garland.

[illegible] ABOUT.

Like so many wars that have preceded it, the origin of the present campaign is to be found in a pounds, shilling and pence difficulty. It dates from the reign of Ismail Pasha, who was appointed ruler of Egypt by the Turkish Government in 1863, and who accumulated a fortune from the exportation of cotton during the American civil war. Because of his extravagant habits, he soon became a favorite with the Turkish officials, and they in turn influenced the Sultan to give him almost regal power. It was his desire to Europeanize Egypt and make Cairo the Paris of the East. With this object in view, he borrowed many millions of money, undertaking to pay extravagant rates of interest therefor. The money was not expended for national purposes, but was devoted to Oriental display, to erecting costly palaces throughout the country, to bribing Turkish officials and to stocking harems. To pay the interest, the fellahs, or native farmers, were systematically robbed, the tax collector appearing two or three times every year, or whenever the unfortunate natives had anything to seize. If any one raised objections to this wholesale system of Government plunder, he was promptly seized and treated to a sound flogging with the bastinado. By and by, the Khedive could borrow no money, and the fellahs were rendered so poor that they could no longer pay taxes. Then the British and French Governments—the Conservatives being in power in Britain—deposed Ismail and made his son, the present nominal ruler, Khedive. The main object in view was to secure payment of interest on the bonded debt, the major portion of the bonds being held by British and French capitalists. This was accomplished by establishing the celebrated joint or dual control of Egyptian finances. Sir Rivers Wilson, the British representative, dismissed all the native Egyptian officials and put in their places English officials at much higher salaries. Before long, Arabi Pasha was successful in forming a "national party," intended as a protest against the new rule, and as he was an officer in the army and had no difficulty in obtaining followers there, a military rising took place in Cairo on Feb. 1, 1881. With the subsequent events in the Egyptian war our readers are familiar. France refused to aid Great Britain in putting down the revolt. Britain, afraid of the Suez Canal, undertook the task, defeated a band of Arabs, and garrisoned the principal towns, but only until such time as a strong Government could be set up in the unfortunate land. That time cannot have arrived yet, for the British troops are still in Egypt.

It was not till July, 1881, that the False Prophet raised his standard of revolt in the Soudan—a territory extending 1,650 miles from north to south and 1,200 miles from east to west. This district had been gradually annexed by Egypt since 1821, but its hundred and more tribes had never been entirely subjugated by the invaders. The great trade of the Arabs has always been slave-stealing and selling. They tolerated Egyptian rule so long as it did not interfere with their penchant for harrying at will their negro neighbors in the southern latitudes; but when Sir Samuel Baker, acting on behalf of the Egyptian Government, led an expedition into the district from which the slave supplies were obtained, and the conquest of the equatorial provinces was accomplished, the feeling of resentment was engendered. In 1874, Col. Gordon—now the famous General Gordon—appeared on the scene, was appointed Governor-General of the vast dependency, Darfur being added to the conquered territory in the following year. Until 1880, Gordon held this position, and it must be said with credit to himself. He aimed to put down the infamous slave trade, and in this object he had the sympathy of both the Khedive and the British Government, for on the British had hitherto devolved the task of aiming a blow at the trade when carried on by means of dhows on the Red Sea. In 1880 Gordon Pasha was withdrawn, owing to the era of economy which had been inaugurated at Cairo, and the spirit of revolt against Egyptian interference became intense. At last, as we have seen, Ahmed Mohammed, the Mahdi, appeared during the holy month of Ramadan, and presented himself as sent by Heaven to secure not only the political but also the spiritual salvation of the natives. He gathered around him all the discontented elements of those vast regions, who acclaimed in him a lineal descendant of the Prophet—a prophet himself destined to regenerate all Islam, and restore to the true believers the spoils of which Christendom and its allies were seeking to deprive them. At first, the Mahdi was defeated by the Egyptian troops in Senaar, but before many months had elapsed (in the spring of 1882) his followers had annihilated the army of Youssef Pasha, 8,000 strong, only 27 escaping to tell the tale. Victory after victory followed, and the cause of the Mahdi was triumphant. The army of Hicks Pasha was cut to pieces, El Obeid garrison surrendered, and it was seen that the revolt against the Egyptians was far more formidable than at first suspected.

In December, 1883, Sir Evelyn Baring proposed that a British officer should be sent to the Soudan to superintend the withdrawal of the Egyptians, and the Government of Egypt joined in the request. Gordon was appointed Governor-General of the Soudan and he was directed by the Khedive to withdraw all the civil and military authorities and as many of the inhabitants as wished to return to Egypt. At this time there were in the Soudan 40,000 Egyptians; and as Great Britain had undertaken, first to control the financial affairs of Egypt and subsequently to restore order within her borders, the Government deemed it a duty to secure the safety of these people. General Gordon, accompanied only by his aide, rode on a camel across the desert to Abu Hamned, from which place he communicated to the Government his intention of using the threat of an invasion of Turkish troops to induce the Soudanese to submit to his plans. On his arrival at Khartoum, Gordon found this threat of no effect. His next move was a proposal to make Zubehr Pasha Governor-General of the Soudan; but as that individual had been a great slave dealer, and still favored the traffic, the British Government would not ratify the appointment. General Gordon [illegible] the following proclamation:

Proclamation—To all the inhabitants: Your tranquillity is the object of our hope. And as I know that you are sorrowful on account of the slavery which existed among you, and the stringent orders on the part of the Government for the abolition of it and the punishment of those who deal in them (the slaves), and the assurances [illegible] the Government for its abolition, seizing upon and punishing those concerned in the trade; the punishment of those who trade in slaves, according to the Imperial decrees and the firmans forwarded to you—all this is known to you. But henceforward no one will interfere with you in the matter, but every one for himself may take a man into his service henceforth. No one will interfere with him, and he can do as he pleases in the matter, without interference on the part of anybody; and we have accordingly given this order. My compassion for you.

GORDON PASHA.

Gordon also removed to the market place and burned all the records of unpaid taxes and the whips and rods which had maintained Egyptian supremacy. His plan was now to reinstate the heirs of the petty Sultans who held authority prior to the conquest, leaving them to agree as to the form of a central Government. To the Mahdi he offered the Emirate of Kordofan, but the bribe was refused by the Prophet. Whether because of his previous prestige, or in consequence of his possessing a large sum of money for distribution among those who came over to him, the people of Khartoum received Gordon with manifestations of great joy; but among the outside population the influence of the False Prophet grew and his forces were added to daily. Gordon never had much faith in the Egyptian soldiery, and their conduct while making sorties from the city after it was partially invested by the forces of the Prophet must have thoroughly convinced him of their cowardice. If his force of 7,000 men had been composed of European soldiers, it would doubtless have cut its way through the desert. Gordon could have ridden back to the coast as he came, if he had chosen, but he preferred to stay by the Egyptians, and it was to rescue him and them that Gen. Wolseley's expedition was despatched.

Shop Driving.

There are men who get position by audacity, and not by merit. Such men are sometimes found in the workshop in the position of foremen or bosses, and they make trouble for men and expense for proprietors. Such a foreman appears, always, as though in a great hurry; gives short replies to questions, as though time and words were exceedingly valuable with him; rushes about the shop as though pursued by a constable with an uncollected debt against him; and turns from a possible customer at an important point in conversation to attend to a trifle that would more appropriately belong to a subordinate. Among the workmen such foremen are troublous; they make quiet workers nervous, unfinished workmen apprehensive, and old stagers angry. They upset the plans of careful, systematic workmen, and induce the "green hand" to imagine that pretense of doing is as good as done. Such a foreman does other mischief; he is not content with infecting others with his superficial activity; he injures the self respect of the workman and impairs his usefulness. With the useless drive that comes with the foreman when he goes the rounds of the shop comes the expectation of relaxation when he goes, and this letting down of workmanlike energy is a natural rebound from the pressure of a strain that is repulsive. This foreman never commends; he criticises and questions. "What! these studs not yet turned? What's the trouble?" "Be sure and get this fit right; don't you know how to do this job?" Such greetings do not put much force into a workman's muscles, nor increase his desire to excel. These men are north winds or western gales with a notification to all to lie low. They impose for a while even on the workmen, but the workmen find them out sooner than do the shop proprietors.

There Was No Kitchen Line.

She was crazy about palmistry. She had bought half a dozen books and studied the lines and the mounts and the islands and the crosses and the stars, and she had read her Henry's fortune time and again. So he undertook to read her hand one night, with her help.

"This is my heart line, dear," she said, as she traced with her finger across the palm.

"Yes; your heart line."

"You see how well defined and how strong it is?"

"Yes, beloved, but it is not quite straight, and this book says that those little lines running out of it are evidences of previous affections."

"Oh, but this great big break is you."

"Then, there's my head line."

"Yes, darling. If your heart were as level as your head—I mean in palmistry—I would not be so jealous."

"But you mustn't read it like that. What are you looking for?"

He was anxiously scanning the book and the hand.

"Dearest, I love you. You have magnificent life line and a splendid heart line and a level head line, but——"

"Well?"

"I am poor, and if you could only show me the kitchen line the future would be one unbroken dream of happiness."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Gas-Pipes Made from Paper.

A novel use of paper has been found in the manufacture of gas-pipes. It is constructed as follows: An endless strip of hemp paper, one width of which equals the length of the tube, is passed through a bath of melted asphalt, and then rolled tightly and smoothly on a core to give the required diameter. When the number of layers rolled is sufficient to afford the desired thickness, the tube is strongly compressed, the outside sprinkled with fine sand, and the whole cooled in water. When cold, the core is drawn out and the inside served with a water-proofing composition. In addition to being absolutely tight and smooth, and much cheaper than iron, these pipes are of great strength, for when the sides have scarcely three-fifths of an inch thick, they will stand a pressure of more than fifteen atmospheres. If buried underground they will not be broken by settlement, nor when violently shaken or jarred. The material being a bad conductor of heat, the pipes do not readily freeze.

Australia has a cave larger than the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky. It is called the Glenvion.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Hon. A. M. Ross, in answer to Mr. Ermatinger, said that the continuance or discontinuance of the Provincial Exhibition was a matter of great interest to the agricultural community. The matter was under consideration of the Government, and their decision would be announced when the estimates were brought down.

Hon. G. W. Ross, in reply to Mr. Brereton, said it would be announced when he brought down his High School Bill next Monday or Tuesday, if it was his intention to introduce legislation, making it obligatory on the part of County Councils to aid High Schools and Collegiate Institutions in towns separate from counties for municipal purposes.

Hon. O. Mowat said, in reply to Mr. Meredith, that the Government had not yet decided what course they should take with respect to the East Simcoe constituency representative. Their decision will be made known in a few days.

Mr. Wood moved for a return showing in detail the expenditures made in the township of Hungerford, by the authority of the Provincial Board of Health and the Local Board of Health during the late smallpox epidemic that prevailed in that township, with the number of cases and deaths, and the length of time the epidemic prevailed. He thought many distressing incidents had occurred, and if any one was to blame it ought to be found out.

Hon. A. M. Ross—I have asked Dr. Bryce to make a special report upon the epidemic. That report is prepared and, I believe, now in the printer's hands, and had the motion been delayed a day or two the members would have had it in their hands and had more means of coming to an intelligent conclusion. From the report of the Secretary to the Provincial Board of Health, I find that the expense has been $1,500 to the Province, and from the report received by the Secretary to the Local Board, I learn that the expense to the county will be $10,000. The number of cases of smallpox dealt with is 200, and the deaths from that disease forty-five. The House will thus see that the epidemic was one of great magnitude. While prompt and energetic measures were taken by the local Boards of Health, yet in townships such as Hungerford, which are not so well situated for efficient organization as the older settled townships, it was necessary to extend the aid of the Province to the district. It was found that fourteen cases had occurred before the matter was brought to the attention of the Provincial Board. The local medical men refused to attend to the cases, as they knew they would lose their own practice. One of the medical men did, however, consent to attend to the cases, and he was appointed medical officer to the local Board of Health; and as to the amount of his bill I am not able to state, but I am privately informed that it was a very large one. After the disease had been stayed the houses, clothing and goods of the persons in the district had to be fumigated, and some of the latter were destroyed. In Illinois an outbreak of smallpox had taken place, and though it was of less magnitude than ours it cost more than double to suppress the disease.

Mr. Morris considered it unfair that a township such as Hungerford should bear such a large portion of the expense as $10,000. He wished the House to understand that if such prompt measures had not been taken for the suppression of the outbreak, it would have assumed the magnitude of Provincial proportions. He instanced the case of an outbreak near Halifax, and an extensive outbreak near Manitoba. In the latter place the outbreak was one of terrible proportions, and it had been stamped out by isolation, vaccination and re-vaccination.

Mr. Brereton suggested that the hon. the Provincial Treasurer should include in his returns the ages of the patients treated, the number vaccinated, and the number not vaccinated.

Mr. Ferris said he would like the returns to include the other townships affected by smallpox as well as Hungerford.

Mr. Wood said he had no objection.

Mr. Puelps asked that the return should include all municipalities in the Province which had been afflicted by the smallpox scourge. The township of Flos had been afflicted by it, but fortunately the Council of that municipality had formed themselves into a Board of Health according to statute, not knowing that such a disease would occur. He stated the steps which had been taken to stamp out the disease.

Mr. Hudson said the epidemic had spread to a certain extent before any steps were taken to stop its progress. In the first place he understood the physicians attending the families which were taken down pronounced the disease chicken-pox, and several families were taken down before the truth was discovered. It broke out first in a very poor neighborhood. Through the absence of cleanliness it spread more rapidly than would otherwise have been the case, and had covered a considerable district before the Provincial Board of Health got the matter into their hands. The Secretary, when informed, at once went down to the township, and the Reeve of that township was appointed Chairman of the Local Board of Health, after which the disease was almost entirely stamped out. The people were excited at that time about the disease, but now they were as much excited about the bills which had been brought in by the physicians. He understood that the Medical Officer of the Local Board of Health had applied to the Provincial Board to fix his fee, which he understood was $4,000. He must say he thought this charge very extravagant. The township was very poor. Then there was a bill from Patrick Murphy, who buried the dead, which he regarded as high. The only reasonable bill he saw was that of Dr. Canniff, amounting to $800. This man had allowed a new building, which he had erected for a store and residence at Stoco, to be used for a hospital, and he would have to go to considerable expense in fixing it up again, in order to make it habitable.

Mr. Fraser proposed an alteration of the motion to cover all the information wanted in the return, which was carried.

Mr. Carnegie asked that his motion be amended so as to read as follows: For a return showing the several lots in the township of Belmont, Methuen, Chandos, Anstruther, Galway and Cavendish, in the county of Peterborough, and of the townships of Cardiff, Monmouth, Sandwich, Lutterworth and Glamorgan, in the provincial county of Haliburton, which have been sold, located, leased or applied for, otherwise than under the Free Grant and Homestead Act, since the first day of January, 1883; also, the dates of said sales, the persons to whom sold, the prices paid and terms of payments; also, the dates of the several applications for the purchase, location and terms of location of said lots.

Hon. T. B. Pardee—I desire the hon. gentleman and the House to know that the return will still involve a great amount of labor to make out, but the Government does not intend to oppose it after the insinuations which have been made that there is something to cover up. The amendment will make some little difference, and it will be made out at the earliest possible moment, but the House need not be surprised if the extensive nature of the return necessitates a little delay. The returns must be made out by the regular clerks of the department, and the session of the House is their busiest season.

Hon. A. S. Hardy, in reply to Mr. Monk, intimated that he had directed that a list of the returns ordered last session, and not yet brought down, be prepared, and the returns themselves would be brought down as soon as possible.

Hon. A. S. Hardy presented to the House the report of the Minister of Education for 1884 and the report of the births, deaths and marriages for 1883.

Hon. G. W. Ross introduced a Bill to amend the Public Schools Act. In doing so, he departed from the usual procedure by entering upon an explanation of the changes proposed. The arrangements which were proposed by the consolidated law, were that the rural schools and the law respecting them should be treated under one distinct head; secondly, that the same treatment should be adopted with regard to unorganized townships, and thirdly, cities, towns and incorporated villages should be dealt with. Having dealt with the schools under these various heads, then he proposed to arrange the educating books. Then they would have legislation for the support of the schools. Next they would deal with the teachers, the different officers administering the law, and lastly with the pains and penalties. The first amendment was with regard to the school age. Looking at different clauses of the present law they seemed to vary, the school age ranging from 5 to 16 years in one and from 5 to 21 in another. He proposed to establish definitely that the school age should be from 5 years to 21. The next amendment which he thought necessary was in regard to the qualification of a ratepayer to constitute him a voter or a school trustee. Under the Municipal Act it was necessary that a voter should be a subject of Her Majesty, or that he should have undergone the process of naturalization. No such arrangement existed with regard to the election of school trustees, and he was just simply following the analogy in that matter which existed with regard to the choice of other municipal officers. Secondly, he was simplifying the provisions necessary for the adequate accommodation of school children which it was necessary to provide. There were eighty-eight thousand who did not attend each year. The machinery of the law as it now stood was not sufficiently comprehensive to enable the truant officer to get at those who were absent from school contrary to its provisions. The assessor, however, in addition to reporting the number in the municipality between the ages of 7 and 13 would be required to report their names, so that this list could be compared with the school register, and at once a complete chain of evidence would be established against those who had not observed the law in the matter of attending school. Thus all the machinery furnished could be enforced to remedy the evils complained of. Another proposal of his Bill was to dispense entirely with school treasurers specially appointed for that purpose in city, town, village and township boards, and to appoint the treasurer of the corporation to act as such with the same responsibilities and duties as were laid upon him as treasurer of the municipality. A good deal of irritation had arisen from difficulties in the law relating to the amount due a teacher for his services. The present law required that the school trustees should pay a teacher for the holidays that immediately followed the term of his engagement. Suppose a teacher taught up to the vacation in July, the holidays were somewhat long, and he was entitled to be paid to the end of them. That system had been somewhat irritating, and in fact many complaints were made and many expedients resorted to by School Boards to get rid of the responsibility of paying a teacher for services they thought he had not rendered. He proposed that a teacher should be paid for the holidays in proportion to the time during which he had taught to the whole number of teaching days in the year. There were a number of teachers holding old first-class certificates which were limited to the county in which they were granted. He proposed to provide that these should be valid in any county of the Province of Ontario. Those who held them were all men of considerable experience, and no certificate of this character had been granted since 1871. He also proposed that where a County Council deemed it in the interest of the schools it might add to the board of examiners men competent to examine where French or German were exclusively taught, in order to test the competency of the teachers. A good deal of irritation arose over the fees required to be paid by County Councils to examiners. This Bill provided that they should be paid the same amount as members of the County Council. He proposed another change in this connection which would do away with considerable trouble by providing that councils pay the examiners so much per candidate. Examiners also complain that County Councils were not sufficiently liberal to pay their travelling expenses, in addition to those required by law. He was making a provision whereby they would be paid liberally, their expenses to be determined by the County Council. Coming to the question of superannuation, he was going to propose a scheme by which that system might hereafter be entirely abolished. First, no teacher would be required to pay into the Superannuation Fund. Secondly, those who were contributing to this fund, and who wish to continue, would be allowed to do so, the fee being increased from $4 to a voluntary sum of $6. A certain portion of the teachers under 55 and 40 years of age's rate were opposed to the superannuation system entirely. Those over that age were anxious that it should be retained. If they wished to retain it themselves by a voluntary contribution they might do so. With regard to those who ceased to contribute if they left the profession they would be allowed to withdraw their contribution as at present. If they did not it would be placed to their credit, and at any time thereafter would be allowed to draw for the years during which they contributed. By this means he expected they would be relieved by and by of this charge, and he did not say so because he believed the people should be loth to deal liberally with the teachers, for on the contrary he thought they were deserving of the utmost sympathy and gratitude. The only argument of a substantial character urged against the repeal of the law in regard to superannuation was the simple one that it was an incentive to teachers to remain in the profession. Perhaps it was, yet he noticed that 1,609 teachers left the profession in the past four years, or at the rate of over 400 per annum. They had lost the services of some of their very best men.

An hon. member—Does this number include female teachers?

Hon. G. W. Ross said he could not ascertain the number of female teachers who had left. They had retired for other reasons perhaps. The superannuation system did not appear to retain the teachers, and the argument he had mentioned against doing away with it did not need to restrain the House one moment in the action he proposed to take. The law required each child between 7 and 13 years of age to attend school 55 days in the half year. As he stated a moment ago there were 88,000 children in the Province not fulfilling the law in that respect. In the case of children attending factories he proposed that after passing a certain examination they should be exempt from attending school half the time, namely, the examination required for a pupil for promotion from the third to the fourth book. At this stage of their educational career children were generally from 11 to 12 years of age, and he proposed that such of them as worked in factories should be exempt from attending school at least a portion of the time. What he wanted to provide for was not simply attendance at school, but the education of the pupil. Although the school age was from 5 to 21, the compulsory clauses only affected those between the ages of 7 and 13. Another provision which he proposed of a more radical character was for the election of school trustees on the same day as the election of municipal councils. It would be optional with the trustees by a resolution passed in October to order that the election should be held on the same day as that for members of the Council. It would be by ballot, and so far as the Municipal Act was capable of application for the prevention of corrupt practices, etc., it should apply to the election of school trustees. This did not apply to the Separate schools. He proposed also to disqualify every salaried officer of a municipality from being either a candidate or eligible for election as a school trustee. He thought these provisions would simplify the law and meet a popular demand, excite a greater interest in educational matters, and cause perhaps a more vigorous School Board. He might say he did not propose to move the second reading of the Bill for two or three weeks, in order that members may have ample opportunity to consider it and that the subject might receive that public discussion outside of the House which he thought was desirable in school legislation. He thought it was desirable that they should get this session a measure as nearly perfect as possible in order that, for at least five or six years to come, no other changes would be made in the school laws.

Mr. Meredith—I apprehend that he does not propose any corresponding changes in respect to the election of Separate School Trustees.

Hon. G. W. Ross—I do not, and it is optional all around.

Hon. C. F. Fraser said the House will remember that when permission was given by the House for the erection of new Parliament Buildings it was qualified with the very important fact that no more than $500,000 should be spent on them. The House will also remember that some sessions ago a report was made which stated that in the opinion of the Executive Council they could not be erected for the sum named in a style fitting for the Province and the needs of the Government, and therefore no constitutional responsibility rests with the Executive Council for not taking action especially when it is remembered that it was stated that no steps would be taken without communicating with the House.

Mr. Morris moved that it is expedient and desirable that any city, erected as such under the Municipal Act, which shall petition therefor in due form, shall be entitled to be granted by the Legislature, if, on due consideration of the circumstances thereof, it shall see fit, a special Act of Incorporation in the regulation and government of its special interests. He argued that it would be a great convenience to Toronto, Hamilton, London, Ottawa, etc., if they could have special charters as Halifax and Quebec had. He went into details showing the vast expenditures of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Mowat—My hon. friend suggests that the proposal contained in the motion is one of great importance, but I see that it is of no importance of all, and that is very easy to demonstrate. My hon. friend has not suggested one single advantage to be gained by the motion he has proposed. The position of the Government is this, that we are in favor of general laws, so far as we can have general laws. We have always acted upon this, and though it was a deal opposed at first it is one that the people of the country now recognize the great advantage of.

Mr. Balfour moved for a return of copies of all reports made to the Government by directors of joint stock road companies for the year 1884, under section 146, cap. 152, of the revised statutes, as amended by s. s. 6 and 7, cap. 24, 47 Vic. He stated that Mr. Lee had consented to incorporate in the motion such portions of his motion as were not carried by the notice he was making. He thought there was a general desire to abolish toll roads. It was expected that towns and cities would abolish market fees where the tolls were taken off the roads, but this was not the case. At the present time there were 23 counties having toll roads, 74 companies and 675 miles. He hoped the motion would pass, and those companies not making returns should be compelled to do so.—Carried.

Hon. A. S. Hardy presented the report of the Commissioner of Public Works.

The House then pursued [illegible]

Among the petitions presented were [illegible]

Mr. Badgerow—From the Council of Dundas to amend the Act so as to make elections of school trustees by ballot.

Mr. Hagar—From the County Council of Prescott and Russell, for a simplification of the Land Laws and the introduction of the Torrens system of land transfer.

Hon. C. F. Fraser offered a motion in effect ordering that the report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the conspiracy be printed with all possible despatch, which was carried.

Hon. G. W. Ross, in reply to Mr. Mulholland, said: No decision has yet been arrived at by the Government as to the propriety of introducing legislation during this session of the Legislature on the subject of University Federation. Until after that decision has been arrived at it would be premature to state what the expense will be.

Hon. O. Mowat, in reply to Mr. Meredith, said: As far as I am concerned there is but one other place concerning which notice has been given for the formation of a new county, and, that is the one in which Mount Forest is interested. We don't think it desirable to pass legislation for that during the present session.

Mr. Mowat said the report of the Special Committee appointed to strike the Standing Committees of the House had been laid over in consequence of Mr. Drury's name being mentioned. It was very necessary that the committee should be organized at once, and he therefore suggested that the committees should be printed without Mr. Drury's name. He proposed this without prejudice to Mr. Drury or his constituency, and retained the right to choose a substitute.

Mr. Morris saw no objection to this.

The motion was carried.

For all female weaknesses it is a certain cure. All druggists.

Bob Burdette: A baobab tree will live 5,000 years if it has a chance. However, you need not plant one just for the sake of the experiment, because in this country, long before the baobab tree was half that old, it would be cut down to make way for a railroad, and you'd be just heartbroken with disappointment.

Sure Pop.

Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain cure, is sure pop every time. No need to spend a large sum to get prompt relief from every kind of pain, for 10 cents will purchase a trial bottle. Go to any drug store for it. Large bottles only 25 cents, at all druggists. Nerviline the pain king, cures cramps, headache, neuralgia. An aching tooth, filled with batting saturated with Nerviline, will cease aching within five minutes. Try Nerviline for all kinds of pain. Ten and 25 cents a bottle.

On the Mexican railroads mesquite is used for fuel. This shrub abounds on all the hillsides and is of a very tough fibre. A Mexican railway manager reports that his purchasing agent secured 300 wooden saints for fuel, which he bought at 50 cents apiece from the natives, who stole them from the churches.

——That wonderful catholicon known as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given the lady a world-wide reputation for doing good. It is a living spring of health and strength.

The most prosperous cities of the South are said to be Baltimore, Louisville, Nashville and Atlanta; the least enterprising are Charleston, Savannah and Augusta. "The reason of this difference is found in the fact," says a Southern planter, "that while our more Northern cities have been reinvigorated by the introduction of new blood from the business pulses of the North and West, the slow methods of ante-bellum days still prevail in the extreme South.

Young and middle-aged men suffering from nervous debility, premature old age, loss of memory, and kindred symptoms, should send three letter stamps for large illustrated treatise suggesting sure means of cure. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

The London Standard recently wound up an article on tails, by stating that a tail is by no means an unornamental superfluity. Among savage tribes this fact is recognized by the men attaching those of wild animals to their dress on various occasions, and the train of a fashionable lady of a great officer of State like the Lord Chancellor, and of a debutante at court may be referred to as a similar inordinate longing after what nature has omitted to supply.

Mrs. Oliphant has written forty-three novels; Mrs. Southworth sixty-five.

Prince Bismarck is again ill. He has been ordered to leave Berlin for rest.

A Bargain in Corner Lots is what most men desire, but to keep from filling a grave in a cemetery lot are half your days are numbered, always keep a supply of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" by you. When the first symptoms of consumption appear no time in getting yourself under the treatment of this invaluable [illegible] when nothing else will. Possessing, as it does, ten times the virtue of the best cod liver oil, it is not only the cheapest but far the pleasantest to take. It purifies and enriches the blood, strengthens the whole system, cures blotches, pimples, eruptions and other ailments. By druggists.

"What is the stuff that dreams are made of?" inquires a poet. If he wants to manufacture a first-class variety dream, lobster salad can be highly recommended.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE

For all of those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION.

IT WILL CURE ENTIRELY THE WORST FORM OF FEMALE COMPLAINTS, ALL OVARIAN TROUBLES, INFLAMMATION AND ULCERATION, FALLING AND DISPLACEMENTS, AND THE CONSEQUENT SPINAL WEAKNESS, AND IS PARTICULARLY ADAPTED TO THE CHANGE OF LIFE.

IT WILL DISSOLVE AND EXPEL TUMORS FROM THE UTERUS IN AN EARLY STAGE OF DEVELOPMENT. THE TENDENCY TO CANCEROUS HUMORS THERE IS CHECKED VERY SPEEDILY BY ITS USE.

IT REMOVES FAINTNESS, FLATULENCY, DESTROYS ALL CRAVING FOR STIMULANTS, AND RELIEVES WEAKNESS OF THE STOMACH. IT CURES BLOATING, HEADACHE, NERVOUS PROSTRATION, GENERAL DEBILITY, DEPRESSION AND INDIGESTION.

THAT FEELING OF BEARING DOWN, CAUSING PAIN, WEIGHT AND BACKACHE, IS ALWAYS PERMANENTLY CURED BY ITS USE.

IT WILL AT ALL TIMES AND UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES ACT IN HARMONY WITH THE LAWS THAT GOVERN THE FEMALE SYSTEM.

FOR THE CURE OF KIDNEY COMPLAINTS IN EITHER SEX THIS REMEDY IS UNSURPASSED.

181 ANDREW McGILL.

Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam purify the Blood, regulate Stomach Liver and Bowels.

Many fishes brings many dissenters.

Dr. Low's worm sirup will remove Worms and correct quicker than any other Medicine.

A good habit,—that of looking on the bright side of things.

Destroy the worms or they may destroy the children. Use Freman's Worm Powders, they expel all kinds of worms.

Good manners are made of petty sacrifices.

For NETTLE RASH, Itching Piles, Ringworm Eruptions, and all skin diseases, use Prof. Low's Sulphur Soap.

Always leave home with kind words, for they may be the last.

SALT RHEUM.

Salt Rheum, Pimples or Blotches can be thoroughly removed by a proper application of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate to the part, and a few doses of McGregor's Speedy Cure for impure blood. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared by McGregor & Parke. Sold at 25 cents at Hill Bro's. D. & J. 5

The truest end of life is to know the life that never ends.

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tested by years of trial and has been found the most convenient and effectual method of applying Carbolic acid. The greatest anticeptic in use for Cuts, Burns and Old Sores. Be sure you get McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold for 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 6

The generous heart should scorn a pleasure that would give others pain.

Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Hands, or Old Sores of any kind that cannot be healed? Even though it be of years standing McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate will cure it. Beyond the shadow of a doubt it is the best healing compound ever known. Boils, Festerings, Frost Bites, Burns or any Skin Trouble, are alike cured by it. Sold at 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 4

To be womanly is the greatest charm of woman.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

The new post office in Orangeville is to be built the coming summer, the cost will be about $17,000.

TO OUR READERS.

If you suffer from headache, dizziness, back ache, biliousness or humors of the blood, try Burdock Blood Bitters. It is a guaranteed cure for all irregularities of the blood, liver and kidneys.

Two old men, one aged 97 years and the other 85, quarrelled in one of our hotels a few days ago, over their respective ages. The young 'un' gave the old chap a black eye.—B. V. Times.

A GOOD RECORD.

Among the many thousand bottles of Hagyard's Yellow Oil sold annually in Canada, not one has ever failed to give satisfaction. It cures rhumatism, colds, and all painful complaints and injuries.

MOTHER, may I go out to skate? Oh, yes, my darling Julia, but don't you try the figure eight, for it will surely fool you. Just when you try the lightning whirl to show a springy muscle, the boys will see a silly girl sleigh-riding on her bustle.

WELL AS EVER.

Lottie Howard writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "My system became greatly debilitated through arduous professional duties; suffered from nausea, sick headache and biliousness. Tried Burdock Blood Bitters with the most beneficial effect. Am well as ever.

A FEARFUL collision occurred early Saturday morning at New Bruswick, N. J., between a freight and an oil train, by which four people and twelve horses were burned to death, and factories and property valued at three-quarters of a million was consumed by the burning oil.

USEFUL TO KNOW.

Everyone should know that Hagyard's Yellow Oil will give prompt relief; apply externally will stop any pain; and taken internally cures colds, asthma, croup, sore throat and most inflammatory complaints.

We understand Mr. G. J. Blyth, formerly of the Markdale Expositor, is prepairing to print a paper in Chatsworth to be called the Chatsworth News. The field is not very large but good what is of it. We would like very much to see him succeed.

DANGER IN THE AIR.

In the chilling winds, the damp atmosphere and suddenly checked perspiration, colds are lurking. Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam cures colds, coughs, asthma and bronchitis, and all complaints tending towards consumption.

It is generally supposed in this neighborhood, that the woman who shot O'Donovan Rossa, is the person who was taking subscriptions, for a sporting and dog paper in this county. She horsewhipped a merchant, stole a horse and rig, beat a Thornbury hotel keeper out of three days board, put an elder of the Presbyterian Church to flight, and got a subscription from one of our village druggists.—B. V. Times.

AN EXCELLENT REPORT.

Hon. Jon. G. Goodridge, of Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:—"I cannot express myself in sufficiently praiseworthy terms of Burdock Blood Bitters which I have used for the past two years with great benefit."

Chapter of Irish History.

To the Editor of the Standard.

"It would be too tedious to give a "detailed account of every law suit "that now followed; but from that "time, summer of 1842 up to the "summer assizes of 1848 the landlord "proceeded in the courts for a warrent "of ejectment against Ring nine times. "On the first eight cases he was "defeated but succeeded on the ninth. "He had thirteen other law suits of "various kinds with the same defend- "ant, during which he sold his furni- "ture five times and his horse twice. "In all, he had twenty sales by auction "previous to midsummer of that year. "Part of the furniture was in several "instances brought back by the agent "Mr. James Coyne, who handed "money privately to Ring to pay "for it.

"The crop of 1842 was seized on "and sold at seven different times. "It was much more than sufficient to "pay the rent, even though the "manure was carried away in the "spring by the landlord; but those "seven different sales, with a number "of men receiving at each of the "seven seizures 2sh. 4d. a day as "keepers to watch the crop from the "day of distraint to the day of sale.— "those seven seizures on a crop which "might have been all seized and sold "at one time, with only one set of "expenses,—resulted as they, were "intended to do, in nearly doubling "the rent. Moreover, the crop being "distrained while growing, was cut "down by people whom the landlord "employed, although the tenant and "his family were standing unemployed; "and to such work people the landlord "can give any wages he chooses, to "be deducted from the tenant up to "8sh. 6d. a day! even though the "harvest wages of the district be 8d. "or 10d. a day! even though the "tenant, who is thus not allowed to "give his own labour to his own "farm, may, to avoid starvation, be "compelled to work for another em- "ployer at the fourth part, to wit, "7½d. a day, of what the law obliges "him to pay for workmen on his own "farm.

"It may be some proof of the ex- "ertions made by the tenant to pay "his way, when I state, that, not- "withstanding all the etraordinary "expenses of the seizures, and of the "protracted and complicated litiga- "tion, the rent was paid by the "autumn of 1842. There was nothing "owing by Ring save a sum of £1 and "odds, connected with the espenses "of a summon swhich had been decid- "ed against him on some technical "point of law.

"For the recovery of this £1, a "decree was obtained against Ring, "and orders given by the landlord "to arrest and put him in gaol. This, "Ring endeavored to avoid by keeping "out of the reach of the officers, which "he did successfully a month and "some odd days. The reason why "he was averse to go to gaol, and "why the landlord desired to have "him lodged there, is worth relating "at length, as it is characteristic of "certain customs in Ireland altogether "unknown on the Brtish side of the "channel.

"It is a rare thing to find a landlord in Ireland building houses or farm offices for a tenant; the tenant builds them himself. Hence so many mean houses exist in that country, and hence also the desporate tenacity with which the Irish peasant or farmer holds to his house when an ejectment comes upon him. If his lease has expired, or if he is to be ejected for the non-fulfilment of some condition of his lease, he must leave the house and barn and stable which he built, the doors and gates he erected, without receiving anything for them. To live in a house which we have ourselves built, or which our father or grandfather built at no expense to a landlord, is to live in a house which we are naturally inclined to consider our own, though in law it may not be ours. It is thus we see so many houses in every part of Ireland in ruins, that we see in the country of Kilkenny the walls of stone and lime, substantial and undecayed, but roofless and marked with violence, because the landlord not having built the houses, nor having any fear of being obliged to rebuild them, hesitate not to unroof a house in order to eject a tenant. It is a remarkable fact exemplified on almost every estate where the clearing away of a tenantry has been practised, that wherever an ejectment takes place the legality of which is doubtful, the landlord, or the agent who acts for him, levels the house and farm buildings with the ground the mement the holder is forced out, lest he should come in again."

"This was done on the estate where the unfortunate Pat Ring held his farm; and Ring had seen that the landlord did not always wait for an ejectment of the tenant before he pulled down the house. In our case, that of a tenant named Bushe, the lanlord resolved on ejectment; but Bushe owing no rent, he could only proceed as he had done against Ring, or by some other process of a like kind. He took a shorter one. Bushe had paid his rent in order to keep the house above his head--(a good dwelling it had been, to judge from the size and worth of the substantial walls which in part were still standing when I was there)—but he had not paid every man in the county to whom he was indebted. He owed one person, residing at a distance, money, more as it soon appeared than he could pay at once. This man the landlord found through some of his agents appointed for such purposes, and purchased from him the debt which Bushe owed. The account being legally conveyed, the landlord proceeded against the debtor, threw him into prison, and as soon as he had him there, took the roof off his house, turning out his wife and six young children upon the open highway. There they remained without shelter and without food until people in the adjoining village assisted them. The father was in prison and could neither resist the spoilation of the house which he himself had built, nor do anything by work or other wise for his family's subsistence. In every respect the proceedings were illegal on the part of the landlord; but, though lawyers urged Bushe to prosecute, and assured him of ultimate success, he was too far gone to listen to them. He was broken-hearted, he had no confidence in law: he had seen the landlord set law at defiance and the ruin of his roofless house every piece of timber from which and every handful of thatch, also the doors and windows had been carried away by order of the landlord, and by the assistance of the armed constabulary, who are located on the estate at the express request of the landlord and by sanction of the government the ruin of his roofless house and the utter beggary of himself and family overwhelmed Bushe: he would trust nothing more to law."

"He (Bushe) was heart-broken, and rather than stay among people who had known him happy in mind and comfortable in circumstances, he chose to leave the country, and be a beggar, now that he was compelled to be one where he was not known. A less sensitive man than he, might have done differently. There have been cases in Ireland, many, and in that county, even in that district of the county, where fathers of families treated in that manner, have taken the law of vengeance into their own hands, and have afforded the newspapers and the police Hue-and-cry (a Police Gazette, containing a full description of the party wanted) the materials for publishing to the world paragraphs and advertisements of offered reward, headed "Frightful state of Kilkenny!"

"Such paragraphs are by no means rare; and people in England believe that Tipperary and Kilkenny are filled with criminals who take a savage delight in assaulting landlords and land-agents without provocation. Others, who do not believe that every assault is so entirely "unprovoked," have an opinion that the Irish do not allow the oppressor to escape with impunity; but the case of Bushe is one of the many, of the vast majority of such cases, that prove the contrary. We hear of those tenants, who, feeling or fancying a grievous wrong, avenge themselves and their starving families; but we do not hear of the many—the far greater number—who submit to die in the ditches and highways quietly; or who, like the spirit-striken Bushe, wander away with their wretched families, to famish in the Irish towns, or to Liverpool, Manchester, London, or Glasgow, now, it was the knowledge which Ring had of such cases of house-demolition by order of the landlords when a tenant was out of the way,—lodged safely in prison,—that made him fearful of the officers, who had a decree on which to arrest him for the non-payment of costs of £17 due to the landlord by one of the many cases then pending, having been decided in the landlord's favor. The amount was not great; but the frequent seizures, with costs of law-suits and rent, had reduced him to less than his last penny. He had potatoes, a part of the feeble crop grown on the land which in the spring had been defrauded of its manure, and, though there were less of them in his possession than would keep his family over winter, even without feeding a pig, he might have sold some to pay this bill of costs rather than go to gaol, where he could do nothing either for his family or his farm. But, though the potatoes were distrained upon, the object of the landlord was not so much the payment of the small debt of costs as the confinment of the tenant in gaol"

"For more than a month Ring avoided the officers by crossing walls and ditches and fields whenever he got notice of their approach. He slept in the fields as well, and in the shelter of lime kilns and ruined houses,—ruined as he feared his would be, and as he feared but too truly. The case came at last to a crisis, thus:—

"He was seen to enter his house. The bailiffs followed, but found the door fastened, and therefore could not legally enter. They kept watch outside to prevent his escape. They received orders, that, if he did not surrender, they were to remain there night and day, and prevent the introduction of any article into the house, food or water.

"The potato store being in the field, and no supply in the house, and the water being also outside, it was expected the family would soon be starved, and that Ring must capitulate. In this laying siege to the house, the bailiffs might not be acting according to the law of the land, but they were acting according to the law of the landlord, which, on that estate as on many others in Ireland, is above the law of the land."

"Before the first day of the siege was over, there was neither food nor drink in the house; and shut up in it were father, mother, and five young children. Neighbors and relatives of Ring would have supplied them but were sternly told, that, if they attempted, they would not only be prevented, but that the landlord would cause them to regret it."

"Again and again through night and through day, did the cry for water came from the famishing family. The mother had a sucking infant, and in her attempt to save all her children from starvation by admitting them to the privilege of infancy, she but augmented their distress and her own. She saw her infant famishing, for, when she would have devided her own milk, there was none to devide. She was herself starving, and to her infant she was without nourishment."

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Sir [illegible]n Macdonald move[illegible] that this House do elect a chairman [illegible] the committees of this House at the commencement of every Parliament as soon as an address has been agreed to in answer to His Excellency's Speech, and that the member so elected shall take the chair of all Committees of the Whole, including Committees of Supply and of Ways and Means in accordance with the rules and usages which regulate the duties of the similar officer generally designated the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in the House of Commons of Great Britain. He said these resolutions were intended to introduce the practice in vogue in the English House of Commons and in the Houses of Legislature of Victoria, Queensland, New South Wales and New Zealand. It had been found that the chair of the Speaker was not exactly a bed of roses. The duties of the Speaker had been found so onerous as to affect the health of those who had this office. The practice of calling upon any member of the House to take the Speaker's chair in his absence was very unsatisfactory. The person so chosen usually lacked the experience necessary, and frequently had to ask the committee to rise when doubtful points had to be decided. The system in vogue in England had been found to work very well. The average length of the sittings in Canada was fully as great as in England, and although Canadians were a hardy race this could hardly be urged as an objection to the motion.

Mr. Blake said he was sorry the Premier had adopted this way of reaching the conclusion he wished to reach. It would have been better in the case of an important change of practice like this, to refer the question to a select committee. This course had been adopted in matters of less importance than this. The present Speaker did not appear to have suffered in health through the performance of his duties. He did not suppose that it was meant that this motion should lead to the more frequent absence of the Speaker. In this House the attendance of members was generally regular and constant, so there was not much difference in this respect between the occupant of the chair and the other members. He thought it important that, except in the case of an emergency, the chair should be occupied by the Speaker. The gentlemen called to the chair had discharged their duties reasonably well. In this instance it seemed to be a case of a man who wanted an office rather than an office that wanted a man. (Cheers.) Could it be possible that a gentleman, who would himself admit that he had not taken many occasions to show his parliamentary capacity, was to be appointed to this office to make up for hopes deferred, if not blasted, of a Cabinet position which he could not fill, or to which it would not be safe to appoint him, seeing that it would compel the opening of his constituency? Instead of being an independent member, as he should be, this office would hold a position virtually in the gift of the Administration. The people had already seen enough of influences tending to destroy the independence of members in contracts to companies of which members of Parliament were members. Timber limits, coal lands, Departmental favors and railway subsidies were all used as machinery by which this Parliament was being prevented from being a free and independent Parliament to something very different, which it would not be quite parliamentary to mention. (Cheers.) He did not suppose that his view would be adopted, for, as this House had swallowed camels, it would hardly begin to strain at gnats now. (Cheers and laughter.) However, even if, contrary to his advice, it was decided to appoint a Chairman of Committees and Deputy Speaker, it would be well to provide that the Speaker and deputy should represent the two languages spoken in this Chamber. If action was to be taken now he would prefer the selection of two regular Chairmen of Committees. As this was such an important matter, however, and one involving a definite change in the Standing Orders of the House, he moved "That a select committee be appointed to consider and report to this House whether any, and if so what, improvement may be made in reference to the chairmanship of Committees of the Whole."

Sir John Macdonald contended that the appointment was no more an appointment of the Government than that of the Speaker was. If the appointment was confirmed by the House there was no infringement of the rights of the people. The hon. gentleman complained of the expense of the appointment, but the expense would not be nearly as great as that incurred in making up returns moved for by the hon. member for West Durham. He accused the leader of the Opposition of trying to create a sectional feeling by proposing that the rights of the French members of the House should be considered.

Mr. Casey said that the hon. Premier had contended that the appointment was not a Government one any more than that of the Speaker. If this were the case, the Deputy Speaker should not have a place on the floor of the House and should, at all events, have no vote on party questions. He was not surprised that the Premier should accuse the leader of the Opposition of sectionalism, because sectionalism was one of the secrets of the Premier's strength. There was nothing sectional, however, in desiring a recognition of the rights of the minority which could be made without detriment to the rights of the majority, and without the slightest interference with the business of the House. The principle had been already recognized by the appointing of a French and English Speaker alternately.

The House divided on Mr. Blake's amendment, which was lost by a majority of 121 to 59. The following is the division list:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Armstrong, Auger, Bain (Wentworth), Bechard, Blake, Bourassa, Burpee (Sunbury), Cameron (Huron), Cameron (Middlesex), Cartwright, Casey, Casgrain, Catudal, Charlton, Cockburn, De St. Georges, Edgar, Fairbank, Fisher, Fleming, Forbes, Geoffrion, Gillmor, Gunn, Harley, Holton, Innes, Irvine, Jackson, King, Kirk, Landerkin, Langelier, Laurier, Lister, Livingstone, Mackenzie, McCraney, McIsaac, McMullen, Mills, Mulock, Paterson (Brant), Platt, Ray, Rinfret, Robertson (Shelburne), Scriver, Somerville (Brant), Somerville (Bruce), Springer, Sutherland (Oxford), Thompson, Trow, Vail, Watson, Wells, Wilson.—Total, 59.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Allison, Amyot, Baker (Missisquoi), Baker (Victoria), Barnard, Beaty Bell, Belleau, Benoit, Benson, Bergeron, Bergin, Billy, Blondeau, Bosse, Bourbeau, Bowell, Bryson, Burnham, Burns, Cameron (Inverness), Campbell (Victoria), Carling, Caron, Chapleau, Cochrane, Colby, Costigan, Coughlin, Coursol, Curran, Daly, Daoust, Dawson, Desaulniers (Maskinonge), Desaulniers (St. Maurice), Desjardins, Dickinson, Dodd, Dugas, Dundas, Dupont, Farrow, Ferguson (Welland), Fortin, Foster, Gagne, Gaudet, Gault, Gigault, Girouard, Gordon, Grandbois, Guilbault, Guillet, Hackett, Hall, Hay, Hesson, Hickey, Hilliard, Homer, Hurteau, Ives, Jamieson, Kilvert, Kinney, Kranz, Landry (Kent), Landry (Montmagny), Langevin, Lesage, Macdonald (Kings), Macdonald (St. John), Mackintosh, Macmaster, Macmillan (Middlesex), McDougall (Pictou), McDougall (Cape Breton), McLelan, McNeil, Massue, Mitchell, Montplaisir, O'Brien, Orton, Ouimet, Paint, Patterson (Essex), Pinsonneault, Pruyn, Reid, Riopel, Robertson (Hamilton), Robertson (Hastings), Royal, Rykert, Shakespeare, Small, Smith, Sproule, Stairs, Taschereau, Tasse, Taylor, Temple, Tilley, Townshend, Tupper, Tyrwhitt, Wallace (Albert), Wallace (York), White (Cardwell), White (Hastings), White (Renfrew), Williams, Wood (Brockville), Wood (Westmorland), Woodworth, Wright—Total, 121.

Mr. Royal moved, seconded by Mr. Girouard, that after the second paragraph in the resolution the following be inserted: "That the member elected to serve as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of the Committees shall be required to possess full and practical knowledge of the language, which is not that of the Speaker for the time being."

The resolution as amended then carried.

Mr. Charlton introduced a Bill for the punishment of seduction. The Bill was read the first time.

In reply to Mr. Charlton, Sir Leonard Tilley said the gross amount of the public debt of the Dominion on the 1st of January last was $253,739,146.77.

In reply to Mr. Gigault, Sir John Macdonald said the Government hoped to bring down a measure this session to establish a Bureau of Agriculture and an Experimental Farm.

In reply to a question by Mr. Wilson, Sir John Macdonald said the Government had not investigated the charges against County Judge Hughes, of Elgin, nor had the Government any intention of appointing a commission to investigate the case, as they thought there was no ground for the investigation under the law.

Replying to Mr. Farrow, Sir John Macdonald said it is not the intention of the Government to create a Divorce Court instead of having applications for divorce come before the two Houses of Parliament.

Replying to a question by Mr. Casey as to the $395,600 damage awarded Messrs. Alexander Manning, McLaren, McDonald & Co., the Section B contractors, Mr. Pope said the amount was paid, certificates being issued as follows: On the 2nd of July, $100,000; 14th of July, $50,000; on Oct. 21st, $245,600. The Government had consulted counsel before paying the amount, and the advice was that it must be paid. The Government had no separate report from Judge Clarke, who refused to sign the award in the Section B case made by Messrs. Brydges and Light and the other arbitrators.

The time for receiving Private Bills was extended to March 5th.

Sir John Macdonald, in replying to Mr. Lister, said that the office of Indian Superintendent had not been abolished.

Sir John Macdonald, replying to Mr. Holton, said the Government had obtained a copy of the judgment of Mr. Justice Mathieu, of the Superior Court for Lower Canada, dismissing the claim of the Government, as a privileged claim, on the assets of the Exchange Bank in liquidation; that the Government had obtained no security from Senator Ogilvie for the repayment of the money loaned to the Exchange Bank and guaranteed by him; and that the Government had taken no proceedings against Senator Ogilvie to compel him to pay the amount of the guarantee or give security therefor, because the judgment was in appeal, and if the Crown's priority was upheld in the Court of Appeal there would be no necessity for taking proceedings against Senator Ogilvie.

Mr. Blake moved for the correspondence and petitions to the Postmaster-General or any member of the Government with reference to the adoption, in Canada, of a system to encourage small savings similar to that brought in by the late Mr. Fawcett in England. He said that the plan was that a slip was handed out to the applicants, having twelve compartments or squares. The applicant bought penny stamps and pasted them on the slip when he had filled making a shilling's worth of stamps, he could put it in the bank.

Sir Leonard Tilley said the Government had considered the matter, but for certain reasons it was thought not advisable to adopt it at present. Under the present system of savings banks it was possible for any person to deposit as small a sum as a dollar.

Mr. Blake moved for papers showing the payments made by the Colonization Companies and all correspondence respecting the change in the agreement with those companies. He said it was stated in the public prints that it was intended to relax the conditions on which the Colonization Companies got their land. Seeing that the Government had decided to grant lands outright to the railway companies at $1 per acre, the facts in these matters would be of great public interest.

The motion was carried.

How the Stores Were Transported.

Messrs. Cook & Son, the excursion firm, were entrusted with the transportation of Wolseley's stores. The instructions received from the Government were to prepare for about 6,000 men, with 6 000 or 8,000 tons of stores, which they were to carry from Assiout to Wady Halfa. They were also to take up about 400 special rowboats. The Admiralty calculated that 12,000 tons of coal would be required. As a matter of fact, they actually conveyed about 11,000 English and 7,000 Egyptian troops, and 40,000 tons of stores, and had consumed nearly 24,000 tons of coal. Instead of 400 rowboats they had double the number to convey. For the river work from Assiout they had twenty-seven steamers employed almost day and night, and no fewer than 650 sailing boats—of from 70 to 200 tons capacity—voyaging. To do all this the firm had a little army of its own of nearly 5,000 men and boys, consisting entirely of the fellaheen of lower Egypt.

It is believed the English expedition to Bechuanaland will effect its object without fighting the Boers.

The duchess of Marlborough has just presented the Radcliffe observatory at Oxford with a splendid telescope, which was a gift by Sir James South to the late duke, whose keen taste for astronomical studies was well known to his friends.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Dr. Widdifield presented the second report of the Committee on Standing Orders, reporting certain Bills as having complied with the rules of the House.

Hon. A. S. Hardy presented the reports of the inspectors of reformatories, etc., and that of the inspector of prisons, asylums and charitable institutions for 1884.

Hon. G. W. Ross, in introducing his Bill to amend the Act relating to High Schools, stated the main provisions of the Bill. Last session the House adopted certain resolutions indicating what the constitution of a High School should be before advancing to be a Collegiate Institute, and he now proposed to give a statutory status to the Collegiate Institutes, adopting the basis of the resolution. It is now provided that the average attendance required shall be 100 for the first half-year and 80 for the second half-year. The Bill also indicated the mode of appointing High School trustees.

Mr. Meredith—Any change in the mode?

Hon. G. W. Ross—No. A slight change was made in regard to the power of the Chairman of the High School Board, the law now allowing the chairman a double vote, and the new Bill would give him one vote only. He would also give trustees power to suspend or expel pupils whose conduct brings reproach on a school. The treasurer of the High School would be the treasurer of the municipality. He concluded by moving the first reading of the Bill.—Carried.

FIRST READINGS

Mr. Merrick—An Act to incorporate the Brockville, Merrickville & Ottawa Railway.

Mr. Harcourt — To incorporate the Niagara Falls Improvement Company.

Mr. Ballantyne—To incorporate Stratford as a city.

Mr. Neelon—To legalize a by-law of the village of Beamsville to build a tramway.

Mr. Freeman—To incorporate Turkey Point Company.

Mr. Merrick—Bill to amend the Assessment Act.

Mr. Meredith—Bill respecting St. Paul's Cemetery, London.

Hon. O. Mowat—Bill to simplify the transfer of land. He said—The general purpose of the Act is one the importance of which it is impossible to exaggerate. Its purpose is to make the transfer of real estate as simple as the transfer of bank stock, and the title of the holder as free from danger or difficulty as ordinarily the title of the holder of bank stock is to the shares which he holds. This object requires to be but stated in order that everybody may see how very important it is, and how large a number of persons are interested in it. Now the complication of titles is very serious, and there is no title to land in the country which is not in danger of complication. Every transaction which takes place, every deed, every mortgage, every will increases the complication of a title and increases the danger of a defect that may arise somewhere in that title. Now, this system which this Bill proposes to introduce puts an end to the complication.

Mr. Meredith—Does the Bill make it optional?

Hon. O. Mowat—I was going to refer to that. In the first place the system is made optional. If it is found to work as well here—as I believe it will—as elsewhere, no doubt the whole land of the Province will be brought under it, but at the present time we must regard it as an experiment, and in order to make sure that our measure is right we propose to limit it in the first place to the city of Toronto and the county of York.

Mr. Meredith—Is it not to apply to newly granted lands?

Hon. O. Mowat—No, not even that. We have considered that, and think there are some objections to that just now. By-and-bye I expect that the country will desire that it should be applied to all newly granted lands, but now I think it would be inexpedient to do so.

Mr. Meredith—Do you propose to provide for the validity and exchange of old titles under this system?

Hon. Mr. Mowat—The Bill adopts them.

Mr. Young—I rise to say that I recognize this as a great measure of law reform. The point I intend to bring out is that the application of the measure should not be confined to the city of Toronto and the county of York. I am sure the whole country will regard it as a great system of law reform. For my own part, though I have thought a good deal about the Torrens System, I did not think it would come in force here for several years yet, and I do most heartily congratulate the Attorney-General in bringing this measure before the House. The difficulty and expense of investigation of titles is felt all over the country, and I am sure the country will rejoice to know that a new system is to be introduced. I cannot, however, see under those circumstances any reason why it should not be extended to the whole country, and I trust the Attorney-General will give it to the whole Province.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Newest Notes Regarding Feminine Fashions.

SEASONABLE HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

(Aunt Kate's Weekly Budget.)

Fresh Fashion Freaks.

Tea green is a new shade; olive green will regain its popularity, and fir and myrtle will be stylish.

The small capote of velvet, silk or, lace, very much raised in the border and trimmed high in front with flowers, feathers and aigrettes, is the favorite chapeau for elegant promenade and visiting toilets.

Every one likes to keep valentines, Easter and Christmas cards, yet do not know how to make them ornamental. A pretty arrangement seen lately for that purpose was a dainty straw basket suspended by a wide scarlet satin ribbon, from the corner of an ebony fire-screen. The basket was filled with lovely fringed cards.

Coiffures are just now undergoing various transformations. Some propose bold innovations, others raise a protest and wish to keep the hair quite turned up at the back, and forming a sort of half-coronet very much forward over the forehead, always with the frizzled fringe; one may add at pleasure two long curls falling over the neck.

An exquisite dinner-dress is of sapphire-blue ribbed velvet, with deep train opening in front over a skirt of cream-colored satin, entirely covered with old Venetian lace. Bodice cut low in the shape of a heart, filled in with lace. Two diamond brooches; one to fasten the lace in the hollow of the bodice and one at the waist. Diamonds and sapphires in the hair. Cream satin shoes; cream unglazed kid gloves coming up over the elbow.

The rage for lingerie is unabated. Almost every sort of scarf or plastron is admissible, from collars from which are suspended pointed vests heavily loaded with jets to those of gossamer, scarcely more tangible than a spider's web. A new fantasy is a separable collar and cuffs to match, to be worn with any dress whatsoever; they are made of velvet, and are beaded or embroidered, according to the taste of the wearer.

A robe just sent the Queen of Italy has what is styled a "Hindoo" basque; three vests, one above another, forming one single corsage. The under one buttons to the throat; the second is shorter and does not quite meet in front, its curve being marked by a light fringe of gold, and the outer one is the short rounded "bolero" jacket without sleeves. They are all the same material—dark velvet—but each is covered with embroideries distinctive in character, though in colors that softly harmonize with one another. The double sleeves reach only to the elbow.

A pretty dress for a young girl is of blue cashmere. The polonaise is draped with a few folds over the hips, showing a golden brown velvet band on the bottom of the underskirt. The lower end of the bodice is concealed beneath a broad scarf of moire ribbon of the same shade as the velvet, fastened at the back with two long bows and ends. The V shaped front opens over a plaited silk chemisette, fastened around the throat with a band of velvet. The bodice is faced with bias velvet. The sleeves reach below the elbow, and are finished by a velvet band.

A most cloud-like ball toilet is of silver tulle over pale pink faille; the paniers at the sides are very full, and so is the upper part of the train, which is finished into a point. Wreath of pale pink primroses mounted upon silver coming down from the shoulder to the waist, and from the waist to the foot of the skirt. Dog's collar of pink velvet, studded with diamonds. Ariane coiffure; the hair waved over the temples, falls over the neck in loose tresses, among which mingle a few curls. A string of diamonds is passed in and out, and a cluster of very light pink feathers is placed at the side. As many bracelets as possible over the very long gloves. Small eardrops and clasp of pearls at the waist. Feather fan with artistic mounting of pearl or tortoiseshell.

An inexpensive and exceedingly effective silk costume can be made of American silk and broche combined with American machine-embroidered lace, thus: The skirt of dark green gros-grain silk, with two box-plaited flounces at the bottom. The tablier reaching from the hips to the top of the flounce is composed of one wide volante of white embroidered Moresque lace, over which fall pointed panniers of the silk, looped under a gracefully-draped back breadth of red and green satin broche matching the color of the green silk, but very lustrous, the red broche flowers a very vivid shade between scarlet and crimson. The bodice is of the broche, with a triangular Modjeska puff on the front defining a square Pompadour outline across the bust, the triangle bordered with Moresque lace, the high collar and cuffs with the same. The sleeves are of greenish silk, slashed at the elbows and in the arm-holes with the broche. The entire cost of such a dress need not be more than $35 or $40, including the making.

A "fascinator," so named, most useful for enveloping the shoulders and head when leaving a heated concert room or opera, is made with very coarse wooden knitting pins—say as thick as the little finger—and single zephyr. Cast on one hundred loose stitches and knit garter knitting until the desired length is reached. About one yard and three quarters is a good length. When completed, border the entire strip with a double feather edge shell pattern, which gives a very dainty and fleecy finish to the whole. Fashion the one end to form a hood. This is done by using satin ribbon to gather the edge in a pretty frill around the face; tie on a bow at the top, introduce another ribbon runner and bow at the nape of the neck, and add strings to tie. The hood is drawn over the head; the remaining scarf end is wound around the neck and shoulders with all the "Spanish grace" possible.

How to Dress Stout Necks.

A stout lady with a short neck can wear lace often as becoming as her swan-throated sister, provided she does not attempt to snug it close up under her ears, or to bunch it in wavy profusion about her neck and shoulders. First, then, the lace jabot, fichus, bertha or neck trimming of what ever sort should invariably be flat; secondly, it should always decrease in width as it approaches the waist line; and, thirdly, it should never stop short here, but fall into graduated points if possible to several inches below the belt, giving a longer effect to the waist. It would also be well, before adjusting the lace bertha, fichu, etc., to turn back very slightly that portion of the bodice which comes just under the chin. This V opening of about three inches in length and width can be daintily veiled with lace, catching together firmly the edges with a slender lace-pin.

The Proportion of Children to Ruffles.

Increase of style always means increase of labor. A servant's duties are infinitely harder than they were twenty years ago. Contrast the single item of laundry work in a modern family with the family washing of the preceding generation. Then there were ten children to one ruffle; now we have ten ruffles to each child. "Conveniences have multiplied," it is true, but the work has outstripped them.—Christian Union.

Morsels of Gastronomy.

New importations of canned mushrooms are said to be of unusually fine quality.

Disraeli said a man helped twice to soup will drink tea and coffee out of the saucer.

Bear steak is attaining great gastronomic popularity throughout the west.

A new wrinkle of fashionable dinner parties is to have the celery frozen as hard as possible.

A good many people have yet to learn that chicken salad is not the kind for a dinner party.

Domestic and Useful.

The best remedy for chilblains is a mixture of one part, by measure, of tincture of iodine and three parts glycerine.

A simple disinfecting lamp may be easily made by burning bisulphide of carbon in a lamp after the manner of an oil or spirit lamp.

Redness in the hands may be removed by using a paste made as follows: Beat together an ounce of clear honey, one ounce of almond oil, the juice of a lemon, and the yolk of a raw egg. Apply at night to the hands, and cover with old gloves slit up the palms.

To clean a felt hat dissolve a little ammonia in warm water, and with a clean brush dipped in this, scrub the hat well. Then hang out in the open air to dry.

For a handy draw-through needle put one point of a hair-pin through the tape, wrap a thread tightly round both ends, and push through points first.

In frying omelettes, pancakes, etc., heat the pan. Take a piece of clean paper and polish till it will not give off any damp or color; that is the secret of success—a hot, clean pan.

For cough roast a lemon very carefully without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot, cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you.

Tooth brushes cannot be too soft. Hard brushes make the gums recede from the teeth, and produce premature decay by causing the soft bone of the tooth to be exposed to the air, beyond the part of the tooth protected by the enamel.

Sponge cake that has become dry may be cut into thin slices and toasted. It is delicate and really nice with tea. Slices of stale sponge cake have been browned in the oven and been served to unsuspecting people as Italian rusks, and have been eaten with relish.

"Carnival."

The word "carnival" is from the Latin caro, flesh, and vale, farewell—"farewell to flesh," in fact. The festival originally began on the feast of the Epiphany, and continued to Ash Wednesday. In later years it was limited to from three to eight days prior to Ash Wednesday. The custom is in all probability derived from the heathen celebrations in honor of returning spring. Banquets were the usual concomitants of the carnival during the middle ages. The carnival is still popular in Rome, Venice, New Orleans, and other places. The Roman celebrations are recorded as having been especially splendid during the pontificate of Pope Paul III., 1534-49, when the Eternal City was overflowing with wealth sent thither from all Christendom. The sports of that day were subdivided into three divisions—viz.: races, and two kinds of spectacular pageants. The other Italian cities, Venice, Turin, Milan, Florence and Naples, all vied with Rome in the magnificence of their carnival displays. At present these have dwindled down to a mere institution for money-getting. The fun at Rome now usually ends by burning a colossal figure—supposed to represent the carnival—on the night of Shrove Tuesday. At Paris, the carnival is marked by the prevalence of various gayeties, such as the wearing of masks on the streets, etc. On the Sunday and Tuesday before Lent bœuf gras (fat ox) procession parades the streets. Our carnival week at Montreal lays no claim to antiquity, but already bids fair to rival the older anniversary, when the amount of genuine mirth, revelry, sport and entertainment crowded into it is considered.

An entomological bore had just begun afresh on the eye of the common house fly, which he declared, considering the size of its owner, to have the largest organ of vision in the whole animal world. "You presume to deny the fact I state," gasped out the astonished man; "why, Buffon, Cuvier" —— But before he could finish his sentence Sydney Smith was vehemently down on him once more with his "Yes, sir, the weight of tradition, the infallible instinct of poetry, is against you. For what is the verdict of poetry on this very issue? Why, 'I, said the fly, with my little eye, I saw him die.'" At once the table was in a roar, and the discomfited bug fancier lapsed into silence and suffered the talk to become general.

THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

Annual Report of the Postmaster-General—Interesting Statistics.

The annual report of the Postmaster-General of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1884, was laid on the table of Parliament yesterday. The returns and statements show continued progress in the extension of the postal system throughout the Provinces of the Dominion. Four hundred and forty-two additional post-offices were established. Mail service has been established on 2,488 additional miles of post route, including sections of railway under construction as completed for train running. The following table gives a comparative statement of postal business in Canada during the years 1879 and 1884:

	1879.	1884.
Number of post offices	5,606	6,837
" miles mail route	39,598	47,13
" miles annual mail travel	16,156,034	20,866,816
" letters	43,900,000	66,000,000
" post cards	6,940,600	13,560,000
" registered letters	1,960,000	3,000,000
Postal revenue	$1,534,362	$2,370,741

The returns of the free delivery by letter carriers show a corresponding increase. The total number of letters and newspapers delivered under this system during the past year was 29 953 524 as against 23,471,084 in 1883. The following figures exhibit the savings bank business of the past year as compared with the preceding year:

	1883.	1884.
No of open accounts	61,059	66,682
Balance due to depositors	$11,976,237	$13,245,552
Increase in 1884		$ 1,269,345

The following is a statement by Provinces of the revenue and expenditure of the department for the past fiscal year:

	Revenue.	Expenditure.
Ontario	$1,300,149 88	$1,404,949 51
Quebec	492,374 84	676,777 48
Nova scotia	178,189 35	277,269 13
New Brunswick	162,170 89	244,877 44
Manitoba and North-west Territory	134,132 97	192,514 58
British Columbia	34,569 15	75,170 45
Prince Ed'wd Island	29,154 80	59,809 21
Total	$2,330,741 38	$2,931,387 80

The number of letters registered this year is estimated to have been about 3,000,000. Of this number 2,105 failed from various causes to reach their destination, including 84 registered letters stolen from post-offices by burglars, or contained in mails lost, or accidentally destroyed whilst under conveyance. In the remaining 21 cases, composed of registered letters embezzled, lost or misdelivered, by persons employed in post-offices, the value contained in 19 of the number was recovered, or made good by the persons in fault.

The number of ordinary dead letters, circulars and postal cards received at the d ad letter office this year was 666,892.

Is Cholera Spread by Drinking-Water?

For good health, pure water is as necessary as pure air, good food, comfortable quarters and so forth. I myself am an enthusiast in the matter of drinking-water, but not from fear of cholera or typhoid fever, but simply from a pure love for the good. For the water is not only a necessary article of food, but a real pleasure, which I prefer, and believe to be more healthful than good wine or good beer. When water fails, man may suffer not only from cholera but from all possible diseases. In places where cholera prevails the water may always be indicted, for the water-supply is always a part of the locality, and the doctrine will frequently hold good, because the part may be mistaken for the whole. Where the influence of the water is held up to the exclusion of all other local factors error is liable to creep in. In England, where the drinking-water theory is fully believed in, two like influences, in which every other local factor was excluded, were observed in the cholera epidemic of 1854. In one case, in a street in London which was supplied by two water companies, the Lambeth with pure water and the Vauxhall with impure water, it was found that the cholera was practically limited to the houses supplied by the Vauxhall Company. I was so much impressed by this fact that I endeavored to see whether the epidemic of 1854 in Munich could not be explained on a similar hypothesis. But my researches led me to a negative result. Without doubting the facts observed in London, I am of opinion that the impure water of the Vauxhall Company did not spread the germs of cholera, for the propagation of cholera was not effected by this means in Munich, but that the water increased either the personal predisposition to cholera, or perhaps the local predisposition, since the water would be employed in the houses and about the soil. Later on, in 1866, Letheby doubted the accuracy of the drinking water theory, and proved that there had been considerable confusion; so that a house which was registered on the Lambeth Company, really drew its water supply from the main of the Vauxhall Company, and vice versa. The cholera epidemic of 1866 was essentially limited to East London. The East London Water Company supplied this district with water filtered from the River Lea. Letheby brought forward a series of facts to prove that we might with equal justice accuse the East London Gas Company, since the first case of cholera broke out at the gas factory.—Dr. Max von Pettenkofer, in Popular Science Monthly.

The Celt in the Soudan.

"It was a glorious victory," to be sure, but a very costly one, and Irish blood has again flowed freely on the desert; for more than half of the officers reported killed are Celtic or semi-Celtic by race or habitation, if one may use such a term. Kildare loses in poor Richard Wolfe one of her most gallant sons, who, though a landlord of many acres, was very popular with all classes as was his father before him. He might have posed as the ideal Irish dragoon—one of the hardest riders to foxhounds and staghounds, and one of the best polo players in the service. One of his ancestors was the General Wolfe, of Quebec; another was Lord Kilwarden, murdered in the Irish rebellion; a third wrote the world-famous lines on the death of the Corunna captain, Sir John Moore.—London World.

THE BAYHAM TRAGEDY.

[illegible] Forbes and Mrs. Stillwell Committed for Trial—Thomas Gives Further Details of the Deed.

Government Detective Murray returned to Toronto last night from St. Thomas, having arrived at another stage of the shooting of Louis Stillwell in the township of Bayham on New Year's Day. Owing to an informality in the coroner's commitment all the evidence had to be gone over again.

Albert Thomas, the witness for the Crown, who states that he was an accessory before the fact, in giving his evidence brought out some details not previously published. On the Monday after Christmas, he said, it was agreed between Forbes, Mrs. Stillwell and himself that they were to shoot Stillwell with a pistol. Stillwell was at the village and Thomas and Forbes lay in waiting behind a woodpile at Stillwell's house. Forbes was to shoot him when he was taking his horses to the barn, but instead of taking them there their victim took them in front of the house and called for Thomas. Stillwell was pretty drunk and he fell on the porch after getting off the sleigh. Thomas came round and lifted him up and carried him into the house and laid him on the bed, and then took the horses round to the stable. Forbes then said to him: "If you had had the pistol you could have shot him easily, couldn't you?" Thomas replied, "I wouldn't dare to do it." "Oh, you've got no stuff in you," was the reply. The next day Forbes went to Rutherford's, a neighbor, and borrowed a Spencer repeating rifle and four cartridges and brought it to Stillwell's house and left it there. This was the night before New Year's. The same night Forbes, Mrs. Stillwell and Thomas were in the house, and Forbes said if he could get one shot at him with that rifle he would fix him so that he would never kick again. The next day the murder was committed in the manner already published. Thomas' statement was corroborated in every material point by other witnesses. Judge Hughes committed the prisoners for trial for the murder of Stillwell.

Drunkenness in England.

According to the returns just issued of convictions for drunkenness on Sunday, the north country maintains valiantly its reputation for hard drinking. No counties in any other part of England can at all compare in the abundance of its Sunday tipplers with Lancashire and Durham, where the proportion of persons convicted during the year for too great indulgence in spirituous liquors on the first day of the week is no less than one for every thousand of the inhabitants. Yorkshire and Cumberland are less bibulous regions, for here the rates are respectively one in 2,200, and one in 2,500, which is, however, decidedly in advance of any southern or midland county. In Cumberland the proportion falls to one in 7,000, and in Westmoreland to about one in 8,000 But these figures have to be compared with very poor totals exhibited in other parts of the kingdom, as, for instance, one to 20,000 in Dorsetshire and Cornwall, one to 30,000 in Northampton, and one to 87,000 in Cambridgeshire, while neither Rutland nor Bedford nor Huntington managed to produce a single conviction for Sunday drunkenness in a whole year. These statistics relate only to the extra-urban districts; but the towns in the north take an equally long lead in the production of Sunday tipplers of the more determined sort. Manchester is well ahead of any other town in this respect, since for every 250 persons there may be expected to be at least one conviction during the year. But Liverpool is a pretty good second, with one conviction to 300 inhabitants; and no other town comes anywhere near this. Curiously enough, the persons convicted in the latter town are almost all bona fide residents; whereas in Manchester, on the other hand, they are almost all visitors. Of the other big towns, the most hard-drinking are Birmingham, which produces one conviction for every 1,500 inhabitants, and Bristol, with one for every 1,800.—St. James' Gazette.

Facts About Hats.

Two hundred and twenty-two years ago Virginia offered a premium of ten pounds of tobacco for every good hat made of wool or fur within her bounds.

So many hats were made in America 150 years ago that the Felt-makers' Company of London petitioned Parliament to prohibit all exportation of hats from the American colonies on the ground that New England alone was turning out 10,000 hats a year. Parliament "graciously acceded" to the request for the time being.

Danbury, in Connecticut, was making hats 104 years ago.

As late as 1845 all the hats were made out of real skins.

The poor old beaver disappeared from the globe in order to furnish man's brain with a false dome.

Next the nutria had to sacrifice himself and the gentle muskrat was called into requisition and the rabbit was drafted.

The Danbury hat folks imported rabbits to breed them artificially, but the free-minded rabbit died or jumped over the fence.

The Chinese first taught us how to make the present sort of silk hat. These hats were started in this country just fifty years ago, or in 1835.

A Frenchman in Paris put his hand on the Chinese silk hat and stole the idea.

The cost of carrying ordinary passengers on the trunk lines of railroads averages a trifle over a cent and two-thirds per mile. Taking that as a basis for calculating the actual cost of carrying immigrants from the Atlantic to Chicago for a dollar, a manager says: "It is true that they are carried at less cost than other passengers. They go in less costly cars at a low rate of speed, so that some allowance should be made on that score. It would not be an unfair statement to say that it costs only a cent a mile, and one of these dollar tickets is good for 985 miles or $9.85 of actual cost to the company at the very lowest estimate. Of course the more they carry the worse off they are at that rate, and instead of competing for the business they would be expected to try and make each other take it, as each train load of passengers carried at that rate brings the company so much nearer ruin."

CURRENT TOPICS.

Probably no American city of its number of inhabitants has so many of its own citizens with titles as San Francisco. There is the Marquis Oliver, a member of an old Galway family, who received his title from the Pope; the Baron Murphy, who received his title from the same source; and Sir Claus Spreckles, who was knighted by King Kalakua, whom he furnishes with pocket-money, and whose kingdom he vitually owns. A weakness with this monarch is the receiving and distributing of decorations, and it is quite the thing at a reception in San Francisco to see a dozen or more blue and white or red and white buttons of the Order of Kamehameha in the lappels of mild, inoffensive citizens, who had at some time or other done Kalakua a favor.

A prima donna usually lets four hours elapse between eating and singing. After the opera she may eat the little supper that is so highly prized by all singers, not because of its conviviality, for it must be simple and light, but rather because it can be eaten with the knowledge that there is plenty of time for digestion. Sweets, highly-spiced food of any kind and nuts must be carefully avoided. Different singers use different drinks for refreshing the throat, according as their experience has taught them. Miss Clara Louise Kellogg writes in the Critic that she has found beef tea to be of great service. Some use a gargle. Le Franc, the tenor, famous for his high C, favored salt and water. The singers of a past generation depended a great deal upon sulphur, and so do those of to-day, only they take smaller doses. They take it homœopathically. Patti puts a great deal of dependence upon it, and so do others who are homœopathists.

It is well known to students of the later writers on geology and Bible teaching that the Duke of Argyll was one of those who could not make up his mind on the subject of the deluge. His mind—as he himself said in one of his works about twenty years ago—was in a state of suspense. In a lecture recently delivered in Glasgow and since published, he confesses a change of mind, and holds that the Mosaic account is not only consistent with all the known facts of science, but accounts for certain phenomena otherwise unexplained. The cataclysmic results from such an event were, he thinks, "essentially superficial and transitory," the "traces being chiefly perceptible in the distribution of gravels, sand and the mud clay known as brick earth." He vindicates his new position by referring to the presence of gravel on some of the highest points in Europe and the presence of animal remains—especially mammoth remains—in Siberia, where they must have been buried, but where they could not have lived.

Verify Your Quotations.

There are slips of the tongue and slips of the pen to which the best speakers and writers are liable, and we are not, therefore, disposed to be censorious. How often have Milton's "fresh woods and pastures new" been changed to "fresh fields?" Wordsworth's "primrose by a river's brim" has been rendered "cowslip on the river's brink," and sometimes "on the fountain's brim." Cowper's "cups that cheer but not inebriate" have been almost always made to appear in the singular number, really destroying the sense of the passage to a great extent. We heard a canon in Yorkminster once begin a sermon in this way: "One of our poets, Cowper, I think, has said that there are 'books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything.'"—and nobody in the large congregation appeared to be astonished. We also heard a learned professor at a college commencement dinner speak of "the still vex'd Bermoothes," and ascribe the phrase to Milton. "The cynosure of neighboring eyes" is often presented as the "cynosure of every eye," and "that last infirmity of noble mind" is generally rendered "the last infirmity of noble minds"—which possibly Milton meant to say. A preacher of our acquaintance who is usually very careful in his references, once, to his own subsequent mortification, attributed the injunction of the apostle James, "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only," to St. Paul. A common misquotation is the familiar phrase, "He that runs may read." The reference doubtless is to the words of the prophet Habbakuk, "He may run that readeth it." Buffon's phrase, "the style is of the man," is very generally put "the style is the man," which is something quite different.

Another Father Wanted.

One of our wholesale merchants has a bright little daughter, who is about 6 years of age. She is one of those little children who wants to know about everything and can't conceive how a great many things happen. She accosted her mother the other day as follows:

"Mamma, were people always on this earth?"

"No, my child."

"Then how did they get here?"

"Our forefathers were made of dust."

"Did I have four fathers, ma!"

"Yes," replied the mother, not noticing what the little girl meant.

"Well, then I'd like to get acquainted with the other three, and then maybe I'll get more spending money. This pa I've got now is awful close."

Station Names Changed.

The Grand Trunk Railway has decided on a change in the names of two of their stations. One of these is on the Georgian Bay & Lake Erie Division, and has heretofore been known as Canada Southern Junction, and will hereafter be called Port Dover Junction. The other is on the Midland Division, 106 miles from Toronto and 22 miles from Midland, and will be called "Tait" instead of Alma as heretofore.

DISASTROUS FIRE!

A $7,000 BLAZE.

SUPPOSED WORK OF AN INCENDIARY.

About half past one o'clock on Wednesday morning fire was discovered in Mason & Shanahan's carriage works, and the alarm given but not being promptly responded to, owing to it being an hour when most people are enjoying their first sleep, the fire gained such rapid headway that very little of the contents were saved. The building was a very large two-story all wood structure and burned with terrific rapidity. Mathews' harness shop, a wooden building, came next, the contents of which were all saved, but the building was burned to ashes. Joseph Lamb's blacksmith shop and dwelling, which are both wooden structures were in imminent danger and the contents all removed, but by well directed efforts the buildings were saved. On the other side stood Douglas' large three story veneered building which stood close to the carriage works; here the devouring element was faught successfuly for a considerable length of time, but, finally gained headway, taking full possession. The contents were removed but badly damaged. The next building was Dr. Sproule's block which is a solid brick and was saved without any serious damage.

LOSSES.

Shanahan & Mason had a very heavy stock on hand, having material for about one hundred wheel'd vehicles; about half of which were partly built. They lost almost everything even to their tools. Their loss will amount to $1,000,00 each, with half that amount of insurance. The building is owned by G. S. Brown and is we believe, fully insured. Mathews' loss will be whatever the building was worth, say $300.00, no insurance. Douglas' loss for building will amount to $3,500.00, insured for $1,500.00. R. M. Cummings was just commencing to work for Mason and had got his tools in the day previous and lost all; value, $125.00. John Hill lost a set of tools, $100.00. Shanahan had $5,000 in notes in his safe, but it is not yet known in what state they will come out as the safe has not yet been opened.

The night was clear and calm, had there been a wind from any direction the fire would have proved more serious, as there were buildings on all sides of the fire.

ORIGIN.

The origin is a mystery, unless it was the work of an incendiary, and there can be no cause or reason suspected for such a dabolical act. The fire in the shop was completely dead at six o'clock the previous evening so that it is considered impossible for fire to have originated from the stove.

LATER.

Shanahan's safe is now open and all the papers are safe.

DARING THEFT.

On Saturday evening last Mr. John McAleer of the City Hotel of this place had occassion to draw on his cash box, which he kept in his private room (this was shortly after dark) when to his surprise his money was gone, some $80. He at once made enquiry of his children who were at the time up stairs in an adjoining room, if they saw any person in his room, they said yes. James Tweed, a boarder had been in. Tweed was got, not being far away, and brought before the children to see if they would recognize him when they all agreed that, that was the person they saw. He, (Tweed) then acknowledged that he took the money, and at once disgorged to the amount of $70 all he had. He had keys to fit McAleer's cash box which he also gave up. The same cash box had been opened and about $35 taken just two weeks previous. Tweed is a young man of about 23 years, and has been looked upon as a respectable and honest young man, and was never known to be guilty of any such crime, furthermore it is the general opinion that he was led into the deed by others. He however left before a warrant was issued so that no chance is left to implicate those who are strongly suspected of being his accomplices.

OBITUARY.

We exceedingly regret to have this week to announce the death of Mrs. Fawcett, wife of Mr. A. R. Fawcett, editor of the Flesherton Advance. Deceased was a very sociable kind harted person, an affectionate wife, and a good christian. She has been in delicate health, and more or less predisposed to inflamation of the lungs, for some time which was the cause of her primature demise on Saturday evening last at eight o'clock. We extend to her bereaved, and devoted husband our warmest sympathies.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—I have just been advised that our representative for South Grey, Dr. Landerkin or his supporters, have scattered broadcast, numbers of the Ottawa Citizen of Feb. 10th, purporting therein, that the member of East Grey, Dr. Sproule, was very dereleit in the discharge of his duty, in relation to a memorial, ordered by the County Council of Grey on the 29th of June last. In relation to it, Dr. Landerkin says: "It thus appears that for reasons best known to himself, the member for East Grey withheld the memorial and did not present it to the Government as he was in duty bound. The duty of a representative is first of all things to look after the business and interests entrusted to him by his constituents of whatever shade of politics. It is none of his business to consult partizan convenience, etc., etc."

Again it may be noted "that while B. Allin for North Grey strongly sustained the action taken by Dr. Landerkin, Dr. Sproule never opened his mouth."

In answer to such let me say: 1st. That the memorial in question was duly handed to the proper clerk as soon as Dr. Sproule arrived at Ottawa 2nd. That during the debate, the Government made a statement of this fact to Dr. Landerkin. To any but the captious, such should have been satisfactory, but in addition; after a partizan press began to sound it, Dr. Sproule in his place in the House on a question of privilege re-asserted those facts, which statements were unchallenged by Dr. Landerkin or any other gentleman.

Now, Sir, I hold this whole proceeding was for some ulterior object; and it must prejudice any man's case to promulgate an untruth regarding another without an effort to correct it.

It is very notable that Dr. Landerkin has made himself rather rediculous regarding railroads and railroad resolutions. The Ottawa Daily Sun and the Owen Sound Advertiser will think twice before they print the ignorance manifested by him on railroad topics, as exposed by the member for Niagara, Mr. Rykert, who turned the Dr's resolution, by his amendment, to show that, by the neglect of the Ontario Government $2,000.000 were lost to the Province of Ontario.

The Dr. in his way, is a nice kind of a man; but has learned to cater to the tastes of his supporters—namely, party first at all hazards; but this time, as the saying is, he put his foot into it. Deep waters are not suitable for the Dr's heart; the only marvel is that he attempted to swim in them at all.

After the genteel handling of the Dr. by Rykert, and exposure by himself, it would have been down right folly to have answered him further. There are some men, Mr. Editor, who never need a hangman, only give them rope, they hang themselves. Such was the fact with Dr. Landerkin and B. Allin.

Walters Falls.

From Our Own Correspondent.

It is my painful duty to chronicle a sad and fatal accident which occurred on Saturday afternoon last. Levi Taylor, a lad of about 15, and another boy, were chopping in Mr. Taylor's (his father) bush near the village: Levi had chopped a tree through and ran back to get out of the way, when by some unfortunate movement he ran directly in the way of the falling tree, which fell on him with full force and crushed his young life out, as he never moved again, and only breathed once or twice. What makes the case still more afflicting the boy was the chief support of his parents who had only him and a little girl remaining with them. Be sure they have the heartfelt sympathy of all around.

My last epistle contained a passage stating what I imagined to be Mr. Wm. McQuaker's views on cognate subjects. Since then, by conversing with that gentleman, I find that I was entirely mistaken in attributing such opinions to him, his knowledge of the differential calculus and kindred subjects being very limited indeed. I therefore offer a retraction and apology for the misapprehension, and hope it will be accepted.

A week ago last Friday evening the Oddfellows of this place gave a concert, for the purpose of celebrating the first anniversary of their organization, and it was indeed a success. The Orange Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Alfred Frost, C. C. Attorney, presided with that gentlemanly urbanity and grace which distinguishes him, and said that they had met principally for enjoyment and trusted they would really enjoy themselves. The programme was excellent and most spiritually carried out. Messrs. Bush and Ferguson, the violinists, could scarcely be surpassed anywhere. Songs, duets, solos, dialogues, recitations, followed each other in rapid and pleasing succession. A great attraction of the evening was the ventriloquist from Owen Sound, whose humorous conversations with Sambo and Sally convulsed the audience with laughter, especially the younger part of it. The proceedings ended at 10 o'clock, when all pronounced the opinion that they had seldom spent a more enjoyable evening.

Priceville.

The principal public gathering that has occurred here this season was the entertainment got up by the Public School scholars, under the direction of the teachers, Mr. W. L. Dixon and Miss A. Gunn. This memorable gathering assembled in the school room on the evening of the 13th inst. The weather was favorable, the roads good, and the house was filled with people from the villiage and surrounding country. The audience was orderly and appreciative, (as is usual with Priceville audiences) and their attention was maintained without flagging for 2½ hours. Over 50 pupils from time to time took the platform and acquitted themselves in such a way that if they get up another such entertainment they will be obliged to secure a larger hall in which to hold it. The proceeds which amounted to $14.20 are for school prizes. Mr. Ferguson, I. P. S., was in the chair Rev. McLeod gave a short and pithy address at the close of the programme. The songs, recitations and dialogues were well selected, thoroughly prepared and rendered with animation and expression.

From our own Correspondent.

Married on Wednesday, 11th Feb., at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. A. Strongman, Aaron Drinkall to Miss Laeana Hurd, second daughter of Henry Hurd.

Married, James McGee, on Wednesday, 11th Feb., to Hannah Matilda Ellis, eldest daughter of Thomas Ellis. Both marriages came off very quietly and sensibly without unnecessary fuss.

Died at the residence of his son's, lot. 2, con. 4, Euphrasia, on Monday, the 9th Feb., Robert Stuart, aged 82 years. The deceased was a native of the County Tyron, Ireland, having come to Canada some 50 years since.

Fire on Monday morning, Feb. 23. The barn and stable formerly belonging to Joseph How, lot 8, con. 5, Euphrasia, was destroyed by fire, with all Mr. How's farm implements and grain, two cows and a number of sheep. The fire was caused no doubt by a lamp which Mr. How was carrying out of the stable when he slipped and partially fell. He looked at the lamp, and the glass was raised a little but thought all was right. He finished his chores, gave the lamp to the boy, and drove the team to Kimberley, about one mile distance, when the smoke was seen. Mr. How has the sympathy of the neighborhood.

STALLION TO HIRE.

HAVING a large farm to work which requires my whole attention I have concluded to lease my Stallion "Lord Byron" for the season of 1885. This is a rare chance for a reliable man, stock or good security taken in lieu of rent, the horse has proved himself a sure foal gester, and his stock has carried off the highest prizes wherever shown. Lord Byron has taken first money in open races wherever fitted, took first prize at Flesherton races in '84. For particulars apply to DAVID MADILL, Maxwell, where the horse can be seen.

Farm for Sale.

160 acres, being lots 42 and 43 second range West of Toronto and Sydenham road, Holland, about 100 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation, ballance well timbered with Maple, Beech and Hemlock, and about 10 acres cedar swamp. Good roughcast house 22x33 with stone cellar, frame barn 40x60 and good out houses, all with stone foundations. Good young orchard bearing. The farm is well watered, two good wells, one at the house, a fine spring creek crosses the farm near the rear. Only two miles from the thriving village of Williamsford, a station on the T. G. & B. branch of the C. P. R.

This is a rare chance, and terms will be made very easy. For futher particulars apply on the premises to

FRANCIS McCANN,

WE regret to learn that Mr. Wm. Glencross of Glenelg, who has served as councillor in the past, is very ill and no hopes of his recovery is entertained. His brother John died last Monday at the age of 29 years. The disease is, we understand, consumption.

R. J. Sproule's annual clearing sale which is now going on so far has been a decided success. All attending it express themselves perfectly delighted at the great bargains they have got.

THE Social held at the residence of Mr. Isaac Brown, Glenelg, on Friday evening last was very largely attended, the house which is large and capacious being well filled. A good time was spent by all. and a bountiful repast partaken of which we understand was exclusively provided by Mr. B. himself. The proceeds were $13.00.

What the ladies say: That R. J. Sproule of Flesherton is selling the prettiest and cheapest Ladies Coats and Shawls ever sold in Flesherton, as they are selling at less than half price.

TEA-MEETING.—There will be a tea-meeting held in Lyons' church, townline Holland and Euphrasia, six miles from Markdale, on Wednesday, 4th March. Several reverend and other gentlemen will address the meeting. Tea served at 6 o'clock. Tickets 25 cents. A good time is expected, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

Miss Wilson, daughter of Mr. James H. Wilson of Eugenia, proved to be the lucky winner of the lady's beautiful Astracan Fur Cap, she being the largest cash purchaser at R. J. Sproule's clearing sale Saturday last. We congratulate Miss Wilson for her success.

MISS EMMA BOLAND, a promising young lady of about 20 summers died on Monday last. She contracted a cold last autumn which settled on her lungs with above result. The body was interred in the Markdale Methodist cemetery on Wednesday by the largest funeral ever known in this district, over one hundred teams being in the procession.

A Plucky Editress.

From the Collingwood Bulletin.

The following item may be interesting to such of our Collingwood friends as had the pleasure of being interviewed by the lady when she visited Collingwood

A well-known business man in Detroit had a spirited encounter a few days ago with the energetic Miss F. E. Downs, who has for several weeks been canvassing Detroit for subscribers to her journal, published in Toronto. The gentlemans' story is as follows:

"The lady came into my office and solicited me to subscribe for her paper. I was busy, and begged her to excuse me. She persisted in her solicitations. I told her I did not wish to discuss the subject, but she was not to be put off. At length her persistency having taken the impudent turn, I intimated that it might become my painful duty to put her out of the office. She dared me to the trial and met my intimation by a vigorous declaration that I couldn't do it, you know. The affair got hotter and hotter, and, by Jove, I did chuck her out, but she was such a tigress that I was obliged to call on one of the men for help. I was at Gettysburg, but this latest battle was worse than the other by a large majority. That is, I came nearer being whipped—and by a woman. I must say that while she was most enraged her speech was lady-like and refined, only that I could see that the spirit of mischief was in her. Why, my goodness, she backed up in a corner when she dared me to put her out, and declared that she was armed and knew very well how to defend herself. She also threatened to publish something to my injury and in the struggle she dropped a book (which I have now), in which are written her opinions of sundry well-known Detroiter. Some of these unique productions are complimentary; others are quite the reverse, but all are interesting.—Detroit Free Press.

NOTICE OF DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP

NOTICE is hereby given that the partnership which has for some time past been carried on by Samuel Sarjeant and Robert Burnside, under the firm of Sarjeant & Burnside, at the village of Markdale, in the County of Grey, as butchers, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

As witness our hands this 24th day of February, A.D. 1885.

S. SARJEANT,
R. BURNSIDE.

Witness—G. W. Burnside.

P. S.—The business will be carried on in the premises occupied by the late firm in Markdale, by the undersigned, to whom all accounts and debts due the said firm must be paid, and all liabilities owing by said firm will be paid by him.

RASPBERRY LEAF TEA.

And a Dissertation on Teas Generally—The Cheap Article a Good Rat Poison.

"A half a pound of raspberry leaves and copperas, please," said Sanctuary Pete, putting two street-car fares on the counter at the round-house grocery.

"What do you mean, Sane?"

"I mean to call things by their right names whenever I find out what they are. I held a Chinaman's queue, t'other day, while he fought an Irishman, and he was so grateful that he has been selling me all about teas. That 20-cent per pound 'young hyson' which you have been selling me is nothing but a popular brand of raspberry leaves colored green with copperas and put into a tea-chest to acquire the right odor. But that's the kind I want. I can make money out of it. The last I got didn't make the best tea in the world, but it was paralysis for rats. You see I boil it until the copperas all floats to the top in a thick green scum. This I scum off, and have handy as poison. If you ever touch a rat's tail or a cockroach's heel with it, you bag your game. Before I began the skimming process the death rate in my family was pretty heavy, and that's the reason I'm a widower. While you are measuring out the leaves I'll give you what I learned from the heathen." And then he dissertated: "Whenever you hear a customer ask for green tea because that's its natural color, you may set him down as an ardent native who has placed too much confidence in some grocer acquaintance. Do you know that green or black tea can be made out of the same leaf? Dried on copper plates, the leaves turn greenish, and a little copperas and a drop of something akin to Paris green deepen the tinge. Dried in baskets, the leaves become dark, and the so-called black teas are, generally speaking, therefore, the purest and best. But a contrary notion has possessed the Hoosier tea drinker's mind, and time was when three-fourths of the tea sold here was green, but now more than half is black tea. The best grades sell at $1 a pound, but we don't get the choice in this country, and even in Japan and China your bones would soon be bleaching in the gutter if you should offer to sell such 'pizen' as that berry leaf hyson. Old Chinese gave me a package of that 'He-No' tea, such as you sell at 40 cents a half pound. You know it says on the package that it is the kind the Chinese use, but the fellow said it wasn't, and that 'twas called 'He-No' because the Chinaman he no it. Still, it's pretty good tea for Americans."—Indianapolis News.

A Complicated Question.

At the Leicestershire assizes, yesterday, a singular case of larceny was tried before Lord Justice Denman. A pensioner named Thomas Ashwell was charged with stealing a sovereign at Alestone. The prisoner borrowed a shilling from Edward Keogh, who handed him a coin in the street, near a lighted window. Keogh afterward discovered that he had given a sovereign in mistake for a shilling. The prisoner asserted that it was a shilling, and told a policeman that a sovereign which he had changed was one which he got for his pension.

The policeman afterward saw the prisoner go to the back of a house. The policeman followed, and secreted himself behind a wall. He heard the prisoner call a man, and say to him: "The policeman has been to me about that sovereign; I did have it, and have spent half of it, but I'll be hanged if he has it back." The policeman then put his head over the wall and said: "So you did have it, did you? I'm the policeman."

A legal argument then took place as to whether this constituted larceny, it being submitted that what the prisoner did was to "keep" and not to "take." The Judge said the principle involved was unprecedented, and he left three questions to the jury, which they answered in a manner which was taken to be a verdict of guilty. The Judge said the case was so important in the principle involved that he would himself take it to the court of appeal, and meantime the prisoner would be liberated in recognizances of £100 to come up for judgment when called upon after the legal question had been decided in the Court for Crown cases reserved.—St. James' Gazette.

One Man One Vote.

I am in favor of the principle of one man one vote (hear and cheers) and I object altogether to the plural representation of property. I will take my own case; I am a terrible example. (Laughter.) I have three votes for as many borough constituencies, and I have three votes for as many county constituencies. ("Shame," and laughter.) Oh! but I use them on the right side. (Cheers.) I know many of my friends who have ten or twelve, and I heard of one reverend pluralist who has twenty-three. Well, I consider this is an anomaly which is altogether inconsistent with the principle on which we stand. That principle is, that every householder, at all events, has an equal stake in the good government of the country; his life, his happiness, his property all depend upon legislation which he is equally entitled with every one else to assist in framing. If we are to make a distinction, I am not quite certain whether it is not the poor man that ought to have more votes than the rich man. (Hear, hear.) If you have legislation, it may lessen the income of the one, but it may destroy the means of subsistence of the other.—Mr. Chamberlain at Birmingham.

Fainting.

A timid person sees, perchance, some accident in which human life is possibly sacrificed, or the sensibilities are otherwise shocked. His feelings overcome him, and he faints. How are we to explain it? Let us see what takes place. The impression upon the brain made by the organ of sight creates (through the agency of special centres in the organ of the mind) an influence upon the heart and the blood-vessels of the brain. This results in a decrease in the amount of blood sent to the brain, and causes a loss of consciousness. In the same way persons become dizzy when looking at a waterfall, or from a height, through the effects of the organs of sight upon the brain.—Dr. A. L. Ranney, in Harper's Magazine for March.

A DINNER FROM THE BIBLE.

Five Courses with Wine and Music.

Somebody has been studying the Bible for a novel purpose, the result of which is told in the Charleston News and Courier as follows:

As a curiosity the annexed bill of fare is worth preserving. Taken wholly from the Bible a right royal Christmas banquet it would make. As will be seen the courses number five. The candelabra and music are specified. Each course is by its appropriate wine accompanied. Though in Palestine there is now no game, yet at this dinner quail and partridge are provided. With these the spiced wine of Canticle is prescribed. At such a dessert as this, with the sweet wines of the prophet Amos, a modern Amos would like to sit. Corresponding bills of fare from Shakspeare have been framed. This one from the Scriptures is unique. It is as follows:

PRELIMINARIES.

Spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes and the spoons and the bowls, with the bread in the basket.—Num. iv. 7, and Levit. viii. 31.

"I'M COMING, MOTHER."

The Thrilling Experience of a 4-Year-Old Eighty Feet in Mid-Air.

San Francisco Chronicle: In San Jose, Cal., not many days ago, one Mrs. William Kennedy was making anxious search for her little 4-year-old, curly-headed son, who had disappeared for the moment from the family-door-yard. Hurrying through the streets, looking and inquiring for the little runaway, her attention was directed to a crowd of people who were gazing, white and silent with awe, at a huge windmill tank, against which a long ladder was leaning. The eyes of the woman followed the gaze of the crowd, and this is what she saw: Eighty feet from the ground, holding on by his chubby legs and one arm could be seen the little fellow extending his free hand toward some pigeons that were perched almost within his reach.

His awful peril had stunned and stilled the helpless group beneath, which now parted as the mother came swiftly toward the scene. Then her firm, quiet voice was heard, raised that the child might hear: "Come down, Carl, and mamma will give you a peach." The child heard, and, looking over his shoulder, perceived his mother. Instantly he began to descend, carefully slinging, round by round, and as he neared the last, he smiled at the upturned face of his mother and said: "I'm coming, mother," and in another moment was in her arms. And then that crowd separated into small parties of one each, and melted into the distance, leaving behind them only an indistinct memory of moistened eyes and fluttering pocket handkerchiefs.

The Individuality of Children.

The moral nature and individuality of children, says Prof. Adler, should be carefully studied and respected. They are, it is true, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, but we are only the channels through which the river of life is transmitted to them. Some parents make a point of trying to mold their children into reproductions of themselves. But every child has a right to its own individuality. For instance, if a boy shows a talent for art it is a grave question as to whether it be wise for the boy's father to say; "Oh, I don't want my boy to be a painter; I mean him to be a lawyer." Or again, a youth shows an intense passion for study, but a friend of the father has an opening in his counting house, and so the instincts of genius are sacrificed to the dollar. Thus the individuality of that life is destroyed and the particular message with which it was intrusted to deliver to the world is lost.

Rents in New York City.

In a single advertisement in a New York paper seventy-three dwelling houses are offered for rent on Fifth avenue and adjacent streets. The price to each dwelling is named. A "small house" is offered for $1,200 a year, and this is the cheapest of all of them. The prices then increase at about $500 a jump, up to $3,000, $4,000, $5,000, $7,000 to $10,000 a year. Now, a man ought to have a pretty good income to enable him to pay $7,000 or $10,000 a year for his rent. The dwellings marked twenty-two feet front, and "medium," are classed among the $3,000 and $4,000 yearly rents. The $10,000 rent is designated as "magnificent."

THE DYNAMITE GANG.

The Air Full of Threats—Police Precautions—Wholesale Dismissal of Irishmen.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: The menacing letter lately received by the head master of the Eton public school mentioned to-day as the date when the chapel of the institution was to be destroyed by dynamite. The letter has been regarded as a hoax and was probably the production of some silly student, but the authorities deemed it wise to guard the building, and extraordinary precautions were taken to-day. A strong police force was stationed in and about the chapel, and the gates of the school enclosure were kept closed, so that no one but those living at the school could obtain access to the chapel. The customary services took place, but the appearance of the chapel was like that of a castle in a state of siege.

The Most Rev. Dr. McCarthy, Bishop of Cloyne, which is one of the most important dioceses in the south of Ireland, has issued a pastoral letter, in which he denounces the dynamite outrages in London and elsewhere. He inveighs against all secret and oath bound societies, and says that their works are a disgrace and a curse to Ireland.

The authorities have again been warned that St. Paul's Cathedral and the Bank of England will be attacked.

Dynamite Detective Roper has received a letter advising him to order his coffin, and assuring him he will "meet his fate" before next Saturday.

There is a growing movement in the docks and among builders and other tradesmen to dispense with the services of Irish laborers. Fifteen hundred Irish workmen were recently summarily dismissed from buildings in course of construction in East London, their fellow-workmen of other nationalities being unwilling to work beside those whom they regard as possible dynamitards. It is reported a similar movement is started at Manchester, Liverpool and other provincial centres.

ANTI-GERMAN DEMONSTRATION.

Frenchmen Can't Stand the Sight of the German Flag.

A last (Monday) night's Paris cable says: During the funeral procession of Jules Valles, the Paris Socialistic journalist, to-day, a large number of Frenchmen attacked the German Socialists in the procession and destroyed their wreath. The attack was brought about by the fact that the Germans carried the German flag conspicuously hoisted immediately in the wake of the coffin. This provoked the Frenchmen in the streets, who shouted, "Down with the German flag." The opposition soon extended to the Frenchmen in the procession. When the flag was not lowered in answer to the shouts, it was stoned and a free fight followed. Forty thousand persons attended the funeral. A great crowd of people have since assembled at the Bastile, discussing the anti-German demonstration. During the procession to the grave the police force in the neighborhood was largely strengthened in anticipation of a renewal of the disorder when the funeral procession returned. At the cemetery M. Henri Rochefort delivered a glowing eulogy on the life of Valles, and was enthusiastically cheered amid cries of "Vive la revolution sociale," and "Vive la commune."

The Dead Cardinal's Pastoral.

A Dublin cable says: On Sunday in all the Catholic churches was read, amid an impressive silence, the Lenten pastoral letter Cardinal McCabe prepared on the eve of his sudden death. The pastoral expresses indignant repudiation of the hideous attempts made for the destruction of property and innocent lives by the foul dynamite conspirators. "The object of that wicked conspiracy," said the pastoral, "is to achieve the independence of Ireland and avenge the wrongs inflicted on this unhappy country in former times. God knows, the record of its wrongs forms the blackest page in European history, but surely savage vengeance is not calculated to win God or the world to the side of this poor and afflicted country, which has no more deadly foes than the wretched men who support and countenance schemes so detestable. Deeply as I love Ireland I would gladly consent to a continuation of its greatest sorrow rather than see its redemption worked out by agencies that God and the Church anathematize." The pastoral created a profound sensation. In all the churches the other bishops denounced the dynamiters.

Why Lord Garmoyle Has Nine Toes.

Lord Garmoyle, in spite of anything that has been said, can appreciate a good story —when he tells it himself. His adventure with a cobra when in India shows him to be a man of nerve. "I was awakened one night," I heard him telling a party of friends, "by a severe pain in one of my toes. Looking down in the dim light cast by the moon I was horrified to discover that I was being bitten by a cobra, the most poisonous of reptiles. To stop to kill the snake would be to let the insidious poison do its dreadful work. I did not hesitate, however, but, swiftly snatching my revolver from beneath my pillow, with hasty aim I shot off the wounded toe, while another empty chamber instantly told of a dead cobra. I have only four toes on my left foot now, you know.—New York Correspondence Washington Post.

He Did Not Die Too Soon.

"We charge for obituaries," said an editor to whom had been submitted a long paper commenting on the death of a man.

"I thought that you would be glad to print it."

"No, it is of no interest to the majority of our readers."

"You would think so if you were to read it. It tells of the sad death of Jackson Romley."

"Who was he?"

"The man who always asked, 'Is that so?' every time any one said anything."

"Ah, then I am glad to receive it. All my readers will be glad to know that he is dead."—Arkansas Traveller.

William Leonard, a native of Wexford county, Ireland, died recently at the Providence hospital, Seattle, Washington territory, aged 106 years. He leaves a widow aged 96 years, with whom he had lived a life of domestic happiness for seventy-five years.

AUSTRALIAN WONDERS.

Tapping the Channels of Subterranean Rivers.

There are, says the Federal Australian, two magnificent sources of wealth in Australia, one of which has been imperfectly exploited, while the other is almost untapped. The first consists of the subterranean channels of ancient rivers, which have long since ceased to flow and have been buried for ages beneath the superincumbent strata through which the enterprising miner now sinks his shaft. Each of these must have been a veritable Pactolus, and their golden sands have yielded a rich return to many an adventurous company. The second source of wealth is also subterranean, and will probably prove to be far more precious than the first. We refer to the underground rivers which have their origin in the great central depression of the Australian continent, where some superficial streams and the heavy tropical rains disappear, percolating through the penetrable soil, and forming hidden reservoirs, from whence at least two great bodies of water issue southward and find an outlet in the sea. Ever and anon one of these channels is pierced by the well-sinker, and there rises to the surface a perennial spring of the precious element, in the midst of a region that is liable to be parched with drought. Such a discovery has just been made at Moree, in the electoral district of Gwydir, about 390 miles north of Sydney. Water was struck at a depth of 130 feet, and it rose 42 feet in three hours. "The value of the discovery," we are told, "cannot be overestimated, as the country in the vicinity has hitherto suffered terribly in dry seasons." The question arises whether, inasmuch as the country is beginning to be dotted with various points at which similar discoveries have been made, it would not be possible by systematic investigations to determine approximately the course of one, at least, of the subterranean rivers—that which is believed to have its outfall near Portland—so that boring operations might be conducted for the time to come in those places only where there is a reasonable prospect of success.

Cross-Eyed People.

"You would think that a cross-eyed person would overcome his sensitiveness," said an occulist, "but he seldom does. He broods over it. It grows on him. He imagines that every one he meets thinks as much about it as he does, and life often loses all attraction for him. Did you ever notice a cross-eyed man walk? No? I can tell one as far as I can see him. It imparts to his gait a certain movement peculiar to the whole class of cross-eyed people. But it is not altogether bashfulness which causes him to avoid looking a person squarely in the face. If he retained the power of sight in each of his crooked eyes, as is often the case, it would do him no good to look the ordinary way. He would be very likely to miss the object altogether. The lines of his vision would probably cross a foot or so before the object was fully comprehended, and all he would see would be the faint and shadowy outlines of a pair of ears or the rim of a hat. The place where the face ought to be would be a dismal blank. Many bright features are ruined by this fearful misfortune. Some sensitive victims never pluck up courage enough to marry. They often become selfish misanthropes, grow stingy, and leave a fortune for a horde of straight-eyed relatives who totally ignored them while they were alive to fight over. Others, with that natural yearning for the love and sympathy which are almost universally denied cross-eyed men, take what they can get in the matrimonial market. They spring at the very first chance which offers. Thus often a soulful, but cross-eyed æsthete finds himself joined to a loving, but unsympathetic, helpmeet, whose ambition never rises above the kitchen or the laundry. He loses his hopes, descends to the level of his mate, and what might have been a talented career is ended on a large box in front of the corner grocery in retailing neighborhood gossip. Occasionally you find a man with sufficient strength of mind to live down the malign effects of strabismus and come out a victor. When once a man has overcome his diffidence he becomes as bold as a sewing-machine agent. When he is courageous enough to look a woman obliquely in the face without stammering an apology for having been born he can fairly be said to be superior to his misfortune. Such a man would make a heroic soldier. Unfortunately, there are few who can do this. The ordinary man melts under the affliction like a cake of ice in a July sun.

They Felt Him.

When a well-known member of this community, now dead, was State Senator from this city, he was engaged in some very radical measures which sorely cut into many people whom he thought were in need of reform. They abused him very thoroughly, but in his honesty he maintained the fight strongly. A friend of his from the city visited him in Sacramento while the measures were pending.

"Well, what do they say of me in San Francisco?"

"They don't speak very well of you."

"What do they say about me? That's what I want to know."

"Well, they say very rough things about you. I don't care to"—— "Speak it out. Tell me how they talk."

"They call you a liar, a scoundrel, a thief, an ignoramus, an idiot—everything they can think of that's bad."

"Ah," said the Senator, rubbing his hands in glee and chuckling in perfect enjoyment, "they feel me, my boy, they feel me!"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Ex-Mayor Robinson, of Hartford, Conn., tells this of the famous preacher, Dr. Joel Hawes: "One day he came into my office and said: 'Henry, a man was in my study this morning, and, right under my own roof, told me I hadn't preached the gospel for forty years! What would you have done if you had been in my place?' I said I would have kicked him out of doors. The good old doctor—a man of peace in all respects—looked at me with a queer expression for a moment and then remarked, thoughtfully: 'I wish you'd been there, Henry!'"

OLD ELI BAB

Showing How Poor Little Tommy Went Home.

Old Eli Bab was the noted sot of the Dwyer Ford neighborhood. He was a kind-hearted man, but children were taught to shun him. The home of the wretched man, if it could be called a home, was the picture of misery. His wife was broken-hearted, and his children were miserable.

"Old Bab's in town," said a man, entering a saloon, and addressing a party of idlers.

"Then look out for trouble," some one replied. "I'd rather know that the seven years' itch was coming."

Bab came in, leading, or rather dragging after him, a little boy. The child was begging him to go home.

"Hello, fellers," said Bab. "Want a drink?"

The party of idlers promptly arose and approached the bar.

"Pa, please come on," implored the child.

"Oh, dry up, won't you! Fellers, what'll you have? Sold a cow this morning and am flush."

Taking from his pocket a shoe, nearly worn out, he struck the bar with it.

"Wife told me to have this thing fixed, as though a man's got money to throw away."

The boy pulled at his sleeve.

"Now, I want you to stop that. I've stood about as much of your foolishness as I'm going to."

The men drank. "Fill 'em up again," said Bab, striking the bar with the shoe. No one objected. The men whom he had joined would have drunk with him all day. They seemed to have no other business.

"Had you in the 'boose the last time you were in town, didn't they, eh?" asked Nat Boles.

"Yes, but that's none of your lookout. I generally pay for my whiskey, which is more than you can say and tell the truth."

"I didn't mean any harm by it. You are getting to be such a crank that nobody can say a word to you."

"That's all right. You sit around here and guzzle every day, but if I happen to come to town once in a while and get a little off, you go around singing it."

"I don't do any such a thing. I merely spoke about it just now."

"Oh, I heard of you. Fine joke for you. Why don't you drink your whiskey?"

"Reckon I want to drink with a man that talks to me as you do?"

"Yes, you'd drink with the devil."

"I'll just show you."

Taking up the glass, he made a motion as though he would throw the whiskey on the floor, but his appetite being stronger than his resentment, he drank it and said:

"I don't want to have any trouble with you, Eli. We are too good friends for that."

They sat down around the stove, for the weather was intensely cold. There is no place on earth more dreary than a saloon in a small town, but men stay there. Yes, for man will stay anywhere. When evening came Eli was beastly drunk. He had thrown away the shoe, but the boy recovered it, and to keep from offending his father by the sight of it, carried it under his coat.

"We'll go home now," he said, taking hold of the boy's shoulder.

"It's awful cold for you to attempt to walk; I'd stay in town, Eli," said a man who looked with pity upon the child.

"We don't have to walk," replied the boy. "Our horse is at the stable."

"No, my little fellow, your horse is not there. Your father sold the horse when he slipped away from you before dinner time."

The child burst into tears. His father declared that having spent all his money, and that as he could not get whiskey without it, he wouldn't stay in the infernal town. He vowed that everybody was trying to rob him, a belated but not altogether untrue reflection. "Come on," said he, "we don't care for the snow, do we, Tom?"

"No, sir."

"But if you want to stay, we'll stay."

The child, looking at him reproachfully, yet affectionately, replied, "I wouldn't stay here if I knew we'd freeze to death by going out in the snow."

"All right, Macoovey. Come on. Drunker than an owl. Full as goose, Tom."

"Yes, I know."

"What'll old lady say?"

"She won't say anything, but you know she'll cry."

"Pretty good woman, Tom. Your mother ain't she?"

"Yes, sir."

"That's what I thought. Man never has but one mother, Tom. Never heard of a man with two mothers, did you?"

"No, sir."

"That's what I thought. When a man tells you that he has two mothers, call him a liar. He may have two sisters and a front yard full of brothers, but he won't never have but one mother."

They were struggling along a lane. The child's teeth chattered. "Can't go any farther to night, Tom," said the father, stopping in a fence corner. "Just so tired I can't go any further. You go home and tell the folks not to be uneasy. I'm all right. Going, Tom?"

"No, sir."

Early the next morning a traveller dismounted to examine something he saw in a fence corner. "I will never forget that sight," said he, in speaking of it. "The boy had his arms around the father's purple neck, and had pressed his cheek close to the rough face of the drunkard. Both were dead, and on the dead man's breast there lay a little worn-out shoe."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: Many members of the Liberal party are openly expressing the belief that the best solution of the Egyptian difficulty is to hand over to Sultan Abdul Hamed the control of the Soudan. General Gordon said last August in an official communica. t on to the British Government: "If you do not make a convention with the Sultan you will never get out of the Soudan alive." This unintentional prophecy has been terribly fulfilled. Gordon is dead; the Arabs are inflamed and intoxicated with success. An alliance between Turkey and England would be humiliating to the statesman who labelled the Sultan as the "Unspeakable Turk," but it is admitted that Abdul Hamed's name and pedigree would be more potent than an English army in quelling the so-called rebellion among the fanatic Soudanese.

It is also believed that England should perform her share of the obligations entered into at the signing of the Berlin Treaty. This agreement rehabilitated Turkey on the condition that she should behave herself. Turkey has since remained very quiet, and the continental Powers argue that she should be left alone to work out her own salvation. She has formally remonstrated, through Fehmi Pasha, against England's occupation of territory which is her vassalage, and the result was that the Turkish envoy was categorically told by Lord Granville, the English Secretary for Foreign Affairs, that England proposed to run this matter for the present according to her own ideas.

Complications with some of the Continental Powers are almost certain. There is no doubt that statesmen of the Berlin school are doing their best to embroil Italy and Turkey in revenge for the former's aid to England. Turkey is just now averse to war, but is vehemently protesting against continued occupation of Egypt by England. Among the many rumors afloat, there is none more certain than the statement that Turkey has promised to garrison the Soudan as soon as the British troops retire.

The story of the messengers from Khartoum who arrived at Korti to-day, to the effect that Gen. Gordon held Khartoum on February 3rd, the day they left the city, has caused a sensation throughout England, chiefly because it accords with the persistent belief of the Mudir of Dongola that the Madhi had not yet captured Khartoum. But, notwithstanding the fact that several messengers brought the same news of Gordon, the story is generally distrusted by Government officials and the public at large, chiefly on the ground taken by Sir Charles Wilson that the Arabs were likely to tell the story best pleasing to Gen. Lord Wolseley in order to be more favorably received in the British camp.

Osman Digma's boldness increases daily, as does also the strength of his army, and it is believed that he intends making a supreme effort to capture Suakim before the arrival of reinforcements for the British garrison at that point. In any event he has 10,000 warriors, far better equipped than when he was routed by Gen. Graham at Tamanieb, and it is expected that he will vigorously oppose the British expedition now being fitted out to open the route between Suakim and Berber.

The news that El Mahdi has sent reinforcements to the Arab force besieging Kassala has raised a popular cry that a British force be sent at once to relieve Kassala. In support of this demand made upon the Government, the bravery of the garrison at Kassala in gallantly defending the place for nearly a year against large odds is pointed out as a sufficient reason alone for the sending of a British expedition to rescue them before they meet the same fate as other garrisons who remained loyal to England and were then compelled to surrender to the Mahdi.

Gen. Graham departs for Suakim on the 18th inst., with the fullest option as to the time to be occupied by the expedition in reaching Berber. It is stated that Graham intends to make forced marches to Berber from Suakim. If he encounters Osman Digma and defeats him, Graham believes he can reach Berber within 20 days. It would require 30 days to complete the journey with an army making ordinary time. In the Council of War to-day it was resolved to increase the Indian Soudan contingent to 3,500, in order to raise Graham's total effective force to 11,500. The Council also reconsidered the previous decision of the War Office declining the colonial offers of military assistance. Earl Northbrooke and the Marquis of Hartington urged the War Office to assent to the requests to embody colonial contingents in the expedition.

The Army and Navy Gazette takes a gloomy view of the position occupied at present at Gubat. The Gazette says: "The troops can neither retreat across the desert nor down the Nile. They are compelled to entrench themselves where they are and there hoard their ammunition, live on camel meat, and remain on the defensive until relieved. Masses of hostile Arabs from Khartoum," the Gazette continues, "will soon throw themselves in line between Gubat and Gakdul Wells and capture the latter place, and perhaps attack Korti itself."

The Duke of Connaught requests an assignment to service in the Soudan. He retires from his command in India on April 1st.

The report that the Mahdi's troops are marching to attack Kassala has led to a renewal of the negotiations with Italy for the despatch of an Italian expedition from Massowah for the relief of the Kassala garrison.

A gigantic trading corporation, to be called the Royal Soudan Trading Company, is being formed in London and Alexandria upon the same lines as the famous East India Company. It will claim the right to build a railway between Berber and Suakim.

A Dalka Island despatch, dated Friday says, the Nile is extremely difficult of navigation. The advance regiment has occupied Shukuk Pass. Gen. Brackenbury and the main body of the troops advance to-day.

The Press Association states, under reserve, that the War Office sent a telegram to Miss Gordon, at Southampton, on Saturday night, to the effect that Khartoum had not fallen and that Gordon was safe.

It is reported the rebels from Berber started for Metuma to reinforce the garrison there, but returned upon hearing that the Nile column was advancing. Hassan Bey's appointment will not affect the English operations in the Soudan.

Ismael Pasha, ex-Khedive of Egypt, is in London canvassing for supporters of a scheme looking to his restoration to the Khedival throne. His partisans assert that the Governments of Austria and Italy advocate the deposition of Tewfik and the replacement of Ismael. It is reported the British Government is considering a scheme to create Ismael Viceroy of Nubia, and retain Tewfik as Viceroy of Upper and Lower Egypt.

At the approaching session of Parliament the Government will ask a credit of two and a half million pounds for the Suakim expedition. It is understood the Conservatives will support the request, but will accompany their votes with a vote of censure against the Government. An early dissolution and appeal to the people is expected. It is believed the majority of the Liberals, Conservatives and Parnelites desire an early dissolution.

The Government has decided to accept the contingent from New South Wales to co-operate in the Soudan expedition.

Korti, Feb. 15.—Wolseley starts for Gakdul to-morrow.

A cavass of Ibrahem Bey Ruchdi, who left Khartoum a fortnight ago, states that Farag admitted the rebels to Khartoum. The cavass with his master went to the Government House and met Gordon coming out with Mahomed Bey Mustapha and twenty cavasses. While proceeding to the Austrian Consulate the rebels fired a volley, Gordon and Mahomed Mustapha fell dead.

Wolseley telegraphs to-day the account of the fall of Khartoum as given by a native eye-witness. The native says the Mahdi's forces entered Khartoum at daybreak on January 26th. Gordon was killed by a volley from the rebel riflemen while on the way from his headquarters to the Austrian Consulate. The Austrian Consul was killed in his residence, and the Greek Consul is held prisoner.

The Mudir is now convinced Khartoum has fallen and that Gordon is dead.

At Wolseley's request, Hassan Bey, brother of the Khedive, has assumed command of the Egyptian troops in the Soudan, with the title of Governor-General. The plan is expected to have a good effect upon the Soudanese, showing that England does not desire a conquest of Egypt.

Great activity prevails in Osman Digma's camp. The women are being armed and drilled and every preparation is being made for a stubborn resistance.

ROSSA'S ASSASSIN.

The News from Egypt Makes Mrs. Dudley Sad, but She Laughs at Rossa's Account of the Shooting.

A last (Friday) night's New York despatch says: Mrs. Dudley was very sad last evening. She had read the news from Egypt confirming the death of the gallant Gordon, and was much affected. To a reporter who called upon her she remarked that "As long as England has such sons as Gordon she has not much to fear from miscreants like Jerry O'Donovan and his crew." Her gloom was, however, somewhat enlivened by the reading of an account of the shooting of the great subscriptionist, written by himself and published in his organ, the United Irishman. She found the account intensely comical, especially with regard to the plural "we," which Rossa used in speaking of himself. The following is an extract from the article:

"She suggested that we adjourn to some place she knew, near at hand, where we could talk the matter over. We consented, and allowed her to be our guide towards Broadway. Walking on, she suddenly halted, while we were taking a pace forward, and as suddenly put a pistol to our back and fired. We turned around to meet the assault, but before we could catch her we fell and found ourselves powerless to get up. We found ourselves resting on our elbow, looking at her firing at us. We spoke no word to her or to any one else, but as she turned away we said to the men who were around, 'Wonder some man does not arrest that woman.' In a minute or so we were assisted to stand; a man gave us his arm, and with him we walked to the hospital."

"It ought to further say, 'We were very nearly frightened out of our life,'" was Mrs. Dudley's laughing comment on the narrative.

There is a discrepancy of statement as to the suspicious package sent on Tuesday to Mrs. Dudley by "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Warden Finn says that there was a harmless white powder in the box which did not explode either by concussion or upon having a lighted match applied to it. Mrs. Dudley's counsel, however, alleges that an explosion did take place, and in support of his assertion he exhibited some burned pieces of paper said to be fragments left over from the explosion.

O, Wicked Boston!

Mr. Amos A. Lawrence is a very benevolent man in Boston. He is a very earnest worker in the temperance cause also. He appeared on Friday before the Legislative Committee on Metropolitan Police, and in the course of his testimony gave Boston the following slap: "If there is any place in the world that represents Sodom and Gomorrah, it is Boston to-night. If there is any place in the next life where the punishment is more severe than any other, it must be for those who, for the sake of money, corrupt our youth and destroy their bodies and souls. You cannot conceive of the depravity until you see it."

China has hundreds of thousands of professional beggars, but not one Chinese beggar, it is asserted, has yet been found in the United States, even on the Pacific coast.

ANOTHER ASYLUM HORROR.

Disastrous Fire in a Philadelphia Almshouse.

EIGHTEEN INMATES BURNED TO DEATH.

Horrible Scenes Enacted in the Burning Building—The Victims Slowly Roasting Alive—Desperate Efforts of the Attendants to Rescue the Inmates—Heartrending Shrieks of the Perishing.

A last (Thursday) night's Philadelphia despatch says: Eighteen raving maniacs were burned to death in the insane department at Blockley Almshouse, on the west side of the Schuylkill River, to-night in a conflagration which needed nothing to make it the most horrible disaster of the kind ever known in the history of this city.

From the conflicting accounts to be obtained it appears the first alarm was given by an insane patient on the first floor of the main building named Nadine, who occupied a room adjoining the stairway and drying-room with twenty other quiet patients. He saw smoke issuing from above the door opening into the wing containing the cells. He ran to the iron-grated door fronting on the main corridor and cried out "Fire!" This fearful sound reached the ears of Joseph Schroeder, attendant of the ground floor, who was in his room, directly opposite the one from which Nadine gave the alarm. An attempt was made to put out the flames with buckets of water, and at first it was supposed the flames were only burning from the ground floor near the stairway, but in an instant it was found that the real point from which the danger came was the second floor at the top of and above the dry-room. The attendants then hastened to get all the patients from the main building, extending back from the east wing.

HORRORS OF THE SCENE.

Attendent Schroeder relates some of the horrors of the night. He says: "I do not know who sounded the alarm. As soon as I heard Nadine cry I rushed to the foot of the stairway, and after a short attempt to check the fire set to work to get out the patients. I unlocked the door of the room in which Nadine and his companions were. They ran out at once. By this time the flames were gathering in fury, and dense volumes of smoke were ascending into the upper stories. I succeeded in unlocking all the cells on the first floor and getting the inmates out. I had no time to look after them further than to run them into the yard, for the flames were getting so fierce it was almost impossible to break into the fiercely burning building. The smoke in the upper stories was so thick that breathing was impossible. While I was getting the men out, attendant William Strain was doing the same for the inmates on the second floor. I met Hannah, the nightwatchman, who was also helping, and we went up to the third story, but were driven back by the flames, which had forced their way through the stairway and were creeping along to the cells of the doomed inmates. We ran around to the other stairway near the new building on the west, and by that time some firemen had arrived. All the inmates had been got out of the second story, so that there remained about twenty-eight on the third floor, twenty in cells, and eight in the large common room on the west end. The unfortunate occupants of these cells were being smothered to death by smoke, and blistered and burned by the flames. Their cries were heartrending. Some of them cursed and swore, others laughed hideously, and others yelled with pain, with such awful cries as would have appalled the hardest heart. The firemen, myself, and a patient named Rafferty crawled on our hands and knees to such of the men as we could reach and dragged out fourteen of them, eight alive, four suffocated and two so horribly burned they died before we could get them out of the building. We could not see any of the men in the cells, but we could hear their horrible cries above the roaring of the flames as they came to realize that a horrible fate was in store for them."

While Schroeder was going through this terrible experience the flames were extending to the main building of the department. The wing in which the victims were being burned alive was wrapped in flames, which were shooting many feet into the air and illuminating the city.

TERRIBLE STORY OF AN ATTENDANT.

Ward M, in which the unfortunates met their death, was in charge of Wm. Strain, who had his face singed before he could escape. Strain tells a terrible story. He says: "The rules of the institution require all the inmates to retire at 8 o'clock. I had just succeeded in getting 37 men under my care to bed, and had sat down to make out my usual report when somebody rushed into my apartment and shouted 'Fire!' In an instant the utmost confusion prevailed. Smoke came rolling up the stairs in volumes, and before we could realize our position the flames burst in upon us. Sixty-one occupants of bed-rooms all managed to make their escape downstairs. The rooms were not locked and there was nothing to prevent them escaping. The flames spread with terrible rapidity. I tried to reach the cells where 19 of the most violent patients were confined. I knew they would be roasted to death if the doors were not unlocked. Smoke and flames poured into the ward, and before I advanced far I was driven back, and had to fly for my life. I barely got out alive. I could hear the poor fellows in the cells hallooing and cursing like demons. The thought of their being slowly roasted alive, coupled with their curses and piercing cries for help, was terrible. I could hear their kicking and pounding, but they might as well have tried to get through a stone wall, as the cells were constructed with the especial view of confining desperate and violent patients. The other inmates were organized into a fire brigade. They shouted and encouraged one another, and were of valuable assistance in trying to fight the flames during the early stages."

Watchman Hannah said: "While passing through a bed-room, from which I had driven six men the moment before, I found two of them had returned to their beds, though the fire was dropping down on them from the ceiling. I compelled them to leave, and then helped to get about thirty feeble men out of the infirmary."

The six hundred and thirty inmates who were turned out of the various wards were as far as possible provided for in out-wards and other parts of the almshouse. Many of them, however, escaped into the city and wandered about the streets, where some were captured by the police and were either returned to the institution or locked in the station house. All were finally cared for. Of nine bodies recovered only three apparently died from burns, the others evidently being suffocated. There were absolutely no means of subduing the fire. An investigation will be held immediately. The buildings were erected in 1830.

in which you are wallowing, on account of some of those diseases peculiar to you, madame, and which have robbed you of the rosy hue of health, and made life a burden to you, you can easily get out of. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will free you from all such troubles, and soon recall the rose-tint of health to your cheek, and the elasticity to your step. It is a most perfect specific for all the weaknesses and irregularities peculiar to your sex. It cures ulceration, displacements, "internal fever," bearing-down sensations, removes the tendency to cancerous affections, and corrects all unnatural discharges. By druggists.

A great mind, without the nutrition of adversity, would starve.

In the Hour of Need

You do not want to try experiments, but resort to the old and well tested means that afforded relief in the past. When your corns ache don't take the first article offered to you for the purpose, viz., to remove the troublesome corns and to do this without pain, and do it promptly. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor has been used for many years. It has never be known to fail. Putnam's Extractor makes no deep holes in the flesh, hard to heal and more troublesome than the original discomforts. It works nicely and efficiently.

The Queen is suffering from bronchitis. She will return to Windsor on Monday.

Failure Impossible

When Polson's Nerviline is used for pain. It matters not of how long standing it may be, or how often other remedies have failed to afford relief, Nerviline, the great pain cure, does its work promptly. Buy a 10 cent sample bottle, and try it for internal or external pains. You will be convinced of its extraordinary power in relieving pain. Ten cent bottle and large bottle 25 cents, at all druggists. Take no substitute.

While Carey Williams was waiting for customers behind the counter of a store at Americus, Georgia, Miss Ada Breedlane walked up to him and said: "Come on, I want you to marry me." Carey was nearly overcome with astonishment, but finally found voice enough to plead that he did not have on his Sunday clothes. The determined husband-catcher, however, wouldn't take this for an excuse, but, saying "Never mind your clothes," took him to the office of a justice of the peace, who quickly made them one. Judging from this interesting sample, the Georgia girl doesn't stand on ceremony when it's a question of getting a husband. Georgia ought to become a great State for bashful young men.

He warned a young brother to run, which he did, returning to find his brother's head fairly jambed into his shoulders, death having been instantaneous.—Durham Chronicle.

Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Hands, or Old Sores of any kind that cannot be healed? Even though it be of years standing McGregor & Prrke's Carbolic Cerate will cure it. Beyond the shadow of a doubt it is the best healing compound ever known. Boils, Festerings, Frost Bites, Burns or any Skin Trouble, are alike cured by it. Sold at 25 cents by Hill Bro's. D. & J. 4

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

Over $400,000.00 has been deposited in the Clarksburg p. o. savings bank since it began. This is somewhat surprising, but such is the case. Money deposited in p. o. saving banks is generally surplus cash deposited by farmers pricipally, and it shows what wealth there is in the soil.—Thornbury Standard.

A GOOD RECORD.

Among the many thousand bottles of Hagyard's Yellow Oil sold annually in Canada, not one has ever failed to give satisfaction. It cures rhumatism, colds, and all painful complaints and injuries.

A CASE arising from a charivari near Elmwood a short time ago was tried before the magistrate in Hanover on Saturday last. There were no less than thirteen persons interested. They were charged with being "a tumultuous riotously assembled," to which they pleaded guilty, and were each fined twenty-five cents and costs, making in all $4.80.—Hanover Post.

WELL AS EVER.

Lottie Howard writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "My system became greatly debilitated through arduous professional duties; suffered from nausea, sick headache and biliousness. Tried Burdock Blood Bitters with the most beneficial effect. Am well as ever.

DANGER IN THE AIR.

In the chilling winds, the damp atmosphere and suddenly checked perspiration, colds are lurking. Hagyard's Pectorial Balsam cures colds, coughs, asthma and bronchitis and all complaints tending towards consumption.

AN EXCELLENT REPORT.

Hon. Jos. G. Goodridge, of Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:—"I cannot express myself in sufficiently praiseworthy terms of Burdock Blood Bitters which I have used for the past two years with great benefit."

MARKHAM, Feb. 20.—The post office here was entered by burglars on Wednesday night. The office was completely ransacked, the letters in each mail department being overhaled, and every drawer in the building searched. Enterance was effected through a side window, and then through the delivery wicket to the inner apartment. Nothing was stolen, not even a 3c. stamp, as the postmaster had all secured in a safe at his residence.

USEFUL TO KNOW.

Everyone should know that Hagyard's Yellow Oil will give prompt relief; apply externally will stop any pain; and taken internally cures colds, asthma, croup, sore throat and most inflammatory complaints.

A Straight Shot.

"It beats all what skill some people can attain," said Smith.

"What induced you to make such a queer observation?" said Mrs. Smith.

"Why, I saw a fellow down town throw water from a bottle through an inch auger hole ten feet distant, and every drop of it passed through the hole without wetting the sides. Of course, the feat possesses no importance, except the careful practice necessary to perform it."

"I should think," said Mrs. Smith, "that it would be a difficult feat. How in the world do you suppose he ever learned to do such a thing? Must have belonged to a fire company, didn't he?"

"No," said Smith quietly; "he belonged to the Morman church, and acquired his skill by firing soothing syrup into his babies."

COSTLY STUMPING—The trial between Brit and Godfrey respecting the burning of Garyowen has been concluded in favor of Godfrey. Brit set fire to the stumps in his field during the day time in Sept., which was the cause of the burning of Godfrey's dwelling house, out-buildings and otherwise damaging his property. Godfrey entered an action of damages to the amount of $1000. The case was given over to be settled by arbitration, and placed in the hands of three farmers, but their decision did not come up to Godfrey's expectations as they only allowed him about $250. By some means he managed to get the case placed in the hands of three Owen Sounders for arbitration, and after many days had been spent in examining a great "cloud of witnesses" Brit was presented with an account of nearly $1000, Godfrey's share being about double of that allowed him by the farmers.—O. Holland Council.

The Council met on the 7th inst. Members all present. The communications received from Wm. Brown, Markdale, in regard to giving a bonus to a railroad from Durham to Meaford, was laid on the table. John Douglas was refunded $1.25—taxes over paid. On motion the Auditors' report was adopted—each to have $6 for their services. A grant of $10 was given to S. Watson, who is in indigent circumstances. The Reeve and Dep. Reeve were appointed a committee to investigate the Treasurer's security. The account of C. W. Rutledge was ordered to be paid. Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Shute, That we ask for tenders for the township printing, and the Clerk will receive them up till the 4th of March. The Reeve asked for applications for the office of Assessor, when the following applications were made: J. C. Kennedy, $65; John Bain, $60; W. S. Williscroft, $90—John Bain's was accepted. Applications for the office of Clerk was also asked for, when the following persons made application: A. M. Anderson, $140; John McDonald, $125; Wm. Breen, $120—the old Clerk was retained at a salary of $145. By-law appointing Assessor and Clerk was then passed. Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Galbraith, That Geo. Little get an order for $55 for collecting. On motion, the matter with regard to the Board of Health was left over till next meeting of Council. Council adjourned to March 24th.

Yours truly,
W. J. ROWE,

A word from Halton.

The following clipped from the Thornbuay Standard will be read with interest :-

"The other day we met with two persons, highly intelligent and life long residents of the County of Halton. We interviewed them on the ScottAct in Halton. We interrogated them in all possible ways. They pronounced in favor of the Act. When first carried they were doubtful of its efficacy, but the longer it continued in force the more they thought of it. One was what is commonly known as a moderate drinker in the respectable form of the term. We said to him that it surprised us that if the Act worked as well as he said it did, it was not carried by a larger majority the second vote than 180. He explained that the License Victuallers of Canada deluged the County with money. He was for years a Deputy Reeve of the Township. He knew what elections were. He was acquainted with corruption, but in all his life he never knew anything like the second election over the Scott Act in Halton. He knew personally of $19,000 being spent at one pomt. Were he to give a rough candid guess he would be safe in saying that not less than $200,000 was spent by the License Victuallers. They were that in the License Victullers, perfectly confident of success. Hundreds took bribes, and afterwards went to the polls and voted against the repeal of the Act. Were a vote, a fair honest vote to be taken now, the majority in favor of the Act would be simply overwhelming. He knew whiskey was even yet sold and drank on the sly. He knew back doors, the closets and the cellars. But even they are fast becoming things of the past, and a better epoch is coming. He with many of his farmer neighbors now go to the market, sell their grain, stay at the hotels and enjoy themselves. They take beef tea, coffee, oysters, &c. With two or three glasses of beef tea in them they returned home at night and can go to bed without a feeling of supper, sleep a sound refreshing sleep. It used not to be so. Instead of treating the boys after his election at the hotels to whiskey, they now take kindly to beef tea, luncheon, coffee, &c. And even the hotel keepers are beginning to like the Scott Act. The old bar is being altered, and the hotels now are being fit for even boys to go into. He has taken his wife and family of five children into the hotel and treated the seven to beef tea and biscuit all for 50 cents. It pays the hotelkeeper, and it pays him. He never was a bigot. He has no ill will towards a man simply because he keeps a hotel, but he must say that the Scott Act in Halton has by its working forever convinced him that whiskey selling is an awful curse, and can easily be done away with without any loss at all to the hotel keeper, but on the other hand it will be a great gain to him in wealth in respectability, in everything. To illustrate. About two weeks after the late municipal election he met two Methodist clergymen with their wives. It was a bitter cold day. The five went to the hotel. He treated all hands to beef tea and biscuit. They sat at a table in a warm comfortable room. Both clergyman treated. The cost was $1 The hotel keeper was satisfied. They were pleased beyond satisfaction. All was orderly. No drunken men around, No profanity. No whiskey. He says, if you carry it in Grey don't look for much at first. Stick to it. Reforms never work satisfactory at first, but blessings will come by and by.

GARRISONED BY WOMEN.

A Historic Tragedy of a Little Hamlet in the Carpathian Hills.

A quiet little valley, shut in on every side by dark hills; a long, low, many-windowed building far below, with red roof and white walls, past which—barely visible at this height—curve the slender iron threads of the railway; a painted paliside across the road about 100 yards beyond it, marking the point where the Austrian Empire ends and the Principality of Roumania commences; a few tiny cottages a little further down the valley (each encircled by its own pool of filth) which are the sole representatives of the "Predeal" that makes such a figure in the local maps. Probably not one foreigner in a hundred has ever heard of even the name of Predeal, but among the native population it has gained an imperishable renown from the memory of a great crime and a fearful tragedy. When the armies of Russia came swarming through the Carpathian passes in 1849, to crush by sheer weight of numbers the gallant Hungarians, whose valor had swept away the blustering tyranny of Austria like chaff before the whirlwind, it was by way of Predeal and the Tomos Corge that the destroyers advanced upon the doomed town of Kezdi Vasarhely. But even these grim soldiers were chilled with a nameless horror at the first sight of the town. Not a living soul was to be seen. Every house was fast shut and barred, and the only sound heard was the dismal toll of the church bell, which seemed to be lamenting over the dead. And well it might, for every man of the population had fallen in the last battle of that morning, and the houses were garrisoned only by women and children, who had sworn not to survive the ruin of their country. Shaking off their first terror, the soldiers began to force the doors of the nearest houses, and the final tragedy began. Every house became a fortress, from which stones, boiling oil, and scalding water rained down upon the assailants, heaping the forsaken streets with the dying and the dead. Savage yells, shrieks of anguish and the ceaseless crackle of musketry filled the outer air, while the mournful bell boomed dreamily through the uproar; but those within fought in stern silence, neither giving nor asking mercy. Till nightfall this superhuman combat raged, and then the wearied slayers began to hope that their work was done. But just then a shower of firebrands, cast from the church tower overhead, by the crippled boy who had tolled the death-knell, fired the dry roofs of the houses, and the whole town was soon one red and roaring blaze, in which victors and vanquished perished together.—Correspondence Philadelphia Press.

Superstitions About the Blind.

The superstitions about blind people are so many and so queer as to seem to belong to the sixteenth rather than to the nineteenth century, says the Principal of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Blind. Many well educated persons suppose that the blind can see in the dark, and that they can hear to a supernatural extent, and some who are not particularly learned profess to believe that they exert an evil influence over children. It is a theory that the pleasure of smoking depends on the satisfaction derived from seeing the smoke and fire. As a matter of fact, we have inmates who enjoy nothing so much as tobacco. In some cases we have had trouble in curing patients addicted to the use of the weed, and, altogether, I think there is sufficient evidence to disprove the fire and smoke idea. People acquire the art of smoking after their eye-sight has been destroyed.

The general make-up of the blind and those that can see is the same. A great number of blind people have lost the use of their eyes before they were three years old. When they grow up they develop characteristics that one might suppose would only come from the ability to see and compare. The little blind girls, who have not much recollection of what things in the world look like, get somewhere or other a love of dress, and they display all the vanity of the every-day child, who can see and admire itself in the looking-glass. They learn to know what colors suit them, and insist on being at their best. You will, perhaps, think it strange that they who cannot see appreciate the existence in others of sight, which to them, must be inexplicable and inconceivable, but it is so, and I cannot pretend to account for it. You would think that on their appearance in a public place they would imperfectly realize that other people could know what they were doing without touching them. Yet when our people give exhibitions of calisthenics and gymnastics they display before going before the spectators every symptom of stage-fright. It is a mistake to suppose that nature compensates for blindness by making the other senses [illegible] is a superstition that a blind man can attain a nicer sense of hearing and touch than a man who is blessed with the use of his eyes. There have been many pretty things said about the beneficence of a system that divided the energy that belonged to a lost sense among the senses that remained. It is true that a blind person learns to tell a good deal that is going on by his sense of hearing. He can tell people by their footsteps, but any one can learn to do this if he will take the trouble that a blind man is willing to take in acquiring it. I have tried it myself and have succeeded. At one time, after I had devoted some attention to the matter, I could tell a large number of the pupils by their knock at my door, and even now I recognize the taps of many of them.—Philadelphia Press.

The Lunatic Quiz.

Oh, say can you see by the dawn's early light
What you failed to perceive at the twilight's last gleaming;
A crazy conceit that through the long night
O'er the bed where you slept was so saucily streaming?
The silk patches so fair,
Round, three-cornered and square,
Give proof that the lunatic lodgi lit is there.
Or, the crazy-quilt man a triumphantly raves,
And maid, wife and widow are bound as its slaves.

Debate.

Chatsworth correspondent in O. S. Advertiser.

THE great match debate between the Meaford and Chatsworth Debating Societies came off in the Town Hall here on Friday evening last and resulted in a victory for Chatsworth. Thomas Gordon, Esq., School Inspector for North Grey, occupied the chair. The speakers on behalf of the Meaford Society were Messrs. J. McMillan, H. T. Law and J. J. Johnson, and on behalf of the Chatsworth Society Messrs. J. McDonald, Dr. McCullough and W. B. Simpson, all in the order named. The subject was, "Resolved, That women should be placed on the same footing as men with regard to voting, eligibility to the public office and all other franchises," and the Meaford men took the affirmative, that being the choice. It is impossible to give even an outline of the arguments advanced (for the debate occupied two hours and ten minutes), but it is generally conceded that the subject was well handled by both sides, and that if the speakers did not get to the bottom of the queston they were not very far from it—at least not much farther than some of those orators who awaken the halls of our legislatures over it, and whoes utterances appear so very wise when we read them in the daily papers. The chairman, while admitting that his own opinions were not favorable to the so-called "woman's rights" movement, said that the strongest arguments had been advanced by the negative—that the position they had taken was in fact impregnable—and gave his decision accordingly. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and so intense was the interest of everybody that during the whole debate a pin could have been heard drop.

FINDING HIS INFANT SON.

The Hard Fortune of an Aged Finlander Found in This Country.

About two and a half years ago Jacob Karnele, a young Finlander, arrived in California, and found employment with a vine-grower. He soon, however, became insane, and word was sent to his father in Finland, and in due time his father arrived and started with his son for New York on their way back to Finland. On the night they started, the son, who did not recognize the father, disappeared. He was found, however, and did not escape again until their arrival in Philadelphia. A second time he was found, and the pair continued their journey to Jersey City, where they were to take ship. This was about a month ago. One evening after the old man had been sitting with his son in a saloon he got up and started to go to their hotel. He was followed by one of Jersey City's gangs of hoodlums, who knocked the old father senseless and robbed him of all the money he had on this side of the Atlantic. At the first attack of the gang, the son, uttering a scream of fright, broke from his father's grasp and fled. The police found the father later, and cared for him. When he had recovered consciousness it was evident to the police that he was almost frantic to tell them something, but they could not understand his language, and could not even tell what language it was. More than twenty-four hours elapsed before a man could be found in Jersey City who could interpret his story. Then he was kindly cared for, and search was made for his son. He could not be found.

The old man sent to Finland for more money, and in the meantime resumed the search for his son as best he could without money, friends, or a knowledge of English.

Toward the middle of last month a story was published that a mysterious person was frightening women in New Brighton Staten Island. Two women who were passing St. Mark's place one night were pounced upon and frightened half to death. A family living in a lonely street were sitting at supper one evening, when a tapping was heard at the window. A head of shaggy hair and a grinning face was seen peering into the room. They screamed and the face disappeared. The intruder could not be found. It is also said that this is the tramp through whose hat Mrs. Gordon sent a bullet from her pistol. At all events, the frightener of women was finally arrested, and was sent to the Kings county penetentiary for vagrancy and disorderly conduct. He could speak little English. Although his answers were wild, it was concluded that he was not really insane. He would not tell his name.

About ten days ago the old man who had been robbed in Jersey City called upon Dist. Atty. Gallagher, of Richmond county, and introduced himself as Jacob Karnele. By the aid of an interpreter he related his story, and said he believed the man who had been sentenced to prison for frightening women was his crazy son. He was sent to Crow Hill penitentiary in Kings county, and there he found that his suspicions were correct.

Last week Justice Pratt ordered young Karnele to be released. A remittance had arrived from Finland, and father and son sailed for home on Saturday.

LUNCHEON DISHES.

Sardine Toast.—Drain all the oil from the fish, free them of bones and bruise them to a paste. Dust a little pepper through and a little lemon juice, spreading over slices of crisp toasted bread.

Cutlets of Quail or Partridge — Cut the breasts from the quail or other dry meat bird, and at the small end of each insert a neat little piece of leg bone to look like cutlets. Dip into melted butter. season, roll in cracker crumbs and fry in hot butter, or broil if preferred. Serve with French peas in center of dish.

Cheese Tarts.—Take the yolks of two fresh eggs, three dessert spoonfuls of cream, a speck of cayenne pepper, a heaping tablespoonful of grated Parmeson or English cheese and a little salt. Beat these ingredients to a smooth paste; have made some tart shells of puff paste, fill with the mixture and bake in a quick oven until a light brown color.

Curry of Cold Fowl.—Two large onions, two apples, two ounces of butter, a large teaspoonful of curry powder, one teaspoonful of flour, half a pint of gravy, one tablespoonful lemon juice, two tomatoes, about a cup of cream or rich milk. Fry the fowl and onions in the butter, put into a stew pan, adding the gravy with the cooked apples, lemon juice and paste of curry powder and flour. Serve with hot boiled rice.

Stewed Beef Kidney.—Split open and free it of all fat; cut in very small pieces and wash carefully in cold water, then let it stand in salt and water about an hour to extract the blood. Have an onion chopped fine; cover with boiling water which must be poured off after the first few minutes boiling. Pour on more water and cook slowly for an hour; thicken the gravy with a little flour, adding a small lump of butter, pepper and salt to taste.

Fried Hare.—Wash carefully, then let stand in salt and water to draw out the blood. Cut up as you would a chicken, dry each piece in a cloth, dip into flour and fry in hot butter or drippings. A cream gravy of rich milk thickened with flour and butter, then well seasoned and poured over the rabbit, makes a tempting dish with but little to distinguish it from chicken if perfectly sweet and fresh.

GENERAL STEWART.

The Sad End of a Brave and Honored Soldier.

Gen. Sir Herbert Stewart, whose death in the Soudan from a bullet wound received at the battle of Abu Klea where, with a handful of men, he defeated 10,000 Arabs, was announced recently, was the eldest son of Rev. E. Stewart, the late rector of Sharsholt, near Winchester in Hampshire. He was born in 1842, and entered the British service in 1863. Five years later he was appointed a captain in the 3rd Dragoon Guards. After holding several appointments on the staff, he brought himself into prominent notice during the late troubles with the Beers in the Transvaal, and was taken prisoner with others in the disaster at Majuba Hill. On his return to England he held some less prominent appointments, but in 1882 he volunteered for service in the first Egyptian campaign, obtaining the rank of chief of the staff of the cavalry brigade under Gen. Sir Drury Lowe, and will be remembered as the leader of the renowned rapid advance on Cairo after the eventful being the first to enter the Egyptian capital, and to whom Arabi Pasha, his staff, and such of his army as were with him surrendered themselves as prisoners. For these services he was rewarded by the Queen with substantial promotion. On the outbreak of the troubles in the Soudan he assumed command of the cavalry brigade in the expeditionary force under Sir Gerald Graham, and so distinguished himself during the campaign that on his return to England he was promoted to the rank of colonel, and was made a K.C.B He subsequently was appointed to the command of the corps of marines selected to assist the Irish constabulary in quelling disturbances in that country, and on its being decided to send an expedition for the relief of Khartoum, Col. Stewart again placed his services in the hands of the government. His gallant conduct in Egypt, his victory at Abu Klea, his death wound, and the fatal termination are the last painful chapters in the life of an English soldier who, knowing what his duty was, did it with his whole heart, giving his youth, his manhood, his experience, and personal courage, and, last of all, his life also for his beloved England.

DOWNFALL OF TEL-EL KEBIR,

The reason why "Myrtle Navy" tobacco has taken so strong a hold upon the smoking community is because it is the genuine article. No man has a desire to smoke anything else than tobacco. Even opium is not smoked for the pleasure of smoking it but for its soporific effects. The desire for tobacco is, of course, best satisfied by getting the pure article, and when to this is added the finest quality the satisfaction is complete. These two things are combined in the "Myrtle Navy."

Uncle: "Well, Ethel, you've been looking at the fire a long while. What do you see there?" Ethel (dreamy little dear): "Oh, all sorts of things, uncle—faces and people." Johnny (practical, with an eye to "tips"): "Do you see the face of anybody there who'd give you half a dollar?"

What! Limping Yet?

Why should you go limping around when Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor will remove your corns in a day. It will give almost instant relief and a guaranteed cure in the end. Be sure you get the genuine Putnam's Corn Extractor, made by Polson & Co., Kingston, for many substitutes are being offered, and it is always better to get the best. Safe, sure, painless.

There before the boudoir dresser,
With an anima ed face
Holding fast a sponge and bottle,
In her girlish glee and grace,
She exclaims: 'Oh I am saintly,
For 's not the proverb sung,
Worded thus so very quaintly,
Yes, the truly good die young.'"

DRAFT HORSES.

The following is a synopsis of a lengthy article which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, consisting of interviews of its reporters with the leading draft horse dealers of America. It was headed as follows:

"Breeding of Draft Horses—One of the Important Industries of the Day—Experience of Dealers who Handle 40,000 Horses Annually—Relative Merits of Percheron, Clydesdale and English Horses—Opinions of all Leading Dealers in New York and Chicago—They are unanimous in preferring the French Breeds over all Others, as they are more enduring, best dispositioned, stand the pavements best and bring higher prices."

The Tribune reporters were instructed to procure opinions as to the relative merits of the different breeds of draft horses being raised in this country and sold in their markets. The experience of dealers who sell perhaps 40,000 horses annually directly to those who buy them to wear out was thus obtained. This information is of immense value to those engaged in breeding horses.

Mr. I. H. Dahlman, of New York City, said: "I handle between 9,000 and 10,000 horses annually. Of the draft horses I handle, the greater proportion—nearly all—are Norman-Percherons. These horses are docile, intelligent, easily broken, steady in harness, powerful and compactly built. They are short in the back, deep in the body and broad in the chest. They have the best feet of any horses in America. I do not want it understood that all Norman horses have these good qualities. I have seen some imported that were as badly shaped horses as could be found. Long in the back, narrow waisted and not worth their freight from France here. That class of horses is only imported by people who buy them to sell and not to breed." In regard to the Clydesdale horses Mr Dahlman said: "I will give you no criticism. I buy very few of them. I prefer to pass their stable and say nothing about them. From what I have said the Tribune readers, I think, will understand what breed of horses I would recommend them to raise."

C. & H. Hayman, East 24th Street, New York city said: "We handle about 2,000 horses a year, principally draft horses of all kinds—French, Clydesdale, English and Belgian. We handle more of the French than of any the others because the people like them better and will give higher prices for them than for any other breed. They have more endurance and are the best dispositioned horses we have. They mature sooner and are ready for the market younger than the other breeds. The Clydesdales are not so well shaped nor are their feet so good. We advise the farmers of the west to breed to the finest and best bred Percherons to be found."

The above opinions were the expressions of all the other dealers interviewed, with one or two exceptions. The object of all farmers who breed horses for use or for market, is to obtain animals that will mature the earliest and bring the most money. In order to accomplish this purpose with the greatest degree of certainty the use of the finest and best bred Percheron Stallions is recommended and advised by nearly all the dealers. The finest specimens are recorded with their pedigrees in full in the Percheron Stud Book of France.

Storm Signals.

As the coming of a great storm is heralded by the display of cautionary signals, so is the approach of that dread and fatal disease, Consumption of the Lungs, usually announced in advance by pimples, blotches, erruptions, ulcers, glandular swellings, and kindred outward manifestations of the internal blood poison, which, if not promptly expelled from the system, attacks the delicate tissues of the lungs, causing them to ulcerate and break down. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the great remedy for this, as for all diseases having their origin in bad blood. It improves the appetite and digestion, increases nutrition and builds up the wasted system.

"Ah, yes," said an old fellow, "when I was a young man like you I admired a pretty girl as much as anyone; and, if I do say it, was very popular with the young ladies. But accumulating years and a wife and family have taught me—" Here he hesitated "Well, what have accumulating years and a wife and family taught you?" "Caution my boy, caution."

Young or middle-aged men, suffering from nervous debility or kindred affections, should address, with three letter stamps for large treatise, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

Mr. Minks: "My dear, you should not put coins in your mouth, for diseases are often caught that way." "Well, I am sure I'm in no danger from the money you give me," replied Mrs. Minks. "And why not, pray?" "Because you always squeeze a quarter hard enough to crush all animal life out of it before you part with it."

For diarrhoea, cholera morbus, dysentery and bloody-flux, colic or cramps in stomach, use Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed. Specific, also, for breaking up colds.

"I would rather you did not go to skate, Edward; I don't think the ice is safe," said a fond mother. "You needn't be afraid of my getting drowned: I can swim." Fond Mother: "It's not that I am afraid of your getting drowned; but if you were to get in, just think what an awful cold you would have."

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

Intending purchaser of horse (doubtfully): "What makes him lay his ears back like that?" Dealer (more in sorrow than in anger): "Lor, sir, that shows what a sensible 'animal he is, sir. He's listening to all what we says about him."

"Mamma; who tore Mr. Bland's hair all out?" said little Mabel. "Hush, child, you mustn't speak of such things. Papa is bald, too, you know." "Yes, but I want to know who tore Mr. Bland's hair all out; he isn't married."

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel opposite Grand Central Depot. 600 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

"So I may really have the next waltz?" said a Harlem dude to a married belle, the other night; "it's so good of you Mrs. M. I know how rarely you'll consent to waltz with any body. I am greatly favored." "Not at all, Mr. Lahdedah. I don't object to waltzing, in general; it is only my husband's absurd jealousy, you know. But I'm sure he won't mind my taking a turn with you, you know."

A Description of Metemneh.

It is easy for any one who has seen an yptian or Nubian village to realize the pearance of Metemmeh, but difficult to ture it intelligibly without such exrience, says the London Daily Telegraph's special correspondent in the Soun. Berber, Shendy, and even Kharm, if we except the government ildings, are compact clusters of mud s or nearly as rude construction as r man made to shelter himself. Singly e dwellings are about three yards g, two or three wide, six or seven feet h. The poorest, which is to say the k of them, are without doors or wins, without chimney, without sub-diion, and without even pretense of furure. But then fires are little needed; to light, the native bathes in it out of ors, and of the comforts and convenices of civiliz d life he has no idea. The elling of the village Arab can, hower, hardly be thought of singly. One -roof serves for several houses; they so compacted together that a dozen or re of them are usually joined in a labnth of mud walls; and if there be thing to vary, it can hardly be said to eve their monotonous appearance, it he oddity of the flat roof, where the d-working Arab woman stores her sun ed dung and keeps her always famish-looking fowls. A hole for admission his hut suffices for the Arab of to-day apparently it did centuries ago. Possi a few palms grow round the outskirts throw their grateful shade and the asant contrast of their foilage over the gy monotone of unbaked clay. Imne an assemblage of 1,000 to 1,200 nties such as these, arranged in a long straggling line, and peopled by 6 000 000 of the mixed tribes to be found the banks of the Nile—Arabs, negroes Berberines—and we have Metemmeh. the native census the town is credited h 3,000 males, the women and child being enumerated, and this computan is probably not excessive, because nding at the end of the great caravan k from Ambukol it is the principal dezvous of the caravans between artoum, lower Egypt, Berber, and kin. A line of low hills lie behind Metmeh and shield it from the encroachnt of the ever-advancing desert; while ween it and the Nile is a strip of land dered fertile by the inundation of the r. In later times Metemmeh with its ik and dervish, its caravan traffic, and well supplied market, seems to have en the place of the neighboring town Shendy, which in bygone times was lace of eminence, one of the capitals of kingdom of Sheba, and a centre of lizati n. But the culture and civilizan and industry of the old kingdom of roe, the Sheba probably of the old tament, have passed away, and nog remains of them but, the ruins of pyramids not far from Shendy, and ir place has been taken by a withering aticism and fatalism, under whose innce industry and civilization, as well the area of cultivated land and the mbers of the people, have declined to r present low ebb. In even later s Shendy was a flourishing mart, ugh which the great caravans passed heir way from Sennaar to Egypt. It then a population of 7,000 people; they barely number two thousand, its commerce is a thing of the past. fter leaving Shendy, the only town ny importance before reaching Kharm is Halfiyeh, now a mere relic of its ient greatness. Time was when it 15,000 inhabitants; it has now prob a fifth of that number. The Hasieh tribe, who abound here, are war: the people of Halfiyeh were the to begin, and they have been the t persistent to continue, the beleag ment of Gen. Gordon.

Western Men on the Nile.

is said that a number of western and hwestern steamboat men are prepar to submit to Minister West, the esentative of Great Britain at Washon, a proposition to furnish steamers manage them for the transportation e proposed English relief expedition e Soudan The men who are willing mbark in this enterprise have had s of experience in navigating some of roughest of the western and northern rivers. They contend that the , with steamers properly built, can more easily navigated than some of rivers of this country which are larly navigated.

e plan of these men is, in the event get a contract with the British govment, to take a large number of ed workmen to some point on the where the material can be most y procured—and which would best the British officers and commanders d there build light draught steamers ted to the navigation of that river. project, in all its details, will, it is be submitted to Minister West, ed by men of means and experience, will pledge themselves to have the ners ready in a very short time, and transport the British troops and tions of war to such points along the as is deemed necessary.

cavations conducted at Sunium by German Archæological Institute have handsomely recompensed. All of the d plan of the Temple of Athens has disclosed, and it is now put beyond oubt that the longer side of the building ad 13 columns, and not 12. The reing portion of the frieze has been thed, but, unfortunately, time has disastrously with its sculptures. To ge of Pericles must be ascribed the le temple, of the same general plan e older and smaller structure, of calus tufa over which it was built.

PARIS.

Its Extortions, Topics, Delightful Clerks, and Beggars.

Paris is Paris, no matter under what cloud it may rest, writes a correspondent, and just now one escaping from the coffee-colored fog that enwraps John Bull's great city to the brighter air of Paris, can not at first see that Paris is not at its best. But soon the fact is evident, for on almost every house is the notice, "Apartments to let." The hotels and pensions are by no means deserted, but the familiar American with the long purse is not as usual omnipresent. It is a sad experience for the thrifty native who year after year has marked the innocents of the new world for his own. It is almost equally sad for the stray Americans who are here, because they are paying for those who staid at home. How the francs double! Once it was so much for lights and fire. Now there are fine distinctions; 2 francs for a fire and 100 centimes for the heat it is supposed to give but does not. It is really hazardous to stop before a show-window to admire a pretty article. Open flies the door and out pops a voluble madame or a beguiling demoiselle who really can not longer wait for customers within, but who must play "walk into my parlor, said the spider to the fly." Of course it is the cholera scare that has kept many foreigners out of Paris, but how the statement of that fact acts on a Frenchman! He is ready to vow that there is not now, never has been, and never can be any cholera here —the water! There is none purer anywhere, but why need one be so benighted as to drink water when wine is to be had? Tell him that the Americans are all in London, but stand back lest the pieces hit you when the explosion comes. 'London! Why the people there are dying by thousands of small-pox! London, indeed; why, it is a perfect pest-house."

But if the Americans are not in Paris in great force this winter one finds plenty of interesting people from all parts of Europe. Here come students of art and science, musicians and artists of every stamp. Charming little cliques are formed, and the outsider who by good fortune gets among these bright spirits can very well exist a season without intercourse with his own country people. A dozen or more of such clever persons meet often in a certain pretty salon, where goes on much interesting chatter, more good music, and if the Parisian element predominates some dancing. Here comes a young Swede with a wonderful tenor voice, about whom they tell a pretty story. He is the son of a man prominent in his own court circle. He is well educated, amiable, and attractive, but his chief gift is his exquisite voice. When, a few years since, Christine Nilsson sang before the king, she heard this young Swede sing. Delighted with his voice she made his acquaintance, and proposed to open to him a musical career. She has ever since acted toward him as to a son, and he has sung with her over half the world.

French gossip is not amusing just now. It chiefly concerns the latest play, Mme. Hugues' release, and the engagement of the Princess Beatrice. It is amusing to hear the hot discussions that still go on over the murder trial. The whole affair was so thoroughly French, and yet there are plenty of people here who call a murder a murder, and neither qualify it nor make a heroine out of the murderess. Still more of the Parisians are ready to exclaim with Virginius: "There is no way but this," and a few are equally inspired to call Mme. Clovis Hugues "mine own dear little girl," although in this case she is the slayer and not the slain.

As to the Princess Beatrice everybody is happily agreed. It will be such a relief from the harrowing monotony of the last fifteen years if some time we may be able to take up an English paper and read the thrilling news that her "majesty rode out this afternoon accompanied by somebody else than 'the Princess Beatrice.'"

The shops now look almost exactly as do those of New York at this season. The great bazaars like the Bon Marche and Le Printemps have just the air of Macy's and other shops along Sixth avenue after New Year's. There tons of the same slightly, clinging bits of finery, miles of variegated ribbon in remnants, stacks of Japanese knick knacks, and shop-worn kid gloves. No end of these things which a Frenchman struggling after an English adjective, as he described to me, as looking very "tired." The system in regard to the clerks strikes an American as peculiar. There does not seem to be half as many to the average number of customers as there would be with us, yet when one buys an article the clerk leaves his place and goes with the buyer to the cashier's desk to see the purchase paid for, wrapped up and given back or sent But oh! such enticing creatures as these French clerks are. You would think Paris paved with blarney stones. They have no stereotyped talk about their goods being "warranted to wash," or so much "a yard." They waive the price question at first as being a trivial matter, and such eloquence as they spend is on the poetry of the silk or satin, so to speak. I went lately to buy a simple gown, never expecting it to be made a really soul-stirring experience, but the gentleman in charge of the cloth struck such attitudes—went off into such raptures; this piece was ravishing, that was "delicious." I grew confused as to whether I was going to eat a salad or was attending an opera. Then I collected my wits to find him in imagination making up my entrancing robe and finishing it off in three different ways—for street, for dinner, or as a "peignoir." The qualities pointed out to me as latent in that one dress fill me even now with amazement. I never bought so much in my life before for the same amount of money.

I have seen more beggars in the streets of Paris this season than I have formerly seen in any city of Italy. In a few minutes' walk on any of the thoroughfares one meets half-paralyzed men and women, cripples hobbling or crawling over the pavement, blind and aged people cowering in corridors or by the church doors. Many of them look like skilful members of the profession—some gaunt and wretched,—are not importunate, while not a few seem ready for a riot or revolution. Troops of gamins congregate about the railway stations and tease for sous or bits of travellers' luncheons. The little ones throw kisses or stand on their heads and deport themselves like dirty, demoralized cupids—being almost as superficially clad as the last named order of animal. Almost universally they form a great company, headed by a great, lazy sort of a fellow, who leans against a convenient wall. To him the smaller boys bring every prize, from a coffee to a stale biscuit. If the latter is very stale he rejects it, and the little ones gleefully devour the spoil, every one getting a fair morsel. I saw one little fellow—a veritable Tiny Tim—seize his bit of bun, carry it eagerly to his mouth, and then stop to look down into the face of his lean, expectant dog—the dog who got his share by also looking. One comes in contact with so many French people of so many different minds in regard to national matters that one can readily imagine all the old political troubles in time repeating themselves, with modern variations, of course. The so-called meeting of operatives out of work held on Sunday afternoons have been extremely lively, to say the least. At one session the anarchists broke up chairs and tables for weapons, while yelling, shrieking men tried to drown the voices of would be leaders in the revolutionary agitation.

Cyrus Sholter's Endurance.

A young man named Cyrus Sholter, says a Pittston, Pa., telegram to the New York Sun, started to go from White Haven, in the lower part of this country, to Blakeslee, ten miles distant, on foot. It was late in the afternoon, and the thermometer stood nearly at zero. The Tobyhanna creek, a large stream, crosses the road he took a mile from Blakeslee, and there is no bridge there. When Sholter reached the creek it was dark. He found the sides of the stream frozen for a distance of ten feet, but the current was so rapid in the middle that the water had not frozen, leaving a space twenty feet wide, over which there was no way to pass. The house to which Sholter was going was only three-quarters of a mile ahead, but there was no house nearer than seven miles on the side of the creek where he was.

After following up and down the creek for some distance in hope of finding a spot where he might cross, and finding none as favorable to him as the place at the road, Sholter resolved to wade the open space. He sat down on the edge of the ice and let his legs down in the water, but when the water was above his knee and no bottom reached, he was afraid that the creek was too deep to wade, and he made up his mind to make his way through the woods to the turnpike and cross on the bridge spanning the creek at a point six miles distant. His course lay over ground thickly grown with underbrush and briers. After a two hours' struggle through these, in which he travelled but three miles, he came to a large stream emptying into the Tobyhanna, which was also only partially frozen over, and thoroughfare in that direction was made impracticable. Sholter then concluded to go back and find a house that lay six miles down the old road which he had left. He was suffering greatly from the cold, and, although he was footsore and almost exhausted after his difficult tramp, he did not dare to stop and rest, fearing that he would freeze. He tramped for hours in the woods and at last discovered that he was lost. He had wandered away from the creek and had lost his bearings. He kept on, however, knowing that a few miles in any direction would necessarily fetch him out on a road or a clearing. His course must have been a circuitous one, for it was 5 o'clock in the morning when, barely able to drag himself along, he came out on the old road within twenty rods of the spot where he had been stopped by the Tobyhanna creek twelve hours before.

Feeling that he could not possibly travel much further, and that even a few minutes' rest might be fatal to him, Sholter determined to take his chances in wading the swift current between the two shores of ice, and plunged in. The water came up to his neck when his feet touched the bottom. The water was so swift that he was carried a hundred feet down the stream before he got over. The cold water seemed to warm him, he said, and he drew himself out of it reluctantly. When he reached the opposite side of the stream he made all haste possible for the house where he was going, but he had not made one-quarter of the distance before his wet clothes were incased in an armor of ice. When he finally found himself safe at his destination it was with the greatest difficulty that he could make his way in his stiffening garments. His ears, hands, and feet were badly frost-bitten, but the report from him yesterday was that he would suffer no serious injury from his terrible night's experience.

For removing paint from iron a mixture of one pound of lime to four pounds of potash and six quarts of water has been recommended as most efficient; other proportions of the same materials do not do so well.

CRUSHED BY HER APPETITE.

The Downfall and Death of a Beautiful Woman.

A woman who belonged to one of the best families in Philadelphia died in a wretched frame house on Kaighn's avenue, Camden, N.J., at an early hour this morning, from the effects of an assault on her by William Fisher and John Burley, two young negroes, on the 14th of January The woman was once the handsome and accomplished wife of ex-Judge Woodward, and moved in the best society. She became addicted to drink, and her downfall was rapid and terrible. Her friends for a long time tried to reclaim her, but at last were compelled to abandon her, though they fixed upon her an income sufficient to maintain her in comfort. After she was given up by her relatives she became utterly abandoned, and associated with the vilest characters and was continually under the influence of liquor. Some years ago she moved to Camden to the house where she died, and her furniture and clothing attracted much attention in that neighborhood by their expensive quality. But she died in the midst of filth and rags.

Early on the evening of Jan. 14, the residents of the neighborhood heard screams in Mrs. Woodward's residence, and upon breaking into the house found the unfortunate woman, bound and gagged, lying in a pool of blood. Fisher and Burley were arrested for the assault, and the latter, having turned state's evidence, the men were convicted and sentenced by Judge Reed to six and five years, respectively, in the state prison. The death of Mrs. Woodward was caused, beyond a doubt, by the brutal kicks and blows which she received at the hands of these negroes, and from which she had been suffering ever since the attack. Dr. Willis, the physician who has been attending her, says her death was the result of these injuries, and refuses to give a certificate of death until a post-mortem examination is made. She sent a message to H. S. Scovel, Esq., to come to her house and write her will. Thinking it one of her many whims, Mr. Scovel did not go. About 3 o'clock in the morning the woman spoke her last words, and at 7:45 o'clock she died.

Feathered Farmers and Thieves.

Speaking of the prominent professions, there are at least two of them—farmer and thief—represented among the birds. They destroy countless millions of insects, and this well-known fact, of which everybody is so tired, contributes more toward the production of supplies than all the work done by farmers. It is known that the birds all over the world eat more insects in one day than all the human inhabitants could count in a year, and if they were all to die the world would come to an end, for so fast do insects multiply than one season would pass and the next would not find a leaf, bud, blade of grass, or other living thing on the face of the globe. The change would be as though the sun had ceased shining and perpetual winter enwrapped the earth. This is what is meant by the remark that birds eat a great number of bugs.

As for thieves, there are plenty of them among the feathered class. They steal chickens, pull up corn and wheat, steal bright-colored ribbons, and an occasional piece of sparkling jewelry left carelessly near an open window; but, after all, that is no worse than members of our own race do, and while the human thief makes no reparation, the bird-thief helps to keep the earth from being depopulated; so what matters a chick or two or a diamond ring which is of no use to the rest of the world? It is a curious thing to see the varieties of disposition and character displayed by them; the quiet, shy, bashful thrush; the saucy, impudent wren; the sly, prying bluejay; the boldness of the hawk, or proud, warlike bearing of a game-cock.

The English sparrow, what a queer fellow he is—a foreigner who is so perfectly at home here that one would think him the only native bird. He is going to be comfortable in spite of all opposition. He insists upon it. If you don't like it you can lump it. The sparrow is one of the three birds which do not belong here. He was brought to this country fifteen years ago, during a craze which made people fancy that a seed eating bird would rid us of insect pests. This was done against the advice of well-informed persons, and now the invincible little bird has overrun the entire country, and can laugh at legislatures and ornithological societies.

A Warning to Poets.

"Officer, you say this man was drunk on the street, whooping and using slang and quoting bad poetry to the passers-by?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ten days."

"But, yer Honor, I'm a poet, and I don't want to be sent up."

"A poet?"

"Yes, sir. I'm the boss poet of this country, I am. My works have the largest circulation. Everybody, heeled or broke, tony or way-down, has my poetry in his house."

"What do you write?"

"Yer Honor, I'm the gentleman what gits up the poetry on the comic valentines for a big publishing house."

"Oh, you are. Well, that alters the case. Did I say ten days? We'll call it six months."

Dry, pure air, says M. D. Macaluso, has no action upon mercury. Watery vapor, when alone, has also no action upon pure mercury; but moist air will effect the oxidation of this metal.

NEWS NOTES.

The revised edition of the old Testament will be published at Easter.

Herbert Gladstone will represent the public-works office in the commons and Lord Roseberry in the lords.

Mme. Charlotte H. Sainton Dolby, the eminent contralto singer, is dead. She was born in London in 1821.

Sir Henry Gordon, brother of Gen. Gordon, intends to collect and publish the hero's letters and writings.

Prince Ferdinand Colonna and his wife are going to Rome, where a reception is to be tendered them at court.

The ice yacht Zigzag, owned by Mr. Higginson, made ten miles on the river below Poughkeepsie on Saturday in nine minutes.

District Inspector Alma Smith, of the Dublin police force, has been appointed in command of the new dynamite detective force in London.

A canister filled with a substance supposed to be dynamite, and a partly burned fuse attached, was found lately near the magistrates' room at the Woolwich police court.

During the funeral of Jules Valles, in Paris, thieves entered the premises of Gabriel, the jeweler in the Avenue de l'Opera, and stole jewels valued at 800,000 francs.

The steamer Westernland, of the Red Star line, which was in a collision last Sunday, has put into Plymouth. After completing repairs she will sail for New York Feb. 21.

Cincinnati has under discussion the building of an elevated belt railroad around the city, the length of which will be seventeen miles, and the estimated cost $5,000,000.

The pope is mourning the death of Cardinal MacCabe. His holiness refused to see Michael Davitt. It is stated that he fears England would deem an audience with Davitt, under the present circumstances, an unfriendly act.

While the barns of Mrs. T. J. Fulton, of Bethlehem, N. Y., were on fire lately, Georgia Fulton, her daughter, entered the building and untied the halters of seventeen horses and saved them from the flames. Each horse was led out singly and the task would have been a difficult one even for an experienced horseman.

William Ballou, who went to the Idaho mines in 1863, and from whom nothing has been heard for 19 years, returned home to Springfield a few days since with sufficient wealth to keep his family in good circumstances He was supposed to have been dead, and his wife long ago obtained a divorce on the ground of desertion. He had heard she was married again, and so never made himself known.

The last of the prisoners taken during the Franco-German war have just left Germany. Some Turcos, who, during their imprisonment, had killed a keeper by whom they had been badly used, and who, in consequence, had been condemned to imprisonment in a fortress, reached Cologne the other day from Wesel. They were dressed in new uniforms, which had been sent to them by the French Government.

As a miner entered one of the breasts of the Hillman Vein coal mine with a naked lamp, on Tuesday last, an explosion took place, spreading into the gangways and other parts of the mine. A large number of miners were at work, a number of whom were seriously injured, and one, James Solomon, was killed. The wounded are Daniel Richards, thigh broken; John O'Donnell, arm broken; Harry Greibel, Harry Dunston, William Eustice, Harry Jenkins, William Reed, Thomas D. Jones, Thomas S. Jones, and John Williams, who were all severely burned.

The London News has an account, which it says is authentic, of the recent outbreak in Corea. The King, finding himself threatened with personal danger, applied for assistance to the Japanese Minister. The Minister brought 150 Japanese soldiers into the palace. Two days after this the Chinese and rebels opened an attack upon the palace. The Japanese fought bravely in defence of the palace, but they were at last overwhelmed by sheer force of numbers. The royal family in trying to escape were taken prisoners. The Japanese Minister then retired to Samulpo, the Japanese colony. The whole trouble was caused by the Chinese joining the rebels.

A string of fine snipe hung outside the kitchen door of a Chico Valley sportsman. A cat tried to reach them, but could not. She went away, but soon returned with another cat, and, standing upon his shoulders, they were soon enjoying a genuine game dinner.

The discovery of the action of the white globules of the blood in inflammatory complaints have been attributed by M. A. Hovarth (not to Conheim) but to Dutrochet, who, as far back as 1824, accurately described the migration of the sanguine globules and their passage into the organic tissues.

Steel instead of wooden supports have been introduced in collieries. Large sections of channel steel are used for roof beams in pit workings, and these are supported by steel props. Steel beams and props are more costly than those of wood, but the increased outlay is supposed to be more than counterbalanced by the fact that they can be easily removed uninjured for future use, and by the further advantage that their comparative lightness permits of a better working headway than is possible with the present cumbrous wooden timbering.
